Just One Cake of Camay Brings Softer, Smoother Skin!

Like a dream come true, your complexion is clearer, fresher—with your very first cake of Camay! Yes, new loveliness can be yours when you change from careless cleansing to the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested Camay's daring beauty promise under exact clinical conditions—on scores of complexions. And these doctors reported that woman after woman—using just one cake of Camay—had softer, smoother, younger-looking skin!

NOTES ON THE ROMANCE OF THE GREERS

Shell-hunting on the golden Florida sands, Russ wooed and won lovely, blue-eyed Gloria. Her complexion is fair as the skies that smiled down on their romance. "Camay is my standby for skin care," Gloria discloses, "since my very first cake of Camay brought out a real sparkle in my complexion!"

Gay goings-on at the Greers'! And the fresh beauty of this charming hostess rouses applause. "Russ often compliments my complexion—thanks to mild Camay care!" So Gloria promises, "to keep my skin winning praises, I'll stay on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet."

You can make your skin lovelier, too! Every Camay wrapper tells you how.
"What're you looking at, Sis?"

GIRL: Gal can dream, can't she? Look at engagement rings, can't she?

CUPID: Sure. But what's the good when she looks like you?

GIRL: Why you little—! Listen, I may be a plain girl—

CUPID: But, Baby, you wouldn't look it if you'd just sparkle at people once in a while. Smile at 'em. Gleam!

GIRL: With my dull teeth, I should gleam? I brush 'em but all I get is no gleam. And lately, "pink tooth brush."

CUPID: And your dentist . . . ?

GIRL: What dentist?

CUPID: What dentist? Don't you know that "pink" is a warning to see your dentist? He may find today's soft foods are robbing your gums of exercise and suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

GIRL: Pygmy, are you talking about my dentist, my smile, or what?

CUPID: The works, Sis. Because a sparkling smile depends largely on healthy gums. And Ipana is specially designed, with massage, to help your gums. Massage a little extra Ipana on your gums when you brush your teeth and you're on the way to a sparkling smile . . . one that'll put a gleam in the eye of every lad who sees you!

Last month, we said "The Green Years" was a wonderful motion picture.

We used such words as "magnificent" about the M-G-M picturization of A. J. Cronin's brilliant new book. (Mr. Cronin, you will remember, also authored "The Citadel" and "The Keys of the Kingdom").

And, if we were the crowing kind, this month we'd be saying: "Wetoldyou so!"

Because our claims have been confirmed by the most show-wise audience you could possibly get together.

Kate Smith says "The Green Years" is a wonderful motion picture. Frank Sinatra says so. Judy Garland says so. Louella Parsons says so.

Our congratulations to Director Victor Saville and Producer Leon Gordon. To a perfect supporting cast: Hume Cronyn, Gladys Cooper, Dean Stockwell, Richard Haydn, Scena Royle and Jessica Tandy. To those fine screenplay writers, Robert Ardrey and Sonya Levin.

They all contributed so much toward making "The Green Years" what it is:

Next month, we'll tell you all about "Easy To Wed." If we may go into our role of oracle again, it's great—and we're telling you so. How could it miss with Van Johnson (singing and dancing!), lovely Esther Williams, gorgeous Lucille Ball, and uproarious Keenan Wynn? Technicolor, too. Mmmmm!

New York News: Lucky Cal to find himself in New York at the time his good friend Lana Turner arrived from South America. Together we did the shows, the taverns and yep, we even got dragged into an afternoon shopping spree, with the autograph hounds and Cal going around like waltzing mice. Funny thing about those New York fans, too; They're always the same ones who, by this time, must have two dozen Turner signatures and still aren't satisfied.

Frankie Sinatra came over to our table at Toots Shor's one evening to say hello. Wayne Morris, minus his pretty Pat, waved to us in the Cub room of the Stork Club. We greeted Ray and Mel Milland at the party given by Myron McCormick who is so good in "State of the Union." The Millands told us all about their plan to visit South America, with Cal smiling to himself at Ray's naive suggestion that no one would really know they were there. Oh, no? And with that newly won Oscar fresh in the minds of the Latins?

We supped one night at "21" at the table next to the Ray Bolgers. Seems to Cal too little has been said about the sixteen years of happily married life these two have shared. And here's a bit of news for you. If Ray, who is a dancing (Continued on page 6)

Parties! Parties! This past month might well be described as Hollywood’s field day for photographers! What parties, openings and general goings on! Of course, Cal doesn’t think the town will ever get over that lavish dinner-dance that Cary Grant, Jimmy Stewart, Eddie Duchin and Johnny McLain (the “Cads”) teamed together to give at the old Clover Club, which they re-opened for the event. And what a glamorous event it was. Starting out with a gorgeous buffet-dinner; a wonderful, hot band playing for every movie star you could name to traipse around a roomy dance floor—and winding up at seven-thirty in the morning with Bing Crosby, Hoagy Carmichael, Duchin and others taking their turn at the piano and singing departments. It was the same night that Virginia Cherrill (now Lady Jersey) returned to Hollywood after several years in England—and everyone thought she and Cary would resume with that “old feeling.” But Cary was devotion itself to Betty Hensel all that evening. Rita Hayworth, in a simple, very low-cut slinky dress was with Jimmy Stewart. The most avid dancers at the ball were Ingrid Bergman and her husband, Peter Lindstrom—they even jitterbugged together and seemed to have such fun. But the rumba that Ida Lupino and Bing put on together was really something.

Then there was the very gala opening of the “Ziegfeld Follies” right in the heart of Hollywood (for a change!) and the lens boys had fun snapping so much beauty. And (Continued on page 10)

Every studio, plus hordes of agents, is trying to sign him—and wherever you go his name is sure to pop up over the lunch or dinner table. He will definitely be coming to Hollywood in the fall—and, of course, has his pick of offers.

Hollywood Scene: Children with their nurses were playing on the green lawns of Roxbury Park in Beverly Hills just a few blocks from Cal's door. On the other side of the park a baseball game was in progress. A tall, thin man was about to come up to bat when a little tow-headed girl trudged over dragging a bat behind her.

"Here, Daddy," she exclaimed proudly. "Thank you, dear," he said and smiled at the pretty blonde in the front row bleachers who went into screams of encouragement when the thin man hit the ball for a two-bagger.

When the game was over, the batter, the pretty girl and the little towhead climbed into a car and drove away.

"Who was that?" a tourist asked.

"That! Oh that was Harry James, his wife Betty Grable and little daughter Victoria. They're here every Sunday," we told him.

"Well, I'll be doggoned," said the tourist, shaking his head.

Our Mr. Goldwyn: At a buffet dinner party recently Mr. Sam Goldwyn approached blonde June Haver with a smile. "Why, Miss Grable," he beamed, "you look radiant tonight. And by the way, tell that little partner of yours in 'The Dolly Sisters' she did a good job."

"Why can't these young actresses get names right?" Mr. Goldwyn complained to a friend, "Betty doesn't even know me from David Selznick."

Observations: Artie Shaw and Ava Gardner aren't behaving like honey-mooers—but are expected to straighten things out... Bob Hutton is being very devoted to June Haver—even though he stepped out with Lana Turner shortly after she got back... Jane Greer is getting much attention from Howard Hughes who doesn't like publicity about that sort of thing. But Cal has seen them together too many times not to catch on... Joe Cotten has departed for England to co-star with Margaret Sullavan in "The Voice of the Turtle" on the stage there... Martha Vickers and Jack Buetel (wonder if he'll ever live "The Outlaw" down?) are sort of steady dating these eves... The Joan Crawford-Bette Davis feud blew sky high when the two of them posed together for a twin magazine layout... Looks as if Madman Muntz, the Zany and rich auto dealer, is a cinch to be Mr. Three for Lois Andrews.

Hard Luck, Freddie: From the moment he landed in Hollywood, Freddie Bartholomew has known only grief and hard luck. Any success he attained on the screen has been counterbalanced by a series of law suits instituted by his parents in England against his faithful Aunt Cissie who brought the lad from England to play the boy David in M-G-M's "David Copperfield." After the endless years of suing (Continued on page 16)

(Continued from page 14) and counter suing, Freddie seemed to attain a measure of peace when suddenly he was plunged into trouble again—his car and one driven by a friend of Joe E. Brown's collided in Beverly Hills and for weeks and months Joe's daughter fought for her life in a hospital. Freddie was plunged into gloom and sorrow despite the fact he was exonerated of blame.

And now Freddie at twenty-two is married to a twice-married older woman—and against Aunt Cissie's wishes. He promised her they'd wait, but impulsively he and Maely Daniele, his press agent, changed their minds and eloped to Las Vegas. Hollywood hopes Freddie and Aunt Cissie will patch it up. They've been through so much together.

Amber notes: "Forever Amber" seems to be taking forever in getting under way. Now it's postponed for a few months—and when it's again under way there'll be a new Amber because the studio felt Peggy Cummins didn't have the Amber note. Not that Twentieth are dropping the innocent-faced, little blonde beauty. They're not. She's going into "Bob, Son of Battle." Bosses know they've found real talent in the young lady and intend using her where she'll show to best advantage.

Peggy's made a lot of friends since she's been on the lot. In the publicity department they swear by the little English girl who knows everyone by name. "Hello, Johnnie, "Hello, Nat," she'll call. And those friends are pulling for her good luck in the next venture.

A Line or Two: Tom Drake and John Dall have hair alike—a protruding bang like Alvin in the Blondie comic strip . . . Off the screen, Mark Stevens is a mild, self-effacing chap. On screen, his is the perfect marriage of celluloid and personality. How it happens no one knows . . . Gregory Peck is a favorite among the Latin Americans, who can't understand the popularity of Van Johnson . . . Diana Lynn is still wearing Henry Wilson's ring on her finger but in her heart she wears the symbol of another beau . . . Jack Benny, the proud godfather of Bob Cummings's baby boy, presented his godchild with a miniature violin that does not automatically play "Love in Bloom" as reported.

Van and Frankie: Cal was about to attack his steak at a local bistro when who strolled over to our table but Frank Sinatra in for a quick broadcast.

"Guess who chaperoned Van Johnson on that San Francisco junket?" he grinned. "Who?" we asked. "I did," said Frankie. "You should have seen me trying to get Van past the boxers. Thought he'd get killed. And you had to have freckles yet," I told him.

Cal allowed as how Frankie hadn't exactly passed unnoticed.

The Face in Photoplay: Here’s a beautiful surprise. Anita Colby is to be Photoplay’s new Beauty Editor. Naturally such good news called for a celebration, so we welcomed Anita with a cocktail party. From five to seven o’clock—and thereafter—one hundred guests, including Carole Landis and Bonita Granville, toasted the guest of honor.

Anita, whose lovely beauty made her the most famous model in the beauty and fashion world and labeled her “The Face,” (over which she makes a wry face) has a simple and direct approach to all subjects which work together to make a woman beautiful and we believe our readers will be inspired and excited—as well as benefited by the things she has to suggest. She’ll be giving you the same advice she gives such glamorous Selznick stars as Ingrid Bergman, Jennifer Jones and Shirley Temple. You’ll be seeing her soon.

Flynn and Nora: Hollywood is enchanted with the very endearing spectacle of Errol Flynn falling more and more in love with his wife, Nora, day by day. Nora has behaved so beautifully. She has carried herself with such dignity and integrity throughout their marriage that the town is happy for her sake that Errol is at last beginning to appreciate his lovely wife. Flynn even tossed a surprise party for Nora on her twenty-second birthday. He took such pains to make it really a surprise that Nora turned up in slacks with no inkling that a party had been planned for her. High spot of the evening was when their darling fourteen-months-old daughter, Dierdre, appeared with her grandparents.

Home on the Range: When George Montgomery and Dinah Shore sold their home and bought a six-thousand-acre ranch in Encino, their troubles really began. Longing for the wide open spaces, they found themselves with a two-room-plus-kitchenette shack on the ranch. That was all right, even though their oversized bed wouldn't fit into the bedroom, and neither the stove nor the refrigerator would fit into the kitchenette. They'd just move their belongings into the barn and sleep there.

"But it got too cold in the barn," says George, "so we moved the bed into the living room and put the refrigerator in the bedroom. We couldn't find room for the stove, so we got a little two-burner for the kitchenette."

Thereupon Dinah's sister and brother-in-law, with their two children, joined the household until they could find a home. Then George's nephew, just out of the Navy, moved in with them too. This made matters a little complicated.

So they put the bed back in the barn and moved seven cots into the living room, thereby neatly filling up all the available space. So now George has to get up an hour earlier than usual so he can shower and shave before the children awake. Dinah has to get up at the crack of dawn in order to prepare breakfast for George and the children. No one can help her with this chore because there's just room for one in the kitchenette.

Spur-of-the-Moment Party: It was the big gathering at the Bing Crosbys. Now you know the Crosbys never throw a party. It's been years! But Dixie was fresh out of the hospital and feeling fine again and suddenly the two of them just up and invited about a hundred and fifty people over to the house—black ties, formal gowns and all the trimmings. Bing furnished a lot of the trimmings by singing for hours on end—and no one on earth is going to kick about that! And guess who came together! Jimmy Stewart and Betty Hensel—and now once more her romance with Cary Grant is supposed to be on ice. Or could be a guy parking his gal with a pal while he takes off for England.

How can a brunette become more beautiful? Here's how: apply Rose Brunette, an exciting new "Flower-fresh" shade of Cashmere Bouquet Face Powder. A joyous shade to brighten your brunette coloring. And do see how this smooth, smooth face powder masks your skin with a silk-like finish. It veils tiny blemishes, clings for hours on end. There are other "Flower-fresh" shades of Cashmere Bouquet to complement every complexion.

It's shining bright! It's beautifully behaved! It's Drene-lovely hair! Yes, you bring out all the natural beauty of your hair, all its alluring highlights... when you use Drene with Hair Conditioning action.

"I always use Drene," says glamorous fashion model and Cover Girl Lisa Fonssagrives, "because it reveals far more sheen than any soap or soap shampoo." As much as 33 percent more lustre! Drene is not a soap shampoo. It never leaves any dulling film on your hair as all soaps do. And the very first time you use Drene, you completely remove unsightly dandruff.

Here you see Lisa at the shore with her gleaming hair in a practical, fetching top-knot. Below she shows you another favorite hair-do you can try at home or ask your beauty shop to do.

Your hair is far silkier, smoother and easier to manage when you use the wonderful improved Drene with Hair Conditioning action. No other shampoo leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage.

At the Summer Playhouse, you're the evening's star with lovely, lustrous hair. "This dramatic hair-do is so easy to fix," Lisa says, "right after shampooing with Drene with Hair Conditioning action." A reliable guide to recent pictures. One check means good; two checks, very good; three checks, outstanding.

✓✓ To Each His Own (Paramount)

This overlong tale of frustrated mother-love frustrated us, too, because we couldn't help tiring of poor Olivia de Havilland's vain attempts to catch glimpses, a few times a year, of her son, whom she nobly gave up to keep him free from the taint of illegitimacy.

During World War I, Olivia falls completely in love with a handsome young flier with whom she spends only a brief but ecstatic few hours.

The picture may be commended for its forthright and sympathetic portrayal of the facts leading to Olivia's facing the tragic necessity for her baby to be reared by a friend, excellently played by Mary Anderson, who marries Olivia's ex-suitor, Phillip Terry.

The picture introduces John Lund as the doomed flier, who imparts to his brief appearance on the screen a living vitality and a deep understanding of the cynical, war-weary lad.

Roland Culver as the English lord, Griff Barnett as Olivia's father, Bill Goodwin as her persistent suitor and Victoria Horne as the nurse who befriends her are all excellently cast. Olivia's "ageing" is done to absolute perfection.

Your Reviewer Says: Women will love this tear-jerker.

✓✓ The Green Years (M-G-M)

M-G-M, A. J. Cronin and a multi-million budget are blended in a long and lavish dramatization of the novel about a middle-class Scotch family into whose penny-pinched bosom is thrust a young grandson from despised Ireland.

Charles Coburn has the role of the year as the great grandfather with a taste for tall tales and Scotland's native brew. Tom Drake has for the first time as the grown lad been given a role that utilizes his acting skill as well as the boyish charm that won him his first popularity. The many others in the cast perform with equal credibility, mixing warmth, humor and pathos skillfully.

Deserving of special note are Dean Stockwell, who plays Robert Shannon as a child, Hume Cronyn as Papa Leckie and Richard Haydn in the role of the schoolmaster.

If the film, advertised by its studio as "a great motion picture," suffers a lack, it is in the quality of the story that is told. The drama has an obviousness not usually found in Cronin novels and an artificiality in the contrived climax. So loaded is the picture with delightful moments along the way, however, that audiences will spontaneously applaud at the curtain.

More accurate perhaps than the studio's advertising claim might be the forthright claim that here is a satisfying film for all the family, with poignant moments and memorable acting.

Your Reviewer Says: A picture you won't want to miss.

✓ Specter of the Rose (Republic)

This strange death-dealing love story of the ballet has a number of original touches. It will either move you deeply or leave you completely cold.

Little ballerina Viola Essen's whole being is absorbed in the half-mad genius, Ivan Kirov. He is rightly suspected of having murdered his first wife, Nina, who was his dancing partner in the "Specter of the Rose" ballet. Viola's once famous but aged ballet teacher, played superbly by Judith Anderson, tries to save her protegee from a tragic fate and to save at the same time Kirov's genius from relentless stalking by the police.

When the two dancers do marry, Viola's determined devotion to Kirov and his own will to remain sane overcome his temporary fits of madness and they both star in triumph in a new ballet, financed by Michael Chekhov. But Kirov's murderer nature is too powerful a force to be conquered for long.

Ben Hecht who wrote, produced and directed the film has brought two new vivid personalities to the screen in the ballet stars. Lionel Standler plays a poet also in love with Viola, and Chekhov's role of the impresario is full of colorful whimsy. The musical score is powerful.

"There she was waiting at the church!"

THERE she was waiting at the church... because the cutest boy of the neighborhood playing "groom" to her "bride"-walked out on her... and told her why.

Lucky little Edna—to learn so young what some people never realize at all—that halitosis (unpleasant breath) is a fault not easy to pardon. It was a lesson she never forgot. Later in life, attractive and sought-after, Listerine Antiseptic was a "must" before every date.

How is Your Breath?
Can you be sure that at this very moment your breath is sweet and agreeable? You can't always tell!

Why take chances... why risk offending others needlessly when Listerine Antiseptic so often offers such an easy, delightful precaution?

Simply rinse your mouth with it morning and night and especially before any appointment where you want to be at your best. Almost at once your breath is fresher, sweeter... less likely to offend.

While sometimes systemic, most cases of unpleasant breath, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles on teeth, gum and mouth surfaces.

Lucky for you, Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts this fermentation, then overcomes the odors it causes.

Never, never omit Listerine Antiseptic; it's part of your passport to popularity. Lambert Pharmacal Co.

Light, so frothy, so appetizing is this flirty little box-lunch affair all tied up with blue-ribbon performances, that one feels a trifle undernourished when it's all over. It's the old "leave 'em wanting more" philosophy, we suppose, and for our money they could have eliminated the slow draggy middle and given us more detail at the end. Being a nosey kind of movie-goer, we like to know what eventually happened to everyone and why.

Claudette Colbert, the successful but stuffy author who experiences all sorts of revolutionary emotional upheavals on her way to Hollywood, is so delightful she practically shakes a scolding finger at the thread-thin yarn for not providing a story equal to her abilities. But golly, we'd love to know how Miss Colbert manages to look so neat and Vogue-ish after days of the hardest travel through rain, in haystacks, in jails and over desert roads. It's a plain caution, that's what it is.

John Wayne as the Marine captain whom

Miss Colbert decides to cast in the screen version of her book has never been more natural, more charming or better cast.

He's so darned right for the role somehow. His pal, Don DeFore, another Marine flirter who plays cupid between the principals, is an ingratiating chap who also fits his role the way he fits into that handsome uniform, and that's good.

Interesting people—such as Cary Grant, Louella Parsons and Jack Benny, playing themselves, flit briefly through the story lending a note of authenticity to the Hollywood background.

Anne Triola is the "beetle" whose comedy routine wasn't too clearly defined, somehow, but who could be very funny, her acting leaves something to be desired.

Josephine Hutchinson as Elizabeth, the lovely one, turns in a swell bit. Fritz Kortner, the fortuneteller villain, is a menacing old rascal and Margo Woode, his stooge, a naughty girl indeed. Richard Conte is always good and is good again, but why was Lloyd Nolan wasted as a detective when he should be pitching in the big league?

Your Reviewer Says: Better than average mystery thriller.

✓ Her Kind of Man (Warners)

WITH a little more effort, time and cash, Warners could have turned this frustrated little B into a happily contented A. The talent is there—Dane Clark, Zachary Scott, George Tobias and Faye Emerson, plus two newcomers, Janis Paige and Harry Lewis. Miss Paige has a pleasantly appealing singing voice but, oh, how she can't act yet. Given time and practice, she'll undoubtedly blossom into a fine little performer, but the burden of that leading role fell too heavily upon her. Lewis, the Candy of the tale, comes out a little better, but then the requirements aren't too heavy.

The story is familiar but unconvincing. Fact is, nobody really cares what happens to whom. Zachary, a scamp of the first order, seems to inspire an unreasonable sort of love within Miss Paige who is led by its chains into all sorts of turmoil. Dane is the Broadway columnist who loves her despite it all. George Tobias in a straight role and Faye Emerson as his wife just sort of wander around getting shot and things. Too bad, too, when the possibilities for better entertainment are there.

Your Reviewer Says: Well, okay, but no repeats, please.

Young and Gay" skips merrily through more adventures of two young ladies for whom the trellis-bars of a sedate finishing school do not a prison make. Eager to foster their romances with Bill Edwards and James Brown, the girls pick on Brian Donlevy, a bootlegger, to pretend he's their chaperoning uncle and help them get their men. After a series of hilarious trials and errors, they wind up in Greenwich Village, determined to gain recognition on the stage, with Donlevy commandeering his raucous buddies as their only boosters.

Diana and Gail are disarmingly charming as the conspirators, and Donlevy's portrayal as the comic, captivated crook is excellent. Billy De Wolfe as a wacky artist inhabitant of Greenwich shines in some funny scenes. Lending strong support are Sharon Douglas, William Demarest, Sara Haden and Mikhail Rasumny. The atmosphere of the years-ago days is beautifully infectious.

Your Reviewer Says: It's an all-family picture.

Behind the Mask (Monogram)

WHO'S to say whether this comes out a murder yarn or a comedy? With both factions trying hard, it's obviously intended to be both, but the fine hand that mixes the two is conspicuously missing. It's another of the Shadow series, with Kane Richmond as the playboy detective who dons a mask and becomes the ubiquitous Shadow, bailing police and criminals alike on a moment's provocation.

This time he and his fiancée, Barbara Reed, are out to find the killer of a blackmailing columnist. Before they're through, they uncover a few more rackets, too, with the help of George Chandler and Dorothea Kent, who only serve to confuse the issue with their shenanigans.

Your Reviewer Says: This holds a dummy hand.
Abe,

The Understudy

The then and now of two good friends

By

Jean Pierre Aumont

Jean Pierre Aumont, star of “Heartbeat”

My personal future looked black, indeed, when I landed in New York in 1941. I had been fighting with a French tank corps when my country was defeated by the Germans’ overwhelming odds. I refused to stay under Nazi occupation and escaped to America. I could read English but spoke scarcely a word when I finally landed here. Four days after arriving in Manhattan Katharine Cornell offered me a role opposite her in “Rose Burke.”

When I joined the company I was immediately struck by the personality of the assistant stage manager. Oddly, he was also assigned as understudy to Philip Merivale and me. The personalities and appearances of three men could not have been more diametrically different. The understudy was very tall, rangy, looked like pictures I had seen of Lincoln. I nicknamed him “Abe.”

We became friends. He helped me with English and invariably before each performance would whisper to me in the wings, “Don’t say ‘mudder,’” to remind me of my faulty pronunciation of “mother.” Miss Cornell assured me that “Abe” was a brilliant though unknown young actor, so I could never understand why he kept begging me not to get sick. I learned his reason when we reached Detroit in February, 1942, in a snowstorm.

My watch had stopped. I was calmly sitting in the lounge of the hotel when “Abe” came looking for me frantically at 8:15. We started across the icy street; I slipped and fell flat.

“Are you all right?” he pleaded as he pulled me to my feet. “I could never go on in your place. I couldn’t manage a French accent and I have no decent clothes. I own exactly two suits, both only $27.50 when I bought them a year ago, and your suits would be inches too short!”

“Abe” never did play my role nor Merivale’s either before the show closed in Toronto; we never reached New York. I went to Hollywood for a film contract, then in 1943 to Europe to join the Fighting French, never having seen “Abe” again.

Returning to M-G-M late last year I visited the set. There was “Abe,” a star! He saw me, waved, but was unable to leave the scene just then. Before I left I received a note which read, “Do you still say mudder?”

I had not known that in two short years my understudy had become a star. Of course you know him. Gregory Peck.

Tom and Chris Drake had to give up a marriage to hold a friendship

BY SARA HAMILTON

Tom, of "The Green Years," and Chris during time of second try

T was no tragic break-up when Chris and I separated," says Tom Drake, quietly. "Neither of us is hurt or angry. Neither of us carries a torch.

"Rather something good has come of our plan to divorce—a feeling that by the very effort we made to save our marriage we have the right to remain the friends we've always been."

This personal revelation from Tom Drake is startling. For the quiet, attractive lad who has raised such hopes in the Metro bosom is inclined to live his life deep within himself. No matter how bitter his personal or professional disappointments, he has always hidden them beneath a James Thurberish sense of humor which, being at once bewildering and distracting, has protected him against intrusion.

Now, however, he is speaking out with amazing candor.

"We tried, Chris and I, not once, but twice. When we parted the first time and she returned to her mother in New Rochelle, I felt that I was letting marriage, which meant a great deal to me, slip away when it might have succeeded if more effort had been put into it.

"When I told Chris this over the long distance telephone she agreed. So, after a two months' separation period she and her little daughter came home. I shall never forget the day I went to the station to meet them. With my heart hammering in my throat, I determined they never would leave me again while there was any way on earth for Chris and me to make a happy marriage.

"We both tried—to the best of our ability. But at last, with the calmness that comes when you honestly know you've done your best, we accepted the fact that it just was no go for us and never would be."

Over desert and jungle she flew—to South America.
Gala gaieties to celebrate her birthday at Brazil’s mountain castle hotel, Quitandinha

To three million sleepy Los Angeles citizens it was just another late winter’s night, warm and clear. But to the two friends walking under the night skies out to a giant airplane at the Lockheed Air Terminal in Burbank, it was the beginning of the great adventure.

All day they had been packing the wardrobes of princesses into their new airplane luggage; now, dressed in trim new wool suits, they stood looking up at the Pan American World Airways Clipper poised for flight, ready to sweep them off into the starlit sky toward South America and their royal holiday.

Lana Turner caught her breath with pleasure and turned to her companion.

“At last,” she told Sara Hamilton, “I’m going on the vacation I’ve dreamed of for years,” and Sara nodded, thinking of the time she had known Lana, first more formally as writer and associate editor of Photoplay, but now more intimately as the friend with whom Lana had chosen to share the golden days ahead.

“First stop, Mexico City,” Lana said softly. They were aboard now, their ears throbbing with the roar of the plane’s motors as they lifted from the familiar ground of California and swung off through the darkness to the south.

Quietly Lana flicked off the light over her seat and sat looking out at the stars that polka-dotted the window. “Tomorrow?” she asked her dreams and, sleeping, awaited the answer.

As if in reply, the ancient winding streets and colorful architecture of Mexico City were waiting for her arrival the next day. But first there was an astounding ocean of Mexican faces at the airport turned up to the circling plane—and then as they skimmed down for their smooth landing, there was the swelling roar, "Viva Lana!"

For twenty-four hours Mexico City poured out its friendly heart. There were protestations of love for the little white queen, mid Latin dance rhythms and Latin partners—and then it was time to go back to the hotel, lie down for an hour's pretended sleep and out to the airport where the plane waited to soar up and south once more, to Balboa, in the Canal Zone—Balboa, with all its haunting mixture of races and heavy odors of semi-tropical jungles, a Casablanca of the Western Hemisphere. And here again, thousands jammed into the airport to see Lana—all screaming, all shouting, with the Canal Zone police half carrying her through the tidal wave of grasping hands and waving autograph books.

Whereas they had been able to linger only a day in Mexico City, there were forty-eight hours in the Canal Zone before they were flying again, heading now for what was to be their first stop in South America—an emergency one—the small town of Cali in Colombia. Then Lima, Peru, and a whole new world for the asking . . . (Continued on page 101)
Men and more men! These were Lana's most familiar sight in South America. Here she signs autographs at her birthday ball.

A GIRL who can hang two bloody bull's ears on the corners of her mirror and drape the defunct animal's tail artistically between is an artist with stamina.

"Bravo!" said three bullfighters.

Bravo was not the way Miss Williams felt, but international courtesy makes demands. These elegant young toreadors had called at her hotel in Mexico, where she was filming exteriors of "Fiesta," to present the conventional tokens of the bullfighters' highest esteem. That afternoon she had seen them meet the bull, then in full possession of his appendages, and had applauded their grace, art and courage, qualities she strove queasily to emulate as she handled the late bull's remnants.

no sissy. She's a gutty artist. As testimonial of devotion to her husband Ben Gage she made a lamp out of his ancestral cuspidor, precious heirloom from his family's garret. On it she painted petunias which were not what used to be there, though Ben says his ancestors never missed, and you can't prove otherwise now because all tell-tale stains are lovingly buried under Esther's flowers.

Mexico's best bullfighters say Esther is gifted specifically for la fiesta brava, as their national rodeo is known south of the border. Success depends on the hips, they say. You must flip them faster than a hula dancer to elude a bull in a snit. Miss Williams flips hips like a fish. At seventeen she was America's swimming queen. Now she is the First Lady Bullfighter

O. Henry said that Californians are a race of people, they are not merely inhabitants of a state. And Harry Carr added, "A race of gods is being bred here."

If you would like to see young gods and goddesses being spawned to beat the Greeks, trolley out to Muscle Beach by Santa Monica. There at age two Miss Williams's hips made their first impression. Some old beachcombers and figure fanciers swear they saw her rising from the sea at practically 0. Miss Williams herself says she did not ride the breakers in till eight. Whatever the figure, Miss Williams has it. Botticelli's "Venus Arising From The Waves" has nowhere the oompf Esther has everywhere.

Ingrid Bergman

Her sense of humor is hearty, spontaneous...

Fair-minded, democratic, woman with vision... Ingrid starred in "Notorious"
Close-to-the-heart incidents in the life of Hollywood’s ten-strike Bergman of the coral cheeks

"What did we do before Bergman...?"

This singular tribute was uttered by Cary Grant about two weeks after filming started on “Notorious,” the Alfred Hitchcock postwar spy story.

The casting of these two—tall Cary with his chestnut tan, blue-black hair, Ingrid of the full red lips and coral cheeks—was more than a box-office ten-strike; it was sheer inspiration, as it turned out.

For an extraordinary thing happened in the making of this picture; the vehicle that started out to be a typical Hitchcock thriller presently found itself a runaway, irresistibly drawn by the two dominant personalities. What was frankly conceived as an out-and-out spy story suddenly was overwhelmed by the fusion of two dynamic elements. The plot yielded to the love story and gracefully accepted second place. The Pouting Buddha of Bel-Air, shrewd Alfred Hitchcock, quickly readjusted his sights, with the result that the master of mystery is going to astonish Hollywood with his understanding and direction of those gos-samer and violent emotions peculiar to man and woman.

Anyone who has seen it will tell you conservatively that the love scene in “Notorious,” between Ingrid and Cary, “is the greatest since Greta Garbo and Jack Gilbert.” Conservatively, that is.

I can tell you that the scene (which was filmed three months after Cary’s forthright observation) runs close to three-and-one-half minutes on the screen. During the entire scene—their lips never more than an inch apart—they discuss dinner, answer the telephone and walk around the room.

However, I seem to digress.

It was during the second week of “Notorious” and Cary and I were standing offstage watching Ingrid work. Her scene finished, Cary turned to me and said: “She’s wonderful! She works so easily—almost without effort. She gives (Continued on page 115)

GLENN FORD, Marine, had come home from the war. The studio stage, the huge bright lights, the men on the catwalk high overhead, the intent group around the camera, the grease-painted faces—all these things once so familiar now were strange. He was being tested for Bette Davis's leading man in "A Stolen Life." The part called for dignity, a quiet gentlemanly quality, an actor who could look like a New Englander and, in passing, an actor who could act.

Just before they made the test, Bette took Glenn to one side. She might have said she was afraid he wasn't the right type or experienced enough as an actor. Instead she told him:

"I never saw you on the screen. But I've heard you're an excellent actor. It may be you'll look too young to play opposite me. But if not, if we really look all right together, I see no reason why you shouldn't be perfect for the part."

There are not more than two or three actresses in all Hollywood who would have been as honest about their age. Bette, however, in spite of the unalterable fact that she is always doing this sort of thing, brushed it (Continued on page 74)

In the Palms Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel a vivacious young singing star was thrilling invited guests with a golden rendition of “Musetta's Waltz Song” in Italian.

Halfway through the aria Kathryn Grayson forgot her words. She kept repeating variations of la-bta-mo sia-sot-il. Then she mumbled some Italian never heard before or since Caesar. It sounded like a hopped-up helping of spaghetti.

She looked down hurriedly at her studio boss, who was sitting at the front table watching her proudly. She looked at the other important executives in the room. And she looked right into the eyes of a puzzled Italian cello player in the orchestra. Suddenly she remembered the words, finished the aria triumphantly and took her seat amidst a tumult of applause.

Her boss rose to address the audience and paid special tribute to her. “Kathryn,” he said fondly, “tonight you are a great artist!”

The “great artist” all but swallowed her demitasse and ducked out hurriedly when the dinner was over, lest she run into the cellist again.

Later she told her boss what she’d gotten away with and rattled off some pseudo phrases for him. “Oh, Katie,” he said, laughing (Continued on page 106)

Cornel's life has been a series of changes. After his last trip to Europe, in 1931, his father was taken ill and Cornel had to support the family. One of his jobs was selling toys at Macy's.

He had a yen for medicine. In 1933 he enrolled at City College for the medical course, became an expert on human anatomy. He made a three-year course in the record time of two years.

This was only the beginning of his varied activities. Meantime he'd had a whiff of grease paint. One job—bawling over public address system on the stage.

The many talents, the changing moods of Cornel Wilde make him what he is—and explain the reason for his dazzling success. Here he re-enacts for Photoplay the high points of his life. He was born in New York City on October 13, 1915, went with his family to Europe for four years, returned, attended school here. Another trip to Europe followed and for six months he traveled, studied art and learned fencing. Then back to the United States to odd jobs which finally led to Hollywood. As Bruce, in "Forever Amber," he reaches a career high. Cornel's own restlessness will find perfect expression in this role of unresting adventurer and empire builder. Cornel has found his greatest job—that of motion-picture star.

PHOTOLIFE OF CORNEL WILDE

BY LYNN PERKINS
It took some doing but after ten months he persuaded the aspiring actress, Patricia Knight, to elope to Elkton, Maryland.

Broadway called and he faced the uncertainty of following his chosen dream. One day at a drugstore counter he saw a beautiful blonde. When she left the drugstore so did he and pursued her down the street.

At first Hollywood was cold. Times were tough and discouraging. Finally he got a break and went into "Life Begins at 8:30" with Ida Lupino.

Cornel's a family man. His greatest admiration is his lovely wife, Pat Knight, who is to have a career of her own— with Cornel's complete cooperation and enthusiasm. He has great faith in her ability, dating back to the time in their leaner New York days when they played together on the stage. In fact, he would like to make a picture with her and it is quite probable he will since Pat is now under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox too. When Hollywood first took notice of Cornel, they felt he should not play romantic roles. But he has proved his ability in the varied roles he's played. In "The Bandit of Sherwood Forest" he's the swashbuckling son of Robin Hood. In "Leave Her to Heaven" he's the serious young writer. In "Centennial Summer" he's the lover superb. At home Cornel is a family man who pursues his varied hobbies, painting, writing and fencing—who adores little Wendy and beautiful Pat—who looks back darkly on defeat, but smiles with confidence on what's ahead.
Finally the struggle paid off. The Wildes, Pat, Wendy and their pooch Punch, live quietly in their beautiful Canyon home—just the way they dreamed it.

It was as Chopin in "A Song to Remember" that Cornel really made time and movie history.

Photoplay's

Cornel is a versatile young man—among his many talents is writing. These days he's screen-writing the life of Byron, wants to play the lead himself.

A real skill, one he learned in Budapest, is fencing. Was selected for the U. S. Olympic team in 1936. Now he keeps in practice by morning duels with Pat.

Paul Henreid—fenced them out, as do all smart stars with their children
In the dear days—temporarily beyond recall—when house-hunting was a pleasure, not a desperate rat race, Hollywood housewives were as particular about the swimming pool on a property—it's size, shape and decor—as housewives elsewhere were about closet space. For in the film colony you are in the swim or out of it. Literally!

Betty Hutton turned down one dream house after another because the pools weren't what she wanted. Betty, who swims the year 'round, sought a pool that would offer not only an adequate area of H₂O but barbecue facilities on the side. When she saw the house in which she now resides as Mrs. Ted Briskin, with its tiled pool lying at the far end of a typical California garden, she knew instantly it was for her. Her shriek of joy echoed in the hills for miles around. And shrieks of joy from her guests have been echoing in those hills ever since over Betty's barbecue steaks, chickens and spareribs.

Surroundings, which can make or ruin a party, do perfectly wonderful things for the Hutton-Briskin fiestas. Betty has furnished her pool terrace with deep squishy white chairs and sofas upholstered in yellow canvas. She's (Continued on page 94)

it's still the Sterlings
If Ann Sothern and Robert Sterling did not think this story would help—perhaps help you—they would not have given it to me.

They want to forget as soon as possible the unhappiness that parted them for even a brief week.

And, if I didn’t sincerely believe every word they said to me the afternoon they came to my home, I would not be writing this. For, frankly, I have grown a little cynical about patched-up Hollywood marriages. The nine separations and reconciliations between Kathryn Grayson and John Shelton are enough to have curdled the trust of an angel. And I’m just a newspaper woman.

But I would stake a lot that Ann and Bob, who parted in anger so deep they both said it was over “forever,” have learned a valuable lesson in tolerance and are now together until “death do them part.”

I say this because people cannot talk as Ann and Bob did and not mean it.

They hadn’t wanted to talk at all. When I telephoned and said, “Annie, will you and Bob come to my house for a cocktail? I want to do a story about you two for Photoplay,” she said at first, “Oh, please—nothing about our separation. We want to forget it as quickly as possible. It was so wrong.” Then, suddenly, her hand went over the phone and I could hear her talking to someone else. In a moment she was back with me. She said, “Bob thinks, perhaps, we should talk to you. Maybe we can help other people in the same boat. If we could help just one other couple, it would be worth it.” I think Ann was also influenced by the fact that I was the first person she had told that Bob had quarreled with her and moved his clothes to the home of a friend. When they reconciled again I had another exclusive story.

I had been sad with them and then glad with them and I hoped they had sensed my sympathy.

When a sandhog comes up for air, he's sure to look starward—i.e., Rod Cameron

The lady and her likeness—
Rod airbrushes a just-finished portrait of his mother
HE Marines occupied Nicaragua, and Rod Cameron was fifty feet under the Hudson River, digging a hole. Captain Charles A. Lindbergh flew from Mineola to Paris, and Cameron was 100 feet nearer the Jersey shore when the afternoon extras hit the street. Herbert Hoover announced that the Kellogg-Briand Pact would outlaw war forever, and Cameron was hacking at hard clay with a pick, in a subway tunnel under 34th Street. The stock market collapsed with a loss of fifteen billion dollars, but Cameron didn’t hear it. He was under the East River burrowing in the direction of Long Island.

Cameron was in California, pouring cement under pressure in 1932.

Seven years, altogether—seven years underground. “Why did you become a movie star?” we asked the star of “Frontier Gal.”

“Got tired of working,” said Rod.

Rod has almost forgotten the seven lean years under dirt and water and some of the lean years that followed. His current concern is that he is too big for airplanes.

That’s a fact. Look at him: Six-feet-four, 190 pounds, lean and hard as a Canadian hockey player—he was that, too—dark as a Saracen in make-up, a handsome dog, a bigger and browner combination of Cary Grant and Randolph Scott, with brown eyes and his eyes on the skies.

He recently saved up money to buy a house—one of those pre-fabricated ones, the kind you are supposed to set up in the side yard in a moment’s notice, or at most, a jiffy. But he stopped at an airport on his way to the pre-fab factory and bought a plane instead, a pretty, fast-flying two-seater. The papers were signed and the money paid before Rod discovered that he was too tall to get into it. He’d like one to transport him to hockey games in Toronto, hunting trips in Oregon and prize fights in Manhattan. Meanwhile he’ll keep on looking until he finds a plane sized to Cameron. That is, when the time comes that it isn’t illegal, according to his (Continued on page 91)

Vincent's retreat—his "shack" atop a hill

It was in the script that he'd get the "Dragonwyck" role.

So quoth Vincent Price, who may be. But if he is, he's given the word a new meaning.

He'll top this labor with a foaming tankard.

BY MICHAEL SHERIDAN
Hollywood wonders sometimes, for Vincent Price is tops in unpredictability and nonconformity

NOT so long ago a couple of Hollywood gendarmes espied with considerable misgiving the approach in their direction of a long, lean and lone hitchhiker. He was headed for Hollywood.

Quickly they came to an illuminating conclusion: This was a bum, if ever there was one! Then, glancing hastily into the back of the patrol car to see if he'd fit—the bum was all of six-feet-four—they leaped out and, accosting the human scarecrow, went over him for concealed weapons. They soon found out that, gatless, he was also anonymous, but what was worse, far worse, he was bereft a draft card.

"And what may your business be, bud?" asked the law.

"Actor!" said Vincent Price, for it was he.

"Oh, a movie actor!" The gendarmes exchanged knowing looks, and the larger of the two said, "A romantic hero, I presume?"

Not so fond memories of what Hollywood had done to him tempered the smile. "Ah, if they would only make up their minds!"

A little while after that Mr. Price reposed temporarily, but quite merrily, in the clink.

But if you ask Vincent Price, the star of Twentieth Century-Fox's "Dragonwyck," why such things happen to him, he will probably tell you it's because he would much rather be himself than the character Hollywood would like him to be. And that is fifty per cent au naturel, thirty per cent Thespian, and twenty per cent pure, unadulterated bum.

Consequently, and to the consternation of most everyone, including his employers and his friends, Vincent Price more often than not dresses in the tradition of the latter, talks enjoyably and enthusiastically in the picturesque patois and grows horrified whenever the studio wants to streamline him—which is about once every three weeks.

Some of his happiest moments are when he can go unshaven for days on end, slip into his sloppiest clothes, let his hair grow and quaff foaming tankards of beer with fellow bums like painter John Decker. Heaven help the dowagers of Beverly Hills, then, who would throw a party and invite him suddenly. Likely as not he would appear at his door to accept the invitation stripped to the waist, his aesthetic, rather handsome face smeared with paint, lipstick and egg. But you could be sure of one thing, he wouldn’t go. That would mean wearing a tuxedo, or at least a bow tie, and such things he would rather leave to Errol Flynn.

The kind of party he would rather go to generally lasts until the dawn and what starts as a purely desultory conversation about the arts, ends with a breakfast in the dawn, actress Edith Barrett hopelessly kissing her husband goodnight, and Vincent and John et al spending the rest of the next day in the garage painting the (Continued on page 80)
DEAR MISS COLBERT:

My mother died when I was six and my father, being a reckless, irresponsible person, never gave me the love and understanding I craved. Albert and I were only fifteen when we met and became the very best of friends. I knew almost at once that I was in love with him, but I knew that he cared for me only as a friend. The two years Albert was overseas I went out with other boys and even became engaged, but my long friendly letters to Albert never stopped. My engagement had been broken only five weeks when Albert returned to the States. Of course he wanted to hear all my problems and even questioned my broken engagement.

For the next two years he was on the West Coast, where he met a girl, fell in love with her, asked her to marry him, but was refused.

Last fall, Albert was transferred to a base only a few miles from home. He asked me to marry him. I wanted to wait, but Albert didn't agree, so we were married a week later. There is no need to explain the happiness I knew. Albert was the perfect husband in every respect. I had love, understanding, a home, security—everything. Too good, I guess, to last.

We had been married four months when Albert told me that he had received a letter from this girl on the West Coast saying she had changed her mind and now knew how much she really loved him. Albert said he liked me, respected me, and would always be concerned about my future, but that he wanted me to get a divorce.

I love my husband and I want to preserve our marriage if it is humanly possible. What should I do?

Mrs. Victoria T.

If one may judge by your patient waiting, it would be assumed that you are a steadfast person. I approved of your suggestion that you and Albert wait a bit before marrying; that would have been a very wise plan.

However, he seems to have hurried you into marriage. Your entire description of Albert persuades me that he is quite as irresponsible as you are dependable; quite as emotionally adolescent as you are mature.

One thing bewildered me: You neglected to tell me whether Albert had told this girl of his interim marriage. To judge from your letter, I would presume that he had not.

Ordinarily, I believe that when a man wants his freedom and asks for it, there is little a woman can do and retain her dignity and self-respect, except to accede to his demands. However, in your case, I think you have the character to tell your husband to wait until he gets out of service before seeking his freedom. He hasn't given your marriage a chance to sink its emotional roots; he really doesn't know his own mind, I'm afraid. Help him to grow up and to stand by his decisions.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

As you have probably noticed from my address, I'm a WAC. I love it, and my work, which is very interesting.

My father died when I was just a child and my mother married again. My stepfather has always been a very heavy drinker, but in the last few years he has grown gradually worse. In the course of these years my sister, my brother and I stopped having friends visit our house because of the terrible embarrassment connected with their visits.

In 1940 my brother could endure it no longer and went overseas to join the RAF. My sister waited for a year, then jumped into an unsuitable marriage just to get away from home. Since I was the youngest, I stayed at home until I graduated from high school. Just before graduation I received word that my brother had been killed in action; shortly after that, my sister secured a divorce.

After the death of my brother, I joined the Corps.

Since the war is over, Mother seems to think that I should come home again. I love my mother very much, but life in that house is something you can't believe unless you have lived in it. I would like to remain in the WAC and apply for overseas duty, but I know that Mother would be deeply hurt to learn of such a decision.

Perhaps you can help me.

Corporal Eva K.

There is one thing about your letter that bewilders me: Why, if your mother could see her children being driven away by their stepfather, has she persisted in remaining with such a man?

There may be some extenuating circumstance, of course—some fact that keeps her with her husband, yet a fact of which you know nothing. How—(Continued on page 70)
When she was just a little girl, Joy Thomas used to watch Jackie Dale play tennis, and ardently admired his skill.

Now, she's a tall, slim, golden girl happily wearing his beautiful ring. Another Pond's engaged girl with the soft-smooth witchery of an especially lovely complexion.

"I'm ever so keen about Pond's Cold Cream to keep my face looking nice and feeling soft and smooth to touch," Joy says, "Pond's is really a grand cream."

Joy uses Pond's Cold Cream like this: Smooths the silky, white cream generously over her face and throat—and pats well to soften and release dirt and make-up. Tissues off.

Rinsets with another Pond's creaming, circling cream-coated fingers around her face in little spirals. Tissues again. "It makes my face feel extra clean, extra soft," she says.

Pond's your face her twice-over way—in the morning when you get up, and again at bedtime. Use Pond's Cold Cream for daytime freshen-ups, too. It's no accident so many more women use Pond's than any other face cream at any price.

Her beauty is gold and rose—aristocratic as an exquisite Venetian painting.

It would seem to me that, since appearance lends to believe that your mother prefers to remain with her husband while sacrificing the comfort of two of her children and the very life of another her only your love and loyalty on whatever basis you choose to give it.

If you want to sign for overseas service, it seems to me that you should think that your think will serve your future best. By all means, you should write to your mother as often as possible, and you can write to your when you can, but it doesn't seem fair for you to have to be miserable in a home you abhor.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Mom and Dad were separated four years ago through the fault of my Dad and partly of his daughter, my step-sister. I'm very devoted to my step-sister and my dad, but my mother loathes my step-sister.

I have spent quite a bit of my life with other relatives, but I have graduated from high school and got a good job. I went to live with Mom again because she wasn't making much and was unhappy. I buy a ticket whenever she wants to take a train to see Dad over the weekend. When I don't have the money she accuses me of hoarding my money for a trip to see Sis.

Now about my romance. I met Tom three years ago. At that time I was sixteen; he was nineteen. We were together for a year, then he went into the Army and we have corresponded regularly ever since. I promised to marry him as soon as he was discharged. At least, that was the understanding until recently.

Mom has said repeatedly that Tom is too good for me and that she was going to write to him and tell him all about me. I don't know what she could say because I'm a nice girl.

Tom has been back in this country almost a month now. The first letter I had from him was wonderful. Then he simply stopped writing. I know from Mom's smile that she has done something. I can't get an answer from Tom; I don't know what to do. He was wonderful. My brother will be home from the Navy in about a month, so perhaps I should leave home and get along without a family, Mom and my brother are devoted, so she is going to be very happy to have him at the house.

Laura Louise L.

Since you are self-supporting it seems to me that you should strive out for yourself. Find other living quarters; maintain cordial relations with your mother from a distance. Since your brother is coming home, she will have companionship, as you have suggested.

As for the boy: If he doesn't think enough of you to write or to appear in person and ask you for a full explanation of your mother's accusations, he isn't worthy of you. For a man to believe derogatory information about another being, without getting both sides of the story, is stupid, but still human.

After you have moved and established yourself in a new environment, why don't you write this boy frankly, telling him as much of your family problem as dignity will allow. Don't blame your mother too much; simply say that she is a difficult person and that there has always been a clash of personality between you. It is true that your mother has interfered, he may take your letter as a cue to write or to see you.

If you don't hear from him, it's possible that he may have had nothing to do with your severed love affair, and the boy simply has found someone else.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

My problem is that my hair is beginning to gray prematurely. I am twenty-six, single and in excellent health. Each night I massage and brush my hair religiously, but the grays are multiplying in alarming numbers.

As I look younger than my age in other ways, this condition is a source of great embarrassment to me and draws a good deal of comment from well-meaning friends. As I am a very sensitive person you can imagine how much unhappiness this causes me.

Would you advise me as to a possible solution? I hesitate to use dyes, not knowing much about such things.

Maybelle B.

Gray hair certainly shouldn't be allowed to cause anyone unhappiness. If you wish to retain its original color, try a good dye. From home people who have an allergy to hair dyes. You should investigate this possibility carefully first. Personally, I think there is nothing lovelier than a youthful face framed by white hair! The most beautiful women in Hollywood are Mrs. Ray Milland, whose hair is prematurely gray; she has never done anything about it except to keep it perfectly groomed.

It seems to me that, in the final analysis, dealing with gray hair is like dealing with any other item of one's personal characteristics. One should determine how that characteristic can be turned into an asset, then make the most of it.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a WAC and have been for eighteen months. I have enjoyed my work and my companions very much, but the increasing have been forced to absorb are terrific. Men in service as well as civilians are constantly belittling us and making the most degrading accusations.

It is true that an occasional girl in uniform behaves in a common manner, but from the things I have heard from honest men in service the civilian girls of a certain type are not angels. Ninety-five per cent of the WACs I have met have been fine girls with sincere ideals. They have joined up to wait for sweethearts in service; most of them have male relatives in service.

There are quite a few girls, like myself, who stay in barracks every night in preference to going out on a date and being insulted.

One girl who was discharged on points, applied for a responsible secretarial job in a large corporation (she had been secretary to a general and is a brilliant person), was interviewed by a man from Leering at her when he noted that she had spent two years in service, he said, "Well, you've had enough experience with men to know how to handle a little night work around here when it becomes necessary."

She simply arose and walked out on the interview.

If there is any way in which you can help me, I shall be very much obliged. A much-needed and misunderstood branch of the service, not only I, but thousands of girls will be forever grateful.

PFC Earline W.

First of all I would like to say that all corporation officials aren't vulgarians. Just as you are willing to admit that perhaps five per cent of womankind (whether in or out of uniform) behaves in an unfortunate manner, so you must admit that (Continued on page 103)

Parting without Tears

(Continued from page 31) my request for an interview to talk about his marriage, largely because his friendship for Chris demanded it be clearly understood neither he nor she is at fault in any way that it is possible to remedy.

They wanted different things of their marriage, you see. Tom, shy and retiring, above all wanted a wife who would be an anchor upon all of those occasions when he is hurt and puzzled.

Chris was not such a wife and never pretended to be. She wanted the successful career which a series of unfortunate circumstances so far have denied her.

"Had a career worked out for Chris in another way I wouldn't have objected," Tom insists. "But I knew the stock contract offered her was not good from any point of view since, nine times out of ten, these contracts lead to nothing but disappointment and disillusionment."

That nervous shyness which marks Tom's personality and reactions springs, likely enough, from his youth. For he was only seventeen when he lost his parents and found himself suddenly facing insecurity.

As Alfred Alderdice, he knew all the comforts of a boy living in the midst of a well-to-do family. For instance, his father, a linen merchant, often would say at dinner, "We're using the linen that was woven for Buckingham Palace, I see." For should the slightest imperfection appear in the linen loaned for the English Windsors the American Alderdices used it instead.

Tom went to good schools, Iona in New Rochelle and later Mercersburg Academy in Pennsylvania where Jimmy Stewart had been a student before him. Though when he was seventeen, his father, mother and older sister died. He and his other sister, Clare, found themselves alone with only a small income to keep them. Theatrical careers, they decided, were the thing.

It was that same year, 1936, working in summer stock at Poughkeepsie, New York, that they met Chris. In those days, however, her name was Isabelle Dunn. She changed it later to Christopher Dunn to have the same name which Clare, happily married, gave her baby daughter.

That summer not Poughkeepsie, Chris went to New York and the musical comedy stage. And, finally, bouncing back and forth from a flop show to summer stock, Tom landed in New York too, in the hit, "Janie." Whereupon Chris's mother, who liked the two Alderdice kids, more or less placed Chris in their care. The three lived together in a New York apartment house, with Clare and Chris sharing a flat identical to Tom's on the floor above. And, soon enough, neighbors grew accustomed to Tom's poking his head out of the window to call to the girls.

Following, Tom, off on a summer tour, learned Chris had married Michael Ames and gone to Hollywood with him. They didn't meet again for two years when Tom too journeyed west to make "The Howards of Virginia." It was not a happy reunion, for Michael Ames had asked for release from his contract and Chris was dancing at the Florentine Gardens. Tom found himself heavily hearted over the plight of his old friend.

It was much later that Tom, who had been in New York, returned to Hollywood to make his hit in "Two Girls and a Sailor" and to learn of Chris's divorce. Then almost immediately both knew a flare-up of that end of things.

Lonely and bewildered as they both were, it was easy for them to convince each other that their lives would have been happier had they remained true to the attraction they had known for each other when, seventeen and fifteen, they had had their first kiss behind a flat of scenery up in Poughkeepsie. No need to wait to marry, they argued. Having been kids together, struggled together, taken disappointments together, surely they knew each other well. Too late they discovered how far apart the intervening years had left them.

We suggested to Tom that the housing shortage had worked against his marriage too. For, unable to find another house, Tom had had to take Chris and her small daughter living with her and being shared with Clare and her two young sons.

But Tom shook his head. "At the top of the house Chris, her daughter and I had our own big room with our books and records. There was no need to care who was below or what went on. I didn't even mind when there were three Chrises in the house—my wife, my stepdaughter and Clare's child. Although when Clare told me she had hired a cook named Chris I did think we might be overdoing it."

We suggested his wife might have objected to so many under the same roof. "I think not," he said, "because Clare and her husband got a house out in the Valley after not too long. And we still didn't make a go of it."

"Chris and I just didn't have what it takes to make a good marriage. We were, above all, friends. That was why it was so important for us to save our marriage. If we couldn't do it for ourselves but for each other. That is why I speak as I do now; so it will be understood that neither of us suffered any emotional anti-climax, called names or made accusations. A belief to the contrary in any quarter might harm the friendship we've always had."

Thus speaks Tom Drake. Only twenty-seven years old and one of the best looking lads in town, he makes few dates these days. While others play, he works. Perhaps until he finds his ideal, Tom Drake will have to take the place of happiness in a career. And it won't be such a mean share if he has the opportunity to live up to the promise he shows in "The Green Years."

"There's something about Glenn Ford—an air of loneliness, a sort of helplessness—that makes you want to do everything within your power to help him".

People have felt this way about Glenn ever since he can remember. Needlessly.
Because it so happens that he has an independent streak which bears a close resemblance to the idea of independence.

Soon enough, Bette, looking at Glenn's test, which proved to be slightly sensational, discovered this for herself. Other stars, had she failed, never to recover from the dis-ion of Glenn as quickly and as astutely.

Hollywood headaches.

It started way back when Margaret theater actor" making his screen debut in "So Ends Our Night". So the game goes, Miss Maggie barely recognized Gill Ford when he en-

( all right, so breath, and the impres-vision. It's now Rita Hayworth with Glenn Ford in "Gilda."

"I look forlorn, I guess," Glenn muses.
"because up to a point I went in service with the idea that I would brood, subject to spells of depression. I had never learned how to have fun, you see. Being an only son, my father's death made me head of the family when I was just out of high school. I grew up by myself. I didn't make friends easily and I wasn't considered good company.

"I've always known it was a sense of kindness that prompted people to help me and when I discouraged them I robbed them of some kind of personal satisfaction, really.
But there are times, of course, when I have to do things that people consider

Eighteen months have elapsed since Glenn resumed civilian life. Now that the pain of the past belongs to the past, he can afford to be philosophical. Compensations, though, are necessary, he manages to find comforting.

Says Glenn in reflection: "In the Marine Corps, for the first time I lived side by side with fellow human beings. By learning about them, I learned about me. For example, I used to be afraid to say to any people. Afraid of hurting their feelings.
As a result, I was constantly obligating my self. I go places, do things, make love where it made me uncomfortable. The Marines changed all that. I used to trust everyone.
I was brought up to believe that all people are basically good. Today I can spot a cad in a crowd and I can tell whether he's myself. Before I was inclined to give insequent thoughts too much importance."

The change in Glenn is apparent in his reflected happiness, which is much more like the movies. Together with his amorous self, and the girl of his choice.
"My salary was small before the war," Glenn explains. "Naturally, I couldn't save on a sergeant's allotment. Eleanor had been living with her mother, and there was little left to buy for all of us. Our new housing was big for Eleanor to run alone.
We could only afford one servant, so we decided it was best to have a good cook. So we got Agnes who turned out to be a mere genius. This left Eleanor free to run the house, take care of Peter—which she wanted to do because she had given up her career to enjoy a home and children."

From Glenn's point of view it seemed like good sound reasoning. But how it backfired! On Friday nights Glenn has a standing date with Robert Ford. Otherwise he never goes out unless it's on studio business.
Either Eleanor was so tired she had to stay home, or there were too many phone calls and he couldn't find a "sitter" for Peter. So they were seldom seen out together. Tongues began wagging. It's one of the few in their happiness that they're determined to ravel. We have no way to know their relationships, there's nothing they can do about it anyway.

Stripped down to his infectious smile,
Glenn was a 158-pounder when he enlisted. He came out weighing 170, still smiling. Today he is one inch taller. Glenn claims they just trained him to stand up straighter. Wearing spots, non-starred with the best boys, he got the highest privilege as a civilian. Fortunately, he owned a good selection. He's been able to have them altered to fit his new body measurements.

Where his memory is concerned, Glenn claims kinship with an elephant. Consider his first day out of the service when he visited his favorite pipe shop. Four years preparing, he now orders a flint and imported meerschaum. He just had to add it to the 150 pipes already in his Glenn made his purchase.

THE Fords also collect records. They actual own over 7,000, all catalogued and bound in red leather albums. Glenn's recording machine is equipped to take air-checks from broadcasts. As a result, you hear almost every famous person or piece of music when you visit Glenn and him. During the war, he found they seem "so bored with everything but their own existence.

Glenn loves dogs and right now is in the process of looking for a mutt and not a thoroughbred. "Like high-breeds, dogs are difficult. A mutt is simple," Glenn loves simplicity.

Seeking out new eating places comes under the heading of adventure. A current of fresh-water trout actually make it possible for a guest to fish for his supper. Glenn and Peter Ford favorites include Robert Donat, Claude Rains, Anton Walbrook, Raimu and Ralph Richardson. Glenn never misses them when they play at the local Esquire Theatre.

Glenn describes the critic referred to him as "a gnomaced actor who has a way of standing up and sitting down—in pieces."

Glenn learned the thought his father didn't live to see his progress and enjoy his family. Glenn's chief worry concerns his son Peter. Of this blue-eyed, healthy young individual, Glenn grows quite mellow.

"He's well on his way to being spoiled," Glenn reflects. "So much is happening around us. I'm wondering what kind of world is waiting for him. He'll need lots of stability to see him through. That's why, in a way, I hope he won't want to be an actor. If he does, naturally I'll help him all I can." (Continued on page 78)

Milestone star, he was suddenly struck by a cyclone three minutes after Glenn walked into it. He hates wearing pajamas. Long before morning the lone sheet that covers him—doesn't! The cold night air pouring through three open windows stimulates him like a double martini—"made with Vodka, please."

Glenn has never quite gotten his fill of the taste of ice cream, the smell of baking bread, night driving with his car top down. "It's the happiest time of day for me, living on a hilltop and being able to look down on Ciro's," which is as close as he wants to get to a night club. Glenn has a recurring dream about houses and streets in Russia and China. He's never been there, yet twice in newsreels he's seen the same places after he's dreamed about them.

Amongst his dislikes are people—people at large gatherings, who are late, who argue and make him feel conspicuous, any group of people that dedicates itself to small talk that proves nothing. Glenn dislikes himself because he can't learn to jitterbug and doesn't really want to, himself because he can't get up in front of people and play parlor games, himself because, "When I'm thinking about things, I look like I'm wandering around in a fog and unintentionally snub people."

Glenn's one great suppressed desire is to give a banquet for all the Hollywood casting directors who warned him to get out of town because, "With that face of yours, you haven't a chance in the movies!"

So far as the public is concerned, "Gilda" is Glenn's first post-war picture. Actually, it was "A Stolen Life" with Bette Davis which is still to be released. Playing opposite Bette proved a milestone and a turning point for Glenn. Typical of Bette Davis, Glenn got every break.

As a result of playing opposite a star of the Davis magnitude, Glenn won a new contract at Columbia, a triple raise in salary and the right to wear a dress suit in "Gilda." It was nice working with Rita. Also a source of great satisfaction. Back in 1940 when the world was young, they worked together in a quickie little picture called "Lady in Question." Said question, it seems, was a moot one. Glenn, thin to a cadaverous degree, nervous and self-conscious, was anything but happy in front of the camera. The plump, pliable, black-haired (then) Rita was equally ill at ease and frightened.

We played two spineless French people. Glenn remembers "...young, wiseful Paris in the spring and all that sort of thing. We had a love scene outside, in front of a church. I gave Rita a gentle peck on the cheek. She lowered her eyes and blushed. Automatically, she drew away from me and I had to continue the love scene standing a foot away. The censors had nothing to worry about."

It was just at this stage of their respective careers that Rita was asked to category the ten male companions she'd select, if stranded on a desert island. All good, clean, wholesome fun. Match! Glenn headed Bette Davis's list of Larothers. After his name, she wrote: "I'd select Glenn Ford because he knows how to make a fire with two sticks—and that can be very helpful."

Let us remember the year was 1940, B.O. (Before Orson!) All of which had nothing to do with one Glenn Ford when he read the story. Those two sticks were superfluous. Smoke poured out of his pores. In "Gilda," as the adventure-gambler, Glenn spent three days loving Rita, hating Rita, smacking Rita. Charles Vidor (who also directed them in "Lady in Question") made sure that Glenn didn't pull his punches. Glenn himself, tall, terrific and tantalizing, sent Rita home at the end of each day, feeling as if she had tangled with a tornado.

Two sticks to make a fire—indeed! Today, Rita is a much wiser woman! The END

ALL OUT FOR WILDE

Cornel wins the votes of two ardent fans

Gentlemen:

We have just heard the "returns" on the Academy Award Dinner, which has prompted us to relegate this tale of woe to you.

How the Hollywood masterminds could have passed up Cornel Wilde's performance as Chopin in "A Song to Remember," and instead given the coveted award to Ray Milland for his performance in "The Lost Weekend," is a little beyond our comprehensive powers. With due respect to Mr. Milland, who has been one of our favorites for years, we do believe that the "Oscar" was given to the wrong actor. The role of Chopin was no easy task, and Mr. Wilde did not just portray Chopin, he was Chopin, the famous composer. Certainly no other actor could have given the role more finesse and appeal than did Mr. Wilde.

Granted Mr. Milland did turn in a very good performance and, were it not for the Chopin role, we do believe he would have deserved the award.

To say the least, we were very disappointed with the outcome of the Academy Award Dinner.

Very truly yours,

Anne Medic — Betty Bates
Albuquerque, New Mexico

P.S.—There is also the school of thought that Cornel Wilde should get an award on the strength of being Cornel Wilde.

We couldn't afford to lunch in Romanoff's more than once a month."

This aroused everybody's sympathy.

"Esther had to be better than anyone in this world," said Benjamin soberly. "I had eaten in Ciro's in Mexico, Waldorf in New York, Romanoff's here and I say honestly, those places are no better than ours.

"My family would not forgive me if I couldn't," said Esther immediately.

Both her parents were born in Dodge City, Kansas.

Esther was a school teacher at seventeen. Wasn't she wonderful?" says Esther, implying a teacher at seventeen rates a movie star at twenty-four.

"Yes, but I have the most wonderful family," she avers happily. "Parents, brother, two sisters, nephews and nieces. When we were children we had very little. One year during Lent we didn't have enough to eat but with such wonderful parents we never minded, we had such fun always. Home and family mean everything and I would be so mistaken as to put career ahead of these? You would have enjoyed our wedding. It was so homey with all the relatives on both sides, our parents, Aunt Nellie, Uncle Chester, nephews, nieces and Ben's wonderful eighty-two-year-old granny who flew here from Evanston because we said we would not marry without her.

"I am shocked how little it takes to make girls lose their heads," she said, and added quickly, "I'm grateful to Mother for giving us a sense of true values. My married sister feel sorry for me. Each has two babies, and I look longingly at the change they did. Babies always will be the most important part of life and I hope I have lots."

SUCH talk in Romanoff's, the last place you would anticipate the pitter of little feet! What is Hollywood coming to? It wasn't like this in the old days when a girl didn't have a baby for fear of breaking her contract and losing her sex appeal. If the simple-minded stork did drop one where he shouldn't, a star, like as not would say it was adopted. But now, good heavens...

"Everyone should have variety of interests, especially in this business, to maintain balance," said she, nodding across a Sinatra who was pressed even thinner than usual between two large attentive business men. "Frank is well balanced, so interested in child-welfare and teaching of tolerance. When I was in Mexico City I had Mother fly down. It was her first trip there and she was delighted with everything. I took her to Ciro's, a very gay and colorful night spot. Frank Sinatra was there and he and Mother spent the whole evening in a muddle talking child psychology."

Esther herself is a psychologist. She has the intuition of the sympathetic heart. And she can read handwriting. Asking for the notes a reporter had been scribbling under the table she viewed them without blanching and said, “Your margins are nice.” Honest but kind, she contributes always the encouraging word.

Esther was somewhat discouraged herself after her first picture, “Andy Hardy Steps out.” None of her precious family made a fuss about it. When pressed, her mother said, “It was good, but it was not Esther.”

Esther decided the honorable thing was to release Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from its ill-advised contract. “Of course I couldn’t wait for them to decide,” she smiles.

Recently on the radio Mr. Louis B. Mayer old humorously of the episode. When she called on him to thank him and release him from his unhappy error, he listened solemnly, then asked her if she would be so kind as to wait in the outer office while he saw another person for a moment. The other party was Clark Gable.

“How is it, Clark, you never have discovered any talent for us?” Mr. Mayer asked. “You have been around here a long time. Most stars are forever discovering new leading women.”

Clark was startled by such talk.

“You might start by looking around the outer office,” concluded the chief.

In a moment Clark was back with Esther.

“I’d like to make a test with Miss Williams,” he said.

“I think it can be arranged,” said Mr. Mayer.

With Messrs. Gable and Mayer both peering on her asked herself who was the be flunking the Williams girl.

Would you have felt badly had you failed?” she was asked.

“Not too badly,” she replied with one of her gentle smiles. “I could have gone back to modeling in Magnin’s. Instead of a picture a year now I could have a baby a year. Two or three perhaps,” she added ambitiously, and then by way of explanation to a startled listener, “Twins or triplets I mean.”

Again, how times have changed! Every old-time star was supposed to be a Virgin Queen; now every one wants to be Madame Pompadour.

In “Fiesta” Esther appears actually in the bull ring as a girl who substitutes for her brother, a toreador. The brother is played by the handsome young Mexican actor Ricardo Montalban, who is married to Georgiana Young, Loretta’s sister.

“I predict he will equal and possibly top any of our stars,” says Esther. “He has the little-boy quality, like Sinatra, where, that appeals to the maternal in women. When a man has that he’s sold.”

And when a girl has maternal warmth, appealing to the little boy in every man, he’s sold. Esther is adored by every male in “Fiesta” including the bull who was supposed to bunt her behind but instead, being a manly beast, just sort of pinched her. As who wouldn’t?

BANISHES “TATTLE-TALE GRAY”
"All Actors Are Bums"

"I learned that after 672 performances of "Victoria Regina" I was all of three things: Another Gary Cooper, a new type of leading man and the most exciting acting discovery in years," says Vinnie, and adds sadly, "But after 672 days in Hollywood, still have the same three things: more things. A big mistake had been made, I should go back to Broadway and some- one should apologize to Mr. Cooper." In his great successes, and many good notices notwithstanding, Vincent Price al- ways kept his bags packed for a swift re- turn to New York.

But the time when the story was to have a happier ending. The actor signed a long-term contract with Twentieth, with the promise that he be accorded roles suit- able to his talents. They made good their promise by casting him in exciting roles in the aforementioned good pictures.

As the domineering, emotional Nicholas Van Ryn in "Dragonwyck," Vincent Price has been given Hollywood's acting plum of the year. It was both a crown and a challenge for everything that has come be- fore. That he has emerged with flying colors very few have any doubt.

Vincent Price loves his anonymity. His family has had the same butler for forty years, the same laundress for forty-two years, and their chauffeur has been with them for forty-five years. However, the current was that he was nineteen years. Vincent thinks that most things, especially friendships, can be like that too. But Hollywood he wonders about something.

Vincent Price was born in St. Louis, Missouri, on May 12, 1912, the son of Vincen- t and Margarette Wilcox Price. His father was a wealthy biscuit manufacturer. By the time, he was 38, he was in a struggle for a living. He deliberately chose to struggle. But first he absorbed all the education he could at the exclusive Com- munity Day School, St. Louis Country Day School, Yale University and the University of London before he set foot on any professional stage. In case he failed to achieve his first ambition—which was to become a professor of history—then he would have to become a professor of history.

After winning his bachelor's degree from a Yale, he became a singing coach and in his spare time made the rounds of theatrical agencies with no success whatever.

It seemed to him that every time a boat arrived from abroad, down the gangplank walked some unknown who was immedi- ately hailed by some Broadway producer as a "talented new discovery." It occurred to him then that it might be wise to go abroad, as they did, but since he had never gone over to become equipped as a teacher. But he spent far less time at the British Museum than he did in the stalls of the London theaters. He also spent consid- erable time with the society of actors who lived next door to his lodgings.

Finally he was equipped to play Prince Albert in "Victoria Regina," Gilbert Miller's new play which had hardly made its production and sent for Vincent to repeat his role on Broadway.

Vincent Price walked down the gang- plank of the ship that brought him back from abroad. He was a little white-faced from the new discovery—a little more than a year after he had been turned down by every actor's agent in New York.

Vincent Price was busy for three solid years, from 1935 through 1937. The movies couldn't help discovering him, but for a while he resisted all Hollywood offers. Principally, he was loathe to leave his Dumbarton Oaks home, which was, to this day, the most romantic place he has lived in.

A year after his return, the world saw a bidding war for his picture "Dragonwyck," which he had played in Price Cornwall, aged five, and possibly the Academy Award.

All is not grave that glitters in the merry blue eyes of Vincent Price. At moments when the talk gets a little too serious for him, he will say gaily, "Let's go quaff a tankard of ale." Then, likely as not, you will hear gayer stories from the life of the greatest ham of the theater. He once came to play the part of Nicholas Van Ryn. He had read the book one night and finally putting it down at midnight, he said to Edith, this is for my new copy of "Dragonwyck." He had gone to bed to re-read it until dawn. The lamb cakes stayed where they were.

The next morning Vincent Price was up with the lark, and when producer Ernest Lubitsch arrived in his office at Twentieth Century-Fox he found the actor sitting cross-legged in front of him, Vinnie, and felt after I had asked him for a test that I was perfect for the part, except that I might not look romantic enough on him. The test was successful. He was offered the promised test to lose twenty-five pounds—and when I appeared, made up and costumed for the test, Lubitsch said, "Well, that's one worry you have left—yes, you. I knew you could act. Now let's find something to worry about.

But the worries that were to follow weren't those of Mr. Lubitsch or the director of "Dragonwyck"—they had to do with that picture. They were something that had the publicity department not only perturbed but baffled. Here in the making of a great new star. Only he didn't look like one. Sometimes he didn't even look like an actor.

Someone had the bright idea of talking to Vinnie about it. The press agent en- tered his office and told him how to go about it. "Let's go quaff a tankard of something cold," he said. Vinnie was delighted. There was a little place right on the beach, with a stone's throw of his hill-top cabin, that had a view of Catalina, green fields and boats lying in the harbor.

The press agent, quaffing a tankard of something cold, said, "What do you think about the new actor?""I think him very good,

"Never mind about good or bad, that's a silly question. What do you think about the new actor?"

How to bring out the natural sparkling beauty of your hair like Powers Models

Leaves Hair So Silken-Soft—Bright and Glossy For Days. If you want something really worth while in shampoo—by all means 'glamour-bathe' your hair with Kreml Shampoo—it's positively seductive in intent.

Those stunning 'million dollar' Powers Models know the secret. Long ago they discovered how Kreml Shampoo thoroughly cleanses hair and scalp of dirt, grease and loose dandruff—how it actually brings out all the hair's natural sparkling highlights and lustre—how it leaves hair shining bright for days—so silken soft—easier to arrange.

Helps Keep Hair From Becoming Dry or Brittle. Kreml Shampoo never leaves any excess dull, soapy film. It positively contains no harsh caustics or chemicals which rob hair of its natural oils. It never dries the hair. Instead, Kreml Shampoo is one shampoo that has a beneficial oil base which actually helps keep hair from becoming dry or brittle. It's such a mild, gentle shampoo—even for kiddles' soft baby hair.

So why not wash your hair to its natural shining loveliness with Kreml Shampoo—a frankly conniving shampoo for stealing 'his' head and heart away! At all drug, dept., and 10c stores.

"A beachcomber?" smiled Vinnie.
"That's putting it rather politely," said the p.a.
A dreamy look came into Vinnie's eyes and he gazed out to sea. "Know what I'm going to do when everything happens to me you say is going to happen to me? I'm going to get myself a live bait boat and fish my way to South America."
"No yacht?" said the p.a. despairingly.
"No yacht," agreed Vincent Price, and said consolingly, "But I would like to own three homes."
The press agent brightened, and Vinnie added, "Yes, three homes. A shack in town, a shack on the beach and a one-room apartment up in Central Park."
The story has it that at this moment the press agent exploded, "But you have all that now."
Vinnie nodded and stared silently out to sea. He didn't say anything and the press agent was silent. He must have realized that, after all, there really wasn't anything more to say.

The most sensational and star-dusty party given lately was that at the Clover Club. The hosts were Cary Grant, Eddie Duchin, Jimmy Stewart and John McClain. And the sky was the limit for glamour. Never have the screen lovelies looked lovelier and we might mention that Hollywood has gone decolleté mad; the gals can't get 'em cut low enough. Most of the beautiful shoulders were bare with shoulder straps completely eliminated. "Stays" it seems are here to stay—we mean the kind that hold up those topless evening gowns.

At the party:
Paulette Goddard in a beautifully draped gold lamé gown. It clung to the well-known Goddard figure in all the right places and was slit in the front to the knees. Practically backless, it was softly draped across the bust with one shoulder bare and the other draped with a slim bit of lamé. Gold sandals. No ornament in her hair and NONE of her terrific jewels. She knew her costume itself was striking enough.

Rita Hayworth was a vision in a heavy white crepe gown which was beaded from neck to hem with tiny white beads and threaded with gold. There was a slit in the front of this severely cut gown to show the famous Hayworth ankles rising from white and gold sandals. No straps—no jewels—just a huge gold bracelet and a big square gold locket.

Norma Shearer, too, wore a slinky gown fashioned of a gold and white brocadiish fabric. It also was strapless. It also was cut low and heart-shaped. It also was slit to the knees. Norma wore no jewels and her hair was piled high in a braided crown.

Randy Scott's wife and Henry Fonda's wife wore almost identical gowns—both so smart and both with the long slit. They were of black crepe and featured tiny waistlines and snug bodices topped with huge black crepe ruching which accentuated their slimmness. Both gowns were strapless (this is getting monotonous). Pat Scott wore no jewels. Frances Fonda, on the contrary, wore a gorgeous diamond and sapphire clip at her throat, earrings to match and a big oriental sapphire ring.

Joan Crawford enhanced a beautifully simple black net dance frock with her gorgeous diamonds and sapphires. She wore diamond and sapphire bracelets on both arms, a diamond and sapphire clip (about 80 carats) on a tiny black cord around her neck and an enormous star sapphire on her left hand. The skirt of her gown which gathered to a tiny waist was very full and flounced gracefully as she danced.

At a less formal party given by Veronica Lake and Andre de Toth for Howard Hughes at The Club, Veronica wore a brocaded lamé (silver and rose colored) cocktail suit, with gloves and draped turban to match.

Cornel Wilde's wife, Pat Knight, was as dramatic as usual in a two-piece cocktail dress. The jacket featured enormously wide black and white satin stripes. The skirt was slim and black.

At the cocktail soiree tossed by Wynn Roccamora, who manages a lot of stars, the gals really outdid themselves in the fashion department. Diana Lynn, who helped Wynn "host" the party (though this doesn't mean they're "going steady" or anything like that), wore a short cocktail dress of black taffeta. A tiny black velvet band bound her hair and she didn't even take off her very short white gloves when reaching for the hors d'oeuvres. Zachary Scott had a wonderful time teasing Reggie Gardiner's pretty Nadia about the mad hat she was wearing. But who would mind that? Men just simply don't know.

As a romantic lover on the screen, either lady might tell you, Rod is making satisfactory progress. But apparently he is even more romantic under water. There's one of those scenes in "The Runaround" in which he is supposed to fall into a swimming pool with Ella Raines. They emerge, dripping and kissing.

Despite the fact that Miss Raines emerged with a cut lip, there were no complaints—not even from Miss Raines.

BOOGIE is his great love. Reports of rare cacophonies performed by hot pianists in obscure joints off the beaten path of Hollywood and Vine inspire hours of exploration. He is as ardent as a New England lad on the trail of an antique. The works of Art Tatum, Pete Johnston, Albert Ammons and other practitioners of the new art form are tonic to Rod Cameron. He collects their recordings and is a performer on the ivories himself.

As a result of this passion, Rod's small house in Dark Canyon is frequently the scene of jam sessions lasting far and loud into the night. He lives with his mother and his sister, patient women both. Like many performers of the esoteric left hand, Rod never had a lesson.

Another love is hockey. Whether the studio will permit him to do it or not is questionable, but the Hollywood Wolves—that's a hockey team, honest—want him to play forward with them next season. The big bosses know that he has frequently worked out with the Wolves in practice. What they don't know is that Rod played three full games with them last season under his real name of Cox. He was the boy off the rink for whipping an opponent across the pat with a stick in the third game and whisked out of sight in a hurry to avoid publicity.

Many of the Wolves are old school chums with whom he shares tender memories of head-hitting and shin-barking with sharp skates during a Canadian boyhood.

What most people don't know is that Rod migrated to California—when the depression began to curtail jobs—with no ambitions for pictures whatsoever.

"I had acted in a church play once," he reports. "My sister got me into it. I had nothing to say. I walked on and I walked off. I was considered adequate."

Then followed the succession of jobs, including selling chemicals to fruit growers. "There was a break in when you get paid, which Rod didn't. He then worked in a five and dime store. All told, he had thirty-five different jobs before acting occurred to him.

One day a tall young man walked into the David O. Selznick studio and said he wanted to act. There was instant comotion. Executives and assistant executives began to shake hands in unison. Casting directors rejoiced.

"We have found the Tarleton Twins," was flashed around the lot. "The Tarleton Twins for 'Gone with the Wind.' This man can be both of them."

Rod gulped and said, sure, he could play two men, he was big enough.
"Got a Guild card?" he was asked.
"Why, er, no."
So they threw him out. Just like that.
No Screen Actors Guild Card, no Tarleton Tunic.

Rod had sat on so many hall benches by now waiting to see executives that short people were using the seat of his pants for a mirror when he finally became an actor. A friend in San Francisco gave him a note to Edmund Goulding, who immediately cast him in "The Old Maid" and gave him a scene with Bette Davis.
Rod made his first appearance before any camera in a sequence with Bette.

"Good!" said Goulding, "Wonderful!"

When the picture was about to be released, Rod asked Goulding again if it was really all right. "Wonderful, my boy!"
said Goulding.

So Rod spent all his money for tickets to the premiere, packing the orchestra seats with family and friends. They breathed hard for two hours waiting for the new actor's big scene with the redoubtable Bette Davis. It didn't come on because Mr. Goulding had cut it out of the picture.

"We all went out and cut our throats," said Rod.

Rod snagged another chance, quick. He was up for a leading part in "Arizona," and the papers were about to be drawn when suddenly he was discarded. An executive producer threw him out because, said, Rod had a scar on his nose. He had no scar on his nose, but when an executive producer says you have, why, brother, you might as well grab a knife and cut one. He finally wound up at Paramount.

And this is where he learned how to act.

"Mostly in tests. I tested with everybody," Then Westerns, when they could find horses big enough to carry the big man. He couldn't ride, that being a sport not taught on the Canadian lakes where Rod comes from.

Is break came when he summoned nerve enough to quit Paramount and frelicence. "Pop" Sherman, the Hopalong Cassdy entrepreneur, snapped him up, put him under contract, and gave him a little fame as a cowpoke player. Opportunities for bigger parts showed themselves as a result. The Sherman contract stood in the way.

Rod hurried to the Sherman office to buy his contract, prepared to mortgage his soul to get out of it.

"I think we're not getting anywhere," he began. "What do you say we call the deal off?"
Sherman looked overjoyed.

"Sure," he said, "What'll you take to cancel the contract?"

And that is how the ex-hole-digger happened to play in "Mrs. Parkington" and opposite the delicious Yvonne De Carlo in a remarkable picture called "Salome—Where She Danced." From then on, everything has been onward and upward for Rod Cameron. Conservative opinion, backed by important flurries of fan mail from bobby-soxers and debutantes, has it that Rod, who is a very hot dramatic bet right now, will soon move into Cary Grant territory as a light comedian. He is as rugged as a bulldozer but he has a dry wit. It's inexplicable, but wit and good humor are revealed on screen as#importantly as broad shoulders.

Like most rugged men, Rod Cameron has a certain complex about being an actor.
In San Francisco for a location sequence at an airport, Cameron appeared after lunch with his make-up askew.

"Go fix yourself, quick!" commanded the director.

There being no studio facilities at an airport, Rod hurried to the men's room.
paint and powder in hand.

He emerged fast, like a man who'd stepped right into the middle of a snake pit.

"Not on your life," he bellowed. "That place is jumping with sailors. Me stand there and put paint on my face? Think I'm crazy?"

Rod's real name is Roderick Cox, and he was born in Calgary, Canada, Dec. 7, 1910. His father died when Rod was a child, and he has made his own way since the age of twelve. This included semi-professional football between amateur hockey games.

Aside from hockey, football, flying and boogie-woogie, hunting, fishing and Yvonne De Carlo, all enterprises recommended for extraverts, Rod has another hobby which may surprise you. He carves in rare hardwoods and ivory.

His woodcarving, though exceptionally good for an amateur, is sometimes difficult to understand. Recently he did a portrait bust of Broderick Crawford. In oak, of course. This was being admired around the Universal lot when Rod, with excess artistic zeal, decided to make an improvement with a pocket knife. Then his hand slipped.

Rod tried the best he could, he says, to repair the error, but no matter what he did, that head kept coming out exactly like Frank McHugh. And that's the way the matter rests today.

His next artistic project will be an attempt to carve an elaborate set of chessmen from a walrus tusk, with an inlaid table to match. He is hopeful that this will in no wise resemble Mr. McHugh.

You are invited to agree that this is a reasonably short story about an interesting man's life. But it comes a long way, at that, from sandhog to movie star. Rod has taken it in comfortable stride. His legs are obviously long enough to reach the ground, even if his eyes are on the skies.

that he had his brain-storm Jimmy showed me $50.00 which he had collected for the Red Cross. Then, however, Jimmy locked the boat to the heavy chain that secures it, put the key in his pocket and went happily home.

Came the dawn and Orson was awakened by hoarse whistles and cries. Five marooned couples, discovering that as tempus fugits love fugits too, were demanding to be rescued. Since Orson first had to get the fire department to file the boat chain, it was bright morning before the last unhappy couple was ferried back to the pool's mainland.

Some of the Hollywood swimming pools overshadow any Roman bath ever built, both in size and magnificence. Tiles which form maps, dragons and signs of the zodiac gleam through water as crystal clear as filtered air. And at night, with the underwater lights on, they are out of this world!

SONJA HENIE'S pool, set in a formal garden behind her lavish home, is one of the most beautiful in town.

Cornel Wilde's is beautiful too—but in a more decorative way, looking a little like Shangri-la. For at Cornel's home up in the hills, with mountains all around the pool, cabana and barbecue are entirely surrounded by fragrant orange trees.

"At night," Cornel says, "the deer which roam the mountains jump my five-foot fence to drink at my pool. I see them often in the moonlight."

The pool of Preston Sturges, the director-producer who gives us pictures like "The Miracle of Morgan's Creek" and "The Great McGinty," is practically a small summer resort. It's irregularly shaped and surrounded by informal groups of trees. His old-fashioned friendly house is an annex to the pool, really, because of the perfectly enormous playroom which links the two and offers a beer bar right next to the water.

"So," Preston says with a wink, "guests can fall into something reasonably soft."

Actually the stars must enjoy their pools in private as much as they avoid them in public. For the plans of all the new post-war homes and pools are important.

Ray Milland's house is to be built around his pool which will be a perfect circle.

Alan Ladd, a champion diver, talks constantly about the pool he's rebuilding on his new twenty-five-acre ranch out in Hidden Valley. The house on this ranch

No One Year Subscriptions

Because of the unprecedented demand for PHOTOPLAY we cannot possibly print enough copies to supply all who want subscriptions for PHOTOPLAY.

New and renewal subscriptions may be deferred as much as two months until places on our subscription list are available.

Therefore, to limit subscriptions to the number that can be supplied each month, PHOTOPLAY is reluctantly forced to refuse both new and renewal one-year subscriptions. However, we are accepting, subject to delay in servicing, two-year subscriptions at $3.90 and three-year subscriptions at $5.40. These prices apply to U. S. and U. S. Possessions and Territories, Canada, and Newfoundland. For subscription prices to all other countries see information at foot of contents page.

We will continue to accept one-year subscriptions for the members of the armed forces.

burned down fifteen years ago and never was rebuilt. The pool wasn't damaged. Alan, however, intends to retile it. And already he has built, by himself, a huge trellis for wisteria. So there'll be shade when the valley weather grows hot.

The most fantastic pool in town belongs to Kurt Kreuger. To build his pool, Kurt, who lives high up in the hills, had to have that part of his terrain which juts out over the city flattened and excavated. His pool appears to hang on a ledge. Those who swim in it can look down on Hollywood.

The most costly pool in town, if not the most elaborate or decorative, belongs to Ginger Rogers. When Ginger built her home high on a hilltop she allowed $85,000 for the entire enterprise: house, pool, roads, landscaping—everything! But her pool alone cost nearly that because of the series of deep criss-cross concrete reinforcements and the heavy retaining wall that the undertaking required—unless Ginger wanted the first heavy rain to wash her pool downhill.

The smallest and least expensive pool in town, as you wouldn’t expect, belongs to Esther Williams! Esther’s pool, which came with the house, looks like a hole in a vacant lot. The water pumps aren’t even screened with shrubbery. And when Esther and Ben Gage, also a good swimmer, are in the pool together there’s no room for splashing.

The largest natural pool in town is enjoyed by the Sinatras. It's Toluca Lake, one quarter of a mile long and three hundred feet wide. Where his lawn meets the shore Frankie has had a boathouse built. On his “pool!” Frank keeps a sailboat and a rowboat and when he gets hungry he can hang out a line and snag a bass. Beside the lake Frankie and Nancy give their famous hot dog parties. And Sunday evenings also they use the lakeside barbecue.

Perhaps the funniest story is that of the luncheon Cole Porter gave beside his beautiful pool not long ago. Paulette Goddard and Burgess Meredith were there. Cary Grant and Betty Hensel, Ethel Barrymore, Virginia Bruce, Fred and Phyllis Astaire, Clifton Webb, Artur Rubenstein and his lovely Nella, Orson Welles. . . .

We sat down to the most delicious cold soup preceded by the usual melon ball cocktail. But when the main dish was due we waited and waited. After about half an hour Cole’s chef rushed up and whispered to him. Cole laughed heartily but said nothing. A little later in came two great platters of chops. I thought mine tasted odd and I noticed Ethel Barrymore didn’t eat hers at all. Which was strange as Cole serves the best food in Hollywood with the possible exception of Arthur Hornblow, epicure par excellence.

The next day, however, Cole telephoned to tell me the whole story. An extra waiter, brought in for the party, who had been carrying the chops from the barbecua, failing to notice where he was going, had dropped ker-plunk into the pool. Whereupon he and the chops had had to be rescued, one by one. And chops, evidently, taste no better after a baptism!

Installing a pool—a little number about fifteen by twenty-five feet with filter, circulator and pump costs about $3,500 and involves a monthly upkeep of twenty-five dollars—is only the beginning. Next comes special landscaping, pool-side furniture, gay rubber animals resembling nothing recorded by any zoologist, dressing rooms, showers, diving boards—or perhaps a gooseneck-shaped platform like that of which Jon Hall and Frances Langford are so proud. Their pool, fifty feet long, is plastic lined, of an elliptical shape with sweeping steps leading into the water.

Tyrone Power and Annabella, on the other hand, have supplemented their pool by an outside stairway leading to the second floor of their house—so it’s not necessary to trample through the first floor in dripping clothes.

Some pools, naturally, become more famous than others. Lucille Ball’s, for instance. The pool at her Chatsworth ranch house looks like Hawaii, for it is bordered by palm trees with a grass hut to house the barbecue. Its fame springs not alone from its beauty, but from the lavish birthday parties Lucille gives here every year—the only parties, incidentally, that ever see Lionel Barrymore any more. They’re costume parties always and last year Lionel, arriving in his wheel chair, wore the flowing mustache and bright striped bathing suit of an old-fashioned lifesaver.

Even Hollywood’s bigger and better apartment houses have pools; like the Sunset Plaza where Joan Caulfield lives. This pool is Joan’s special delight. “During the war it wasn’t too good; empty most of the time,” she says. “But now the owner’s son, back from overseas, keeps it brightened up—even heated on chilly days!”

Some of the stars prefer pools with a rustic atmosphere—spend young fortunes, in fact, to have them reminiscent of an old swimming hole.

Henry Fonda’s pool is adorned by a little rustic bridge and dressing rooms which look like a boat house. With the mountains in the distance it all has a decidedly New England air.

Allan Jones’s new pool is to simulate a pond in a forest. His diving board will look like a huge tree branch hanging out over the water and ferns and moss will cover any and all signs of concrete.

Laraine Day’s pool is naturally rustic: a dammed-up brook. “It’s idyllic,” she says, “except when it rains and my ‘pool’ overflows over the soft white sand I carted in so I can lounge on a sandy bank in the sun. Then the mess is horrible!”

They started something, those old Angelinos and first movie stars, when they thought they had the ultimate in luxury if a concrete pit graced their back garden. I well remember the way those old pools were drained and refilled only when the fungus became too thick to swim in or bred too many mosquitoes. For, naturally, it wasn’t long before local engineers, masons and architects decided Hollywood swimming pools could be made to pay off in a big way—and they have!

NIGHT AND DAY: In advance of this film, Victor has issued a large and enjoyable album of eight Cole Porter pops sung by Allan Jones, including "Rosalie," "I Got You under My Skin," the title tune, and the deathless "Begin the Beguine."

THE LOST WEEKEND: Another fine example of mood music for movies written by Miklos Rozsa, composer of the "Spellbound" score, which it closely resembles. Al Goodman's Victor orchestra, with Vladimir Sokoloff at the piano, does the recording. For just about the oddest diskpairing of the year, President Truman's favorite "Missouri Waltz" is the companion piece.

DENNIS MORGAN: Warners' star gives out with a rousing package of melodies from Romberg's operetta "The Desert Song." This Columbia album leaves something to be desired but Morgan's fans will cry for it.

THE KID FROM BROOKLYN: Danny Kaye's latest Goldwyn nugget of mirth and music has two hits—"You're the Cause of It All" and "I Love an Old-Fashioned Song"—and Freddy Martin (Victor) plays them handsomely. For a more intimate interpretation of the latter tune try The Three Suns Majestic platter.

FRANK SINATRA: The Voice rejoices with two fine songs from "Centennial Summer," Jerome Kern's posthumous film work. "All through the Day," the love song, is already a full-blown hit but "Two Hearts Are Better Than One" should get plenty of support, thanks to the way Sinatra wraps it up on this Columbia disk. For another slick Sinatra pressing try "You Are Too Beautiful."

MAKE MINE MUSIC: Walt Disney's musical treat has all the music makers playing overtime. Benny Goodman provides the rhythm number, "All the Cats Join in" (Columbia) and Noro Morales (Majestic) and Desi Arnaz (Victor) groove "Without You," the former playing it as a bole while Arnaz gives it a rumba beat.

LOVE STORY: This film will be remembered for its elaborate theme, "Cornish Rhapsody," a piece comparable to "Warsaw Concerto." Henri Rene's orchestra (Victor) think so well of it they devote both sides of their latest platter to it.

ONE MORE TOMORROW: The title tune is a pleasant love song. Tex Beneke's Glenn Miller Orchestra has turned it out for Victor.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: Victor has just issued a flawless album of Grofé's colorful tone poem, "Grand Canyon Suite" with the incomparable Arturo Toscanini conducting the NBC Symphony. . . Rise Stevens brings stirring excerpts from Bizet's "Carmen" in a new Columbia Masterworks edition . . . Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, played by the exciting Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky is another Victor classic . . . For piano magic, try Vladimir Horowitz's Victor rendition of Prokofieff's Sonata No. 7, Opus 83 . . . And for those whose musical tastes are undisciplined, Stravinsky's "Song of the Nightingale" has just been disked by Victor. The Cincinnati Symphony plays it with Eugene Goossens on the podium.

Latin, Love and Lana

Outside it was the golf course; in Lima, but a few minutes' drive away, was the Grand Bolívar Hotel for dancing, and fragrant Oriental food in the many Chinese and Japanese restaurants. There was much to learn, such as Chocita, for example, located on a hill a distance from the city where people go to see the sun.

"See the sun?" Lana echoed amazement. "Certainly." "In Lima it does not appear for weeks at a time."

And there was the souvenir Lana was to give to the city which the newspaper had begged for a photograph to be printed on the paper's front page. "Por intermedio de El Comercio," Lana wrote, "salud al simpatético e culturizado público peruano." Through El Comercio, I saluted friendly and cultured Peruvian public.

As the plane took to the South American skies again, Lana could see from her window the famous Mount Misti, a great volcano with conical sides below, grassless plains stretching out for a thousand miles, where no rain has failed for forty years, and then, an astounding forest of oil wells that seemed suddenly to ground beneath her.

In kaleidoscopic succession followed names and sights they had never imagined; refueling at Antígua in Colómbia, Santiago in its emerald-green setting, taking off to fly across the majestic Andes, where at times the jagged mountains soared above the wing tips leading altitude on the sloping far side to skid low over the flat, treeless pampas of Argentina, circling and coming in at the capital of Argentina, storm center of international politics—Buenos Aires.

Whether it was the wait for the plane, the pastel dress, black hat and mink coat she wore, or just Lana, the crowds surged in so uncontrollably that she was swept away. She was separated and swallowed up by swirling streams of people, airport attendants and happy admirers. Not until separate cars raced into the famous hotel did anyone know what had happened to the other.

In a week it seemed as though they had always lived in the Plaza, as though they had always walked down the handsome main street, Calle Florida, where the chic stores were located, as though they knew the night clubs of Buenos Aires as well as they did Mocambo in Hollywood—The Rendezvous, the Tropicana, and the Alhambra Palace Roof (much like the St. Regis Roof in New York), where the samba, the rumba, the conga were danced.

And always around her, whether she was at the Grill Room of her own hotel or the black-skinned Hindu makes the curries for the Parador, as she was at the colorful San Ysidro racetrack or at one of the great ranchos where feasts were spread in her honor, Lana felt the presence of Argentina's pre-election campaign for President, which had been going on for weeks after she had gone. Violence and impassioned opinions clashed in the background darkening with the threat of angry mobs and strange sounds of bullets the week she spent there.

From the ferment and unrest of Argentina they flew north to Rio de Janeiro. Rio's greeting was hysteria, pandemonium. As the plane circled for land, the loudspeaker began to shout news of her arrival to the thousands packed in the airport below. Lana, watching from the plane window, suddenly was frightened. She had been away, now, more than two weeks, had flown nearly 8,000 miles, and the cold that hadn't seemed to bother her in Buenos Aires had been growing steadily worse since they left. Crowds jamming near the plane no longer seemed interested, adoring audiences but relentless mobs.

"Hold my hand," Sara instructed and Lana, with a smile, wearing a black dress and flower trimmed hat, stepped from the plane. In the next minute the crowd had crushed in on her. She and Sara were wrenched apart, she felt as though she were being trampled down into the presses, knowing it quite seemed to see the police escort. Suddenly she burst into tears. Restrained, the crowd dropped back a little and allowed the police to escort her and whisk her into car.

While the Brazil press had concentrated, Lana's exhaustion and the cold determined them to proceed immediately for a week's rest in the mountain resort town of Petropolís, forty miles outside of Rio.

Rest? Certainly the spacious Quindininha Hotel, a fabulous ten-million-dollar structure, half Swiss chalet, half Walt Disney castle, with its giant bird cage, flushing with tropical birds in the lobby, should have been an ideal spot for relaxing. But no sooner were Lana and Sara established in the Presidential Suite, which was once occupied by King Carlos of Rumania, than the corridors began to hum with people to see "the great North American star of sex appeal."

Still suffering from the annoying cold, Lana got out of her sick bed to express her appreciation for the honor that was being paid her by everyone from fans to diplomats. As a matter of fact, the moment had clearly come for a bit of diplomacy on her own part. For the Brazilian press had championed the disappointment of the people at not having had their share of her presence. And whatever there had been a couple of incidents. Yes, clearly, explanations were in order.

And the girl with the white gold hair woke up on February 8—her twenty-fifth birthday! She should have a party for the press at the Quindininha complete with birthday cake. She would—and she did. What's more, the press loved it. And they loved her in her short black silk skirt and polka dot blouse. It was here they dubbed her "Miss Whirlwind." With the strains of the "Happy Birthday" song still vibrating in the air, Lana launched into the delicate matter.

Through the formal medium of interpreter, she began in a voice still hoarse from her cold: "Since I left Buenos Aires I have been ill with a cold. When I arrived at Porto Alegre I didn't want to cause a bad impression, so I wished to stay in the plane. But this was impossible. I asked them not to photograph me because I didn't look well. This is the cause of that unfavorable attitude against me. In São Paulo I was able to remain in the plane. By the way, I'm not on a publicity trip, I'm on my vacation and not an artist's tour, I like the fans, but for all that do not want to see them or appear ill, disfigured or indisposed to them. And this has caused another bad impression. Here the Argentine mobs and gunners got out and you know it has made me unhappy. But you also know that all this has been the work of chance, a quirk of circumstance, that I am not at all to blame."

Thus the Brazilian press was conquered. Lana could then enjoy the LOVE WENT PACKING

Through . . . done for . . . all our dreams and sharing, and our little "love nest" of a home! . . . Foolish me—not to realize it was my fault our happiness was spoiled. I thought I understood about feminine hygiene. But it took my doctor to save the day for us. He pointed out, oh so emphatically: "Once-in-a-while care just isn't enough"—and told me to use "Lysol" brand disinfectant for douching—always.

BUT CAME HOME TO STAY

New lease on love at our house now . . . and a happy Mr. and Mrs. Of course I took the doctor's advice . . . always use dependable "Lysol" now, for douching. No more salt, soda or other homemade solutions for me; after the doctor said "Lysol" is a proved germ-killer that cleanses thoroughly, yet gently. So easy and economical to use, too — there's no reason to be careless . . . risk happiness . . . ever!

Check these facts with your Doctor

Proper feminine hygiene care is important to the happiness and charm of every woman. So, douse thoroughly with correct "Lysol" solution . . . always! Powerful cleaner—"Lysol"'s great spreading power means it reaches deeply into folds and crevices to search out germs. Proved germ-killer—uniform strength, made under continued laboratory control. . . . far more dependable than homemade solutions. Non-caustic—"Lysol" douching solution is non-irritating, not harmful to vaginal tissues. Follow easy directions. Cleanly odor—disappears after use; deodorizes. More women use "Lysol" for feminine hygiene than any other method. (For FREE feminine hygiene booklet, write Lehn & Fink, 615 Fifth Ave., New York 22, N. Y.)

For Feminine Hygiene use "Lysol" always!

What Should I Do?

The experience of your friend was infuriating and it’s a shame that that man couldn’t have been crueling around in mud, dodging lead during the war so that he could appreciate the efforts of every single person in uniform.

There is nothing to say in defense of some of the comments of civilians and GIs except that a civilian always remains an individual and civilian conduct (male or female) is judged or its separate merit or shame. On the other hand, any person in uniform is part of an organization, and his actions reflect upon a mass instead of upon himself alone. I don’t say that there is justice in this—there isn’t; I say only that many human minds operate in that fashion.

Don’t worry. Just as ninety-five per cent of the WACs are fine women, so they are judged by ninety-five per cent of the population at home.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am seventeen and my mother is thirty-four. She is very pretty in spite of her age. She has been a widow since I was six and she has worked herself into a very good job. Working in the same company is a man four years younger than Mother who seems to like her very well.

He is lots of fun and very handsome. When he went into service he asked my mother for a picture of herself. Mother and I both had our pictures taken (separately, not together), so I gave him one, too.

Now that he is discharged, he comes to our house frequently, but he acts as if I’m not even there, outside of speaking to me politely. One afternoon he did take me shopping—we were buying a birthday present for my mother—and we laughed and sang as we drove along. We had a wonderful time and I thought he was beginning to pay attention to me, but when we got home he only talked to Mother.

When he comes to the house I put aside anything I’ve been doing and go sit in the room with Mother and this man. Sometimes I think this annoys Mother, but she never says anything. She sort of smiles. I like this man very, very much. What can I do to make him notice me? I’m prettier than my mother, I’m sure.

Ginger

Suppose that the captain of the football team began to ask you for dates; suppose you were pleased and flattered and went with him whenever he asked you. Suppose he had to be away and asked you for a picture, whereupon your mother also gave him a picture. Suppose that when he returned and came to your home your mother always made it a point to drop whatever he was doing and join you. Suppose, also, that she flirted with him, doing her best to attract his attention.

How would you feel about that?

I can almost hear you lifting your voice in furious complaint.

However, that is exactly what you are doing to your mother. Apparently you think that thirty-four is an advanced age for your mother, but that a man of thirty is not beyond your scope.

Your mother must be a very forbearing woman; having been a widow for eleven years, she certainly is entitled to some happiness after her time of grief and hard work. Perhaps, if you would begin to treat this man like a father instead of a potential boy friend, she might BORDERLINE ANEMIA* can ruin your looks and good times!

Almost everywhere you go, you see pale people, listless people, people whose enjoyment of life seems at low ebb. Yes, and so often it's a Borderline Anemia—resulting from a ferro-nutritional deficiency of the blood—that deprives them of vigor and fun.

Medical records reveal that up to 68% of the women examined—many men—have such a Borderline Anemia. Their red blood cells are too small to supply full vitality. Your red blood cells are your supply line of energy!

Ironized Yeast Tablets to build up red blood cells

So, if you're tired without good reason—if your color's poor—you may need the help of Ironized Yeast Tablets. Ironized Yeast Tablets are specially formulated to help combat Borderline Anemia and its effects on your red blood cells...appearance...energy. Of course, continuing tiredness, listlessness and pallor may be caused by other conditions, so consult your physician regularly. But when you have this Borderline Anemia and envy others their energy and good looks, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They can help you build up your blood—and along with it your natural vitality and attractiveness.

Dear Miss Colbert:

My oldest brother is thirty-three (I am fifteen) and has never worked a day in his life to my certain knowledge. My mother has always, until recently, sent him weekly or monthly sums on which to live. Now that he is at home, he just gives him as much money as she has whenever he asks for it. He wasn’t in the Army, so he isn’t war weary, and he isn’t an imbecile because he earned his degree at our state university.

When he was away, he even wrote Mother—when she couldn’t give him as much money as he thought he needed—and suggested that she get money from my other two brothers. When I had my teeth straightened, he wrote horrible letters saying that nature knew best (I had buck teeth). He said he could use the money to better advantage.

Now he has come home “to take over management of the family” he says. My mother owns some property, and so does my father. My father tried to reason with Mother, telling her that they had to set their feet down at some time, but she only cries and she says she won’t have a child of hers starving to death.

I know where my brother hides the letters he receives and where he keeps his diary. Don’t you think I should investigate? I’m positive that there’s something wrong with this entire setup, and I think he should be exposed before he takes everything we have.

Ella Arnet D.

At fifteen, one is likely to form conclusions without fully understanding a situation. It is obvious that there is an unusual case in point existing in your family; since it puzzles you, naturally it is a hopeless quandary to someone entirely strange to the problem.

However, if you cause trouble with your brother, you will only be causing your mother further tears.

Under no circumstance should you trespass among your brother’s private papers. How would you like it if he sneaked into your room and read your letters from girl friends, and your diary—provided you keep one. Such cheap conduct would infuriate you, wouldn’t it?

And suppose you forgot your honor to the extent of snooping and discovered something in your brother’s background. Could you break your mother’s heart, simply to get rid of your brother?

I think the thing for you to do is to keep yourself busy with your school work and activities; pretend that there is no such person as your brother, do anything to make life easy and pleasant for your mother.

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am seventeen and a senior in high school. Last year I met a good-looking fellow just my age. According to certain stories I have heard, he is—to put it bluntly—a “wolf.” I have never had a date with him, but we used to sit beside each other in classes and we talked quite a bit. One day he handed me a letter to which my name was signed. I read it over and couldn’t believe my eyes. It was quite a love letter and told this boy that I thought of him all through the day, dreamed of him at night and really got a whizz out of talking to him in class. He asked me, looking puzzled, “Is all this true?”

Before I thought, I said, “Yes, it’s true even if I didn’t write the letter as you know because you would recognize my handwriting.”

Then he said he knew who had written the letter—one of my best girl friends. After saying that, he simply laughed and walked away.

Since that time I have seen him often with this girl. I try to act natural and friendly toward them, but I get so nervous and jealous that I can’t do anything with a steady mind or a controlled heartbeat.

Please suggest a sure way for me to forget him, or better yet, a way to make him ask me for a date.

Corinne N.

I think I can suggest a way for you to forget this boy as well as the girl whom you describe as a “friend.”

Believe me, she is no friend of yours. Obviously you took her into your confidence to the extent of expressing your admiration of this boy to her. She repaid this trust by making you look foolish.

I can’t begin to state the intense contempt that I feel for a girl who will write the type of letter this girl wrote, then sign another girl’s name.

So much for the girl. If the boy, knowing what she did, still likes her, he certainly isn’t worth another moment of your thoughts. Please don’t moon over a boy who undoubtedly has joined your letter-writing friend in hearty laughter behind your back.

Look around you for some boy who admires and respects you, then enjoy his companionship.

Where nobody acted snooty because he or she had more money, nicer clothes, or a fancier education. It’s silly to be a snob or snide—when real people have so much more fun!

published a letter from a Chinese-American girl who felt that her heritage was ruining her life and keeping her from friendship and the fulfillment of her dreams.

In our school are a boy and a girl who are full-blooded Chinese; their parents were born in China, but they were born in this country, so they are American citizens. The boy is president of our student body and is one of the most popular boys in school; his sister is running for secretary of our class.

They go to our parties, sometimes together, but usually each has a date with some other student. Both are wonderful dancers, have wonderful senses of humor, are always “in” on everything.

In our school are all nationalities, but it doesn’t seem important. What is important to us is that people in our school are good sports, lots of fun, enter in and don’t go around feeling sorry for themselves.

I think the girl who wrote in should work on improving herself, having the same manners and good sportsmanship and school spirit as the students around her have, and then she’ll be convinced that she has been at fault—not the others.

Altheda S.

play, failed to give her full address, I am publishing the following letter in the hope that she, and others with the same interests, will write to Miss Wheeler.)

Dear Miss Colbert:

I was very interested in the girl who wanted to be a fashion designer but was confined to a wheel chair. She and I are somewhat alike. I have been ordered by a specialist to be very careful of my health for a year. I cannot work or go to school. I have a bad heart murmur which has been developing since I was in sixth grade.

I graduated from high school in May, 1945. My “careful year” won’t be over until just before Christmas, 1946. At first I was extremely sorry for myself, but now I am taking a home course in designing and enjoying it to the full.

I only wish I knew that other student in a wheel chair because she would make a wonderful pen pal for me. If you have her address, will you please forward this letter to her?

K-K-K-Katie!

Usually, where Kathryn Grayson is concerned, it's "K-K-K-Katie!" With extra "K's" and double exclamation points.

She's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's triple-threat thrush—this saucy-faced soprano whose talents are as wide ranged as her voice. Her latest performance in "Two Sisters from Boston" is bringing forth raves now. However, adjectively speaking, she has always held her own and is constantly causing Leo's whiskers to curl, whether from purest pleasure or sheer surprise. There are no dull moments around Kathryn—to whom life has always dealt the unexpected and gotten it right back from her.

She is an unpredictable tomboy with a God-given voice, a gay gamin grin and a rebelliousness for routine. The voice is positively her only operatic symptom. She's a far cry from anything that smacks of the dignified diva. She's in her best voice when attired in slacks walking with her dog, usually trilling an aria from "La Bohème" as she swings gaily along.

She's refreshingly natural and unaffected. The one swank article of clothing in which she takes great pride is her new mink coat, concerning which she says proudly, "Well, that's one thing I've done—bought my own mink coat."

HER voice and personality just don't match. So far as that's concerned, nothing much matches about her. She's always scanning new horizons, admits she "hates planning anything." Despite a reverence for opera, she loves to try to sing jazz—but I have a rotten bad, always manage to get five beats in there somewhere." She's old fashioned in many ways, ultramodern in others. Yesterday and tomorrow. Yet, for Kathryn "tomorrow" actually never comes. She lives on tips-toe, ready to take off, but there's another side to her that anchors her down.

Accommodatingly enough, even her hazel eyes change color, switching from a calm, steady gray to a brown shot with yellow sparks when she's mad. There's a gaity about her pretty mouth, a wind-blown, carefree look about her hair, a shrug-so-scrubbed turn-up look about her whole face that give one an immediate lift. Yet there's a piquant sweetness about her, and occasionally a sadness. An almost old-fashioned girl who would love more than anything to have roots, if she wasn't afraid to have them. Whose nomadic living since childhood makes her crave—though not trust—the stability that she sees many others have.

This is the girl who loves to work around her lovely big Stone Canyon home. Who likes to try her hand at whipping up Parker House rolls and makes a production of raking leaves, re-planting roses, looking at her camellias and critically inspecting her orange and lemon trees. The Kathryn who wants four children some day. "Four drove my mother crazy. I guess that would be enough for me."

And who has tried to make a go of a marriage that seemed ill-fated from the start. The anchor slipped up on that one.

Her disregard for any sideline comments is typical of Kathryn. She usually just goes along in her own happy-go-lucky way. By nature she is very amiable and easygoing and, actually never fights anyone unless she's hurt. Then she'll fight a buzzsaw. She flares up quickly and you can read the small print by the flame. But she's over it swiftly and all is forgotten. She never sulks, pouts or goes "feminine" on anybody. From childhood she's fought her own fights—often holding who calls her "High C Susie," and with whom she became great friends. This probably accounts, in part, for the relaxed performance she gives in the picture. If she'd ever cut loose—she'd be great," someone once said of Kathryn. She "cuts loose" in this one.

Louis B. Mayer, who has always believed in and watched her career carefully, says enthusiastically that she's "terrifically" good in it! "Talk about sex! She's our glamour girl."

After thanking him appreciatively, "our glamour girl" was seen waggling across the camera screen, singing to herself at "Pettie, My Dear" and others as they came in.

She loves to listen to Frank Sinatra, Jane Powell, Johnny Johnston and likewise to another student at her voice studio. Once when a comparatively unknown young coloratura was about to be dropped by the studio, Kathryn, who liked the girl very much and had a great deal of faith in her, went personally to Mr. Mayer's office to plead her cause. "If you'll keep this kid on, you can take her salary out of mine," she offered. She's always very quick to praise another singer. Recently when passing by the music department, she heard Tony Martin singing a high B-flat full voice and went running in to congratulate him on singing excitedly. "Tony, that was beautiful!"

She's always been equally as ambitious for her brother, Michael, who has a fine tenor voice, and her pretty blonde sister, Fran. She's the only doubt about her own talent. All of the Hedricks sing. Back in St. Louis they used to hold regular family "Sunday sings," and what they can do to "Jesus Loves Me"!

Sundays at Kathryn's Stone Canyon place is a little like "One Man's Family" with a La Bohemian background. All the clan gather there, including her parents, her brothers and sisters, her friends, sweaters, children, and, of course, her sister Frances and her baby, Jeffrey Myron, who now live with her. The children love to play at "Clumsy," which they call Kathryn. The family "Annie Lorty" gave her first parts. She's always singing snatches of something, no matter where she is or what she's doing; whether she's singing her adhered nephew, Jeff, to sleep, talking with Throckmorton or just leaning back on a prop on the set between shots and singing to three graps up on the catwalk. No one in Kathryn's family can remember when she didn't sing. In St. Louis they lived across the street from Forrest Park, home of the zoo and also the amphitheater in which the St. Louis Municipal Opera plays. Kathryn couldn't afford tickets to any of these, but she would go up to the top of the hill around the amphitheater and sit down and listen, watching the figures on the stage below. Used to dream of playing in "La Boheme." The dreams were always better than the operas," she laughs. "If it's a dream you might as well do it up right. I was always looking down with jewels, feather plumes and stuff."

Then one evening at dusk she crossed the street, stepped upon the stage of the amphitheater, and sang the "Chorus Scene" from "Lucia di Lammermoor." Her audience was a deaf little old janitor with a beard, who encouraged her to come again. Sometimes she would go over at He'd gone around town for three days selecting everything. On credit— and a minister's family has very little savings— he had to have a good stock because he wouldn't be carrying any cash. The few suitcases were hidden in the church ushers' quarters. At the thought of someone discovering them, his heart and the clock ticked so loudly seemed like they were trying to wake the house up.

Getting out of the house on a Wednesday night was as easy as taking your cap if the hall racket. "See you at prayer-meeting—" Dad said, and the screen door slammed behind him. The church was already aglow, a ray from one of the windows poking a snappy finger of light into the bushes where the suitcases were hidden. He panted a little until he'd dragged them out and stood them on full weight, braced at the end of his arms. All that inned goods, that was what it did.

Dick Standifer was in the alley of his house, like he said he'd be. Dick had discovered a sinewy, toneless thread of a nose straight as an Indian's Stockler, ad with a better-fed look than Dana, who in it all off. As this was Dick's second suit to "hit," she spoke with a light swagger in his voice:

"We'll keep to the alleys until we get the freight yards—"

The small town of Uvalde, Texas, was pretty much its own business in this farm, dusk-filled hour, however. A good percentage of its 3,800 citizens, some of whom had moved with fiery, straight-faced daughters from the Lone Star states, were at the prayer meeting, duly occupied with saving their souls. After the first couple of blocks of unmolested alley, Dana started putting his feet down and losing interest in his own thoughts.

The freight yard was likewise deserted, but they kept well in the shadow of the water tank. Most of the trains went ballasting right over, but it was an impatient four hours before one of them stopped to fill the boilers.

"Wait'll the fireman gets on the other side of the engine—" hissed Dick, "and then there's nothing but the beat of the wheels that you're hearing—"

ARVER DANA ANDREWS lay flattened on top of the freight—facing forward— for sixteen, no one ever looks back. Uvalde, on the Nueces, was slapping behind, before him lay a shining track and the whole wide world. He was Dick Whittington, on his way to San Antonio town. He'd got a job, something easy at first, probably a uniform chauffeur for a block-long mouseline. After that he would become a captain of the engine, and then he'd save all enough money to buy the olks a mansion. No more taking those mail snubs from the kind of people who seemed to feel a minister's family lived in a different galaxy. Dick was not a snob, and he would never induce his family to suffer the inconvenience of the various order from teachers and parents, either—as a man of the world, he would be beyond that.

... in his head for a deep gulp of the wild, sweet air of freedom. He coughed. The taste was acrid and smoke filled, with the locomotive belching full his mouth. His ears were plugged with wadding, none of Dana's brothers could ever blow his eyes out of their sockets. When he laid his head flat to stop his coughing, the head rolled from side to side—he was a neck of no anchor for that. Something about his stomach's pressing hard against the car top was beginning to nauseate him—it wasn't any good to raise his body in an arc, because already his fingers ached with their desperate clutch on the rolling roof.

The friendly masques-flats of Uvalde and the familiar dull gleam of the Nueces waters were gone. The scenery now seemed to be, like his stomach, disturbed by increasing undulation.

"Cold, riding up here— isn't it?" shouted Dana, pulling his newly bought corduroy jacket about him.

"What did you expect? It's November, headdin' on to Christmas—" yelled Dick. The long, lonesome whistle of another train echoed somewhere in the distance.

At Kelly Field, Texas, a trainman walking the cars flashed his lantern in their faces, he cut a gruffly, with a swing of his heavy boot. The suitcases hit the gravel first. Following closely thereafter, the travelers touched the ground with their feet and then their knees. Their numbed legs had gone out from under them.

"You rub your cramps out and I'll rub your legs out," said Dick. It took a while before they were able to lift them. That was not the only difficulty of walking. The eerie world of fog which closed them in had neither distance nor direction. The tracks underneath were slippery. Dick had wondered if Dana, remembered them in the daytime, were always running off to some bright and definite goal. Lying tangled and stationary in the pre-dawn, the rails seemed to be in a chill swerve of indecision.

"There'll be a string of empties standin' somewheres around—we can crawl into one until daylight. Watch out for yard blocks, that's Indian nose was lifted, as he could smell their way along.

An empty was not Dana's greatest desire at this time. The way he had planned things, there would be a comfortable cabin at the side of the road, its light breaking to them through the rain, or sleet, or whatever weather they ran into. A kindly old man would answer his knock on the door, and feed him, of course.

... there would be a steaming meal on the table, which the old man and his kindly wife would beg them to light into, and afterwards, a feather ticking waiting to receive the overstuffed bodies. After several days of steaming meals and feather beds, he would be breaking the news to them that he had to move on. This would be a slight pain, as the girl able, tears streaming down their faces, would beg him to stay and be their very own son.

It was to impress the kindly old folks that he had brought some clean shirts along. Filling hair as soon as possible could not induce him to stay, of course. For their offer, he intended to reward them handsomely later on...

... the captain of the engine, free from its smell, was a sultry shelter. Stepping gingerly into its forbidding blackness, Dana felt with his foot for the expected floor of straw. He stepped as his toe struck a slime of rotten bananas instead. Cupping a lighted match in his hand, Dick found them a clear corner in which to sit down. Dana took a can of condensed milk from his bag. He raised the top of it, he could never get enough of at home—but somehow he was tinged with the flavor of moldy orange and banana peels.

A snapping sound came from Dick. At home, Dana's brothers snored. Dick's familiar eyes and sandy hair were invisible—he was a suddenly noisy and intangible creature, encountered in the dark. The darkness of the fog pressed and seeped in from outdoors, and with it came the lost walling of the train...

As your skin that "dates" you!

SO HERE'S a worthwhile tip—make every effort to keep your skin at its lovely best by guarding against loss of natural skin moisture. For many beauty experts tell us that the longer your skin retains its natural moisture, the longer it will remain smooth and supple and beautiful.

Avoid, as far as possible, the things which dry out your skin: Neglect of proper skin care...too much exposure to winter's harsh winds and summer's hot, drying sun.

Choose Your Creams Carefully. Use creams that will do something for your skin. They needn't be the most expensive...try the two fine creams that bear the proud name of Chas. H. Phillips.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Skin Cream. Contains "cholesterol"...a special ingredient that protects against loss of natural skin moisture. Also soothing, softening oils that assist in keeping skin smooth and supple.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Cleansing Cream. Especially prepared to remove make-up, surface dirt and accumulations from outer pore openings.

Both creams contain genuine Phillips' MILK OF MAGNESIA.

The Intimate Story of Ingrid

And now I shall venture where angels fear to tread. I shall tell you a story for which I fully expect to get kicked down the long fieldstone steps of the Lindstrom house, the booter being Dr. Peter A. Lindstrom, Ingrid's husband and undisputed Lord and master of the menage.

The total impact of his six feet, two inches, 174 pounds and dormant Swedish wrath will be an automatic expression of his innate aversion to publicity plus a keen sensitivity to the ethics of his profession. Because of this genuine and admirable combination of modesty and dignity, little is known about him.

Because of the publicity which is concomitant to his wife's fame, he diligently avoids making public appearances with her. Indeed, the only times he has risked the flashlights were at the last two Academy Awards events, but even at these he managed in such a way as to confound and outmaneuver the cameramen.

The Lindstroms attended the Academy March 7th function in company with Leo McCarey, director of "Bells."

Knowing that Photoplay's ubiquitous Hymie Fink was laying for him, the next day I asked Dr. Lindstrom how he made out. He grinned and said: "Oh, I let Ingrid and Leo get out of the car together, and all the photographers crowded in front of them. I stood on the side and had a wonderful time; nobody paid any attention to me. I started to laugh—I enjoyed it so much. Then suddenly one of them saw me and started to take my picture. But I don't think he got a very good picture, I was laughing so much."

The Lindstroms first met when Ingrid was seventeen. He was then a young dentist who aspired someday to become a surgeon. Dentistry was to him merely a means to an end. It enabled him to make a decent living while he was studying the complexities of medicine. Concurrently, he found time to teach at a dental college, grueling, back-breaking regimen, possible only to a stubbornly determined individual such as the future fugitive from photographers. In 1940, when the film capital had decided to keep for its own the iridescent beauty and rare talent of Bergman, Dr. Lindstrom, who had been her most valued mentor, decided to complete the few remaining months of his medical studies here.

After one-and-a-half years at the University of Rochester, New York, he graduated for his M.D. and then took a year of internship in neuro-surgery at the University of Stanford Hospital. He is now specializing in that branch (brain and nerves) at the Los Angeles County General Hospital, where the rewards are measured in terms of human service rather than in sizable fees.

Ingrid, who knows better than anyone how hard he had worked to achieve his goal, freely expresses her pride in him and her gratitude that he is enabled to pursue the course of his uncommon skills without regard for economic problems. He is now senior resident in neuro-surgery at the General Hospital.

The climax to this elusive story occurred during Christmas of 1945. Following is a verbatim quotation from the Los Angeles Times of December 28, 1945: "A desperate young mother, on her knees at the General Hospital beside her stricken seven-year-old daughter, yesterday laid her slim hopes for the beautiful child’s recovery from a grave brain injury at the feet of Him who once proclaimed that children were ‘of the Kingdom of God.’

The child for whom medical science has done its very best and for whose recovery a whole neighborhood has been working and praying since she was mowed down by an automobile Christmas Eve, is Margaret Eades, of 1107 S. Grand Ave.

“The left door handle of the car... pierced Margaret’s brain in the accident... as the child went on an errand.

“Quickly a crowd gathered... Joe Passalacqua, twenty-nine, cafe proprietor... comforted the child until... an ambulance crew took charge. Surgeons told the mother, widowed only two weeks ago, that it would require the services of an expensive brain specialist to remove the metal from Margaret’s brain.

“Margaret’s mother... not only didn’t have the money, but the rent on her modest cottage was already overdue. And there were two other children to care for, with another anticipated within a few months. Officer Nelson reported this to Passalacqua. The latter pulled out a checkbook and pledged to pay $10,000—or even more if necessary—to fly a brain specialist out here.

THAT was the gist of the Times article. It was not until the second of January that I learned who the “anonymous” surgeon was, and it came about because the Associated Press had run the story down.

One of their men called me and asked what I knew about it. I knew nothing. He wanted to know if I could arrange an interview with Dr. Lindstrom or if Ingrid would talk about her husband. “I think not,” I said. “She knows too well how he feels about publicity.”

However, since he was a reporter and had access to the General Hospital he called on Dr. Lindstrom.

That evening I asked the doctor about the case. “Why don’t you tell me about these things?” I asked. “Oh, no,” he grinned.

“A reporter came to the hospital today and asked me if I was the little girl’s doctor. I said ‘no’ and gave him the name of the doctor in charge of her ward. That was the truth, technically I was not her doctor.”

And that’s as far as the reporter got. In July, 1945, Ingrid Bergman was in Europe with Jack Benny, Larry Adler and Martha Tilton entertaining American troops. For a few days she lived at the Ritz in Paris. At the same hotel were two gent's, strangers to her, but who were earmarked by date of birth, undamaged, to become her very good friends.

They were Bob Capa, famed photographer, and Irvin Shaw, author and playwright. At twilight both men found themselves in a mood of a sublime companionship. They pondered who might fill this void, and then Capa, a dark, sinister-looking man addicted to roughneck sweaters instead of shirts, recalled that Ingrid Bergman was stopping at the hotel.

“But how’ll we ask her?” Shaw said.

“Write her a note,” said Capa, approaching the tactical operation with the nonchalance of a man dying of yaws.

And forthwith he wrote: “Dear Miss Bergman: We would send you flowers or invite you to dinner but we don’t have Thank World-Famous Surgeon and a Renowned Chemist for THIS NEWER, SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLE OF FEMININE HYGIENE

Modern, well-informed women realize how important douching three or four times a week often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, charm, marriage happiness—how important douching is to combat one of woman's most serious and offending deodorant problems.

But there are still a shocking number of women who do not know what to put in the douche. AND THIS IS SO VERY IMPORTANT!

Wise Women No Longer Use Old-Fashioned Methods

Thanks to a world-famous Surgeon and a renowned Chemist who have given the world the remarkable ZONITE PRINCIPLE—wise women no longer use old-fashioned ineffective or dangerous products.

The ZONITE principle developed by these two great men of science was truly a miracle—the first antiseptic-germicide in the world that was powerful enough yet non-poisonous and wouldn't injure the most delicate tissues.

All Drugstores—No Prescription

Doctors have found that ZONITE's powerful strength and safety to delicate tissues make it of great worth for intimate feminine hygiene.

ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerful, effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that it will not kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

Yet despite its great strength—ZONITE is positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-burning. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without risk of injury.

the popular practice of memorizing and re-telling them. On occasion, however, she will reach into her memory and utilize a story to better illustrate a point.

Her unexpected answers and un-Hollywood views have established her with the press as "good copy." Witness:

While in Canada on a Bond-selling tour, she was presented with an elaborate, crested compact by the Canadian government. In accepting it, she said: "I've never had one of these... I'm so glad. Now I can use one." But the Canadian government might as well know the truth—she has never used it.

In the midst of making "Notorious" she arrived one morning with a swelling over her right temple. She had bumped into a door—believe it or not—which had swung open when she wasn't looking.

There was consternation and widespread concern on the set. Not because the production might be held up, but because of the dastardly impertinence of Chaney directed against the Incomparable Face.

TWO weeks before Christmas, 1945, Ingrid made a personal appearance at the annual Los Angeles Examiner Benefit, staged at the huge Shrine Auditorium, a show which traditionally provides for the needy in the holiday season.

Her presence was the chief attraction and the management, cognizant that she was busily engaged in a picture, assured her that all they expected of her was to make a brief appearance on the stage to welcome the audience; the entertainment itself would be supplied by a big spectacle.

But simply making an appearance, saying "hello" and "glad you're here" does not satisfy Miss Bergman. She never takes the easy, convenient way out of anything. She is satisfied with nothing less than a good job, whatever it is.

She harangued me about her speech for several days prior to the benefit, and late that afternoon it came. That evening she stood before the audience of thousands whose paid admissions were to go to the needy and told them this story:

A rich man said to his minister: "Why is it everybody is always criticizing me for being miserly, when everyone knows that I have made provision to leave everything I possess to charity when I die?"

"Well," said the minister, "let me tell you about the pig and the cow. The pig was lamenting to the cow one day about how unpopular he was. 'People are always talking about your gentleness and your kind eyes,' said the pig. 'Sure, you give meat and milk, but I give even more, I give bacon and ham—I give broccoli and they even pickle my feet! Still nobody likes me. I'm just a pig. Why is this?"

"The cow thought a minute, and then it said: 'Well, maybe it's because I give while I'm still living.'"

A week or so before the start of "Notorious" at RKO she was required to make frequent visits to the studio story conferences, wardrobe, etc. She was parking her inconspicuous coupe off the lot across the street and, like any outside visitor, walking through the main entrance.

When asked why she didn't drive into the lot and park near the dressing room assigned her, she said, "But how can I? The studio is so crowded."

Not asking for special privileges is a very special characteristic of Ingrid Bergman, as for example the question of having coffee on the set.

On the second day of "Notorious" she asked that arrangements be made to have coffee and cakes on the set every mid-afternoon, available to every member of the crew and cast, as had been her custom on every picture and for which she paid. Consultations ensued and she was notified that the studio regretted it was a...
“front office” ruling that such should not be permitted because “it might interfere with the work.” She accepted this with grace and went about her work, but an hour later the property man appeared with a cup of hot, fragrant coffee for her.

“What is this?” she asked.

“They said it was all right for you to have it, Miss Bergman,” he said.

“Then take it away,” was her response. “If the others can’t have it, then I don’t want it.”

On the surface, this was apparently the end of the incident. But word of this soon got around the entire lot and the “front office” found itself in a dilemma. It promptly extricated itself by lifting the ban for the duration of the production!

There was a feeling extant throughout the industry and among the press that Ingrid should have won the Academy Award for 1945. With this she did not concur. “There have been too many good performances,” she said. And when Joan Crawford won a well-deserved sentimental victory, Ingrid, standing in the wings of the Chinese Theater, cried, “I’m so glad!”

Her only regret was that the custom of former years, that of the previous year’s winner presenting the Oscar to the new winner, had been changed. She would have liked very much to tell Joan, before that distinguished audience, how happy she was that Joan had won it.

Joan was equally gracious. After joyfully expressing her surprise and happiness, she added: “I voted for Ingrid Bergman, myself.”

The day after the Awards I went to RKO studio and ran into Cary Grant and two executives engaged in spirited conversation. The subject was the Awards. One of the executives said to me:

“Cary has a good idea. He thinks the Academy should have a special award and give it to Ingrid Bergman every year—whether she makes a picture or not.”

Once again Cary Grant had made a capsule observation that had expressed an international appraisal of Ingrid Bergman.

Her strength, her humor, her sincerity, ... Joe Steele, who knows whereof he speaks, will return in August Photoplay to tell you more about Ingrid Bergman.

Babies, Babies, Babies

And guess whom they use as a sounding board and echo on the baby subject? Me! You'd be surprised how easy it is to trap me into talking about babies. At first I thought the movie queens were genuinely interested in my family. "It's little Wendy?" they'd ask craftily, referring to my three-year-old wonder child. "She's fine!" I'd begin, "and so clever — and — and —" And that far-away look came into their eyes and I'd realize they were waiting for me to finish my boring story so they could start their own.

I don't talk about Wendy any more—well not much, but I'll allow no difference. And it's getting so that I, even I, want to scream, "Enough! Let's not talk about babies!" Besides it's ruining my business. I'm paid to write a column about the news in Hollywood. But what can I do when the only thing that seems to be happening here are babies.

Before Judy Garland's Liza was born Judy was just the glamour girl: we were having little girls. Then Dorothy Lamour had her boy, Johnny. "Gosh," said Judy to husband Vincente Minnelli, "maybe this will break the run!" Judy wanted a girl! But such a girl, she assures you, as weighed in on March 12 at six pounds, ten and a half ounces.

"They called her The Siren of the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital," Judy says proudly when I visit mother and daughter in the dusty pink nursery at the Minnelli home. Liza, listening, widens her blue eyes and coos devastatingly.

"She's beautiful, isn't she?" demands Judy, adding quickly, and that's not because she's my daughter; everyone tells me she is beautiful. Imagine, just one hour after she was born she lost all her redness!"

Yes, little Liza is beautiful. Even Louis B. Mayer, Judy's boss at Metro and a connoisseur of beauty, concedes that. He sent her some pink roses when she came home from the hospital and nestling on top of them was a big envelope with a motion-picture contract for the pink fragment known as Liza Minnelli!

"But that's not the thing she will decide for herself—later," says Liza's movie star mama. "She can be anything she wants to be when she grows up.

Maybe the little girl will sing for a living. When she was two days old Fred Waring serenaded her on his radio show and the recording was sent to her with the inscription—"You're a little young to appreciate it now, but in a few years..."

I left Judy and her baby to call on Dorothy Lamour and her baby. And to see the avalanche of gifts showered on the popular Dotty just before the baby was born. Cutest was an exquisite little sarong, designed by ace-stylist Edith Head. "We're keeping it," Dotty tells me, "for our next baby. It will be a girl, I hope."

Then Dottie wants another boy, then another girl.

Meanwhile—"I never go out in the evenings—I just can't bear to leave Johnny," she says, proudly exhibiting Master John Ridgely Howard in his blue nursery. She is very fussy about him. When he

When Veronica Lake had her first baby she had a hangover from the old days when you kept the news a secret until you went into the hospital for the delivery. And she antagonized everyone in town with her useless denials. When at this time I told Veronica that she looked beautiful, she thought she covered up with her quiet explanation, "It’s my new hairdo!" But with her recent son by Andre de Toth, Veronica had changed with the times. The boy was born last October, and the once peck-a-boo girl was receiving congratulations as early as March 1945.

Veronica is a strict mother—of the school—"You must sit there until you finish your cereal!" Maureen O’Hara, on the other hand, belongs to the group where you say you’re going to hurry minutes to finish the meal—all left is served up cold for the next meal. At least that is what Maureen told me before she had her Bronco. I never wondered whether her theories were ever put into practice!

Maureen’s daughter, by the way, was one of the most expressive in Hollywood history. Maureen was due to start "Till We Meet Again" with Ray Milland. But having lost one baby before through working in a picture, she would take no chances. She was off the screen for a year and a half; her financial loss—one hundred thousand dollars.

MARY MARTIN was in the dumps at Paramount. Her pictures were bad. Her fan mail was worse. Then she discovered she was going to have a baby! As every woman who has ever had a baby knows, the ego spirals downwards in the months preceding the baby’s arrival. And even one as happily married as Mary—to Richard Halliday—had fits of depression. To bolster her morale, already at zero because of her slipping movie career, Mary stormed the Anticipation Shop and Beverly Hills and came out with thirty attractive ensembles!

The Anticipation Shop, incidentally, has become one of the more popular rendezvous in Beverly for baby-conscious movie stars. One of the sadder happenings at the Anticipation Shop was the time Gall Patrick, following the loss of her premature twins, brought back a suit she had ordered the day before she went to the hospital. The suit was unworn. "Give it," she told the saleswoman, "to someone who can’t afford—and chocking with sobs she rushed out of the shop.

The Patrick loss, however, is not one to whimper when fate deals a hard blow. She has downed her disappointment and found an outlet for her thwarted motherhood. She now operates "The Mothers Cottage," where you can buy the most attractive toys and baby clothes in town.

Paulette Goddard displayed similar courage when she lost her baby, the only child she wanted above all else in life. She has everything else. Paullette almost lost her life when she was in the hospital and under an oxygen tent. "It’s the serious illness I’ve ever had," she told me later. "But I’m going to try again."

That tragic episode changed Paulette. Her personality is softer. She knows now that life can hold much more than just an accumulation of money and jewels.

Ann Sothern, very ill most of the time she awaited her baby, said to a friend one day, "If I’d known I was going to suffer like this I’d have had the courage to have a baby." But now that her pretty blonde Patricia, "Tish" for short, is neck and neck with the Ronald Colman’s Juliet for the title of Prettiest Girl Baby in Hollywood, Ann Sothern begins to consider herself. "I’ll have at least one more child," she told me at lunch the other day, "probably two more. I don't believe in only children."

Lana Turner was in a really bad way before her daughter Cheryl was born. Her marriage to Stephen Crane was on the rocks. Physically she was anemic. Mentally she was bewildered. When, finally, she collapsed, her doctor told her she could not have her baby and live. But he didn't know Lana. "I will have the baby and I'll live and look after it," she told him. And today—despite remaining the glamour gal who never appears in public without looking every inch a star—from her fawn-colored limousine to her furs and frills and immaculate make-up—Lana is probably the most devoted mama in Hollywood.

And, boys, here's a tip: If you want a second look from Lana, make sure that little Cheryl approves of you.

Joan Blondell is one girl of the old school who has never put a career ahead of motherhood. But by the oddest coincidence, Joanne always has announced a baby was on the way when offered a picture she did not like.

To hear Betty Grable talk you'd think that there was no other baby in the world except Victoria Elizabeth James! I defy any small princess to expect better care than is lavished on the little James girl. When her pin-up mama and trumpeter papa recently bought a ranch in the valley every unusual flower and weed on the place was first tested in case little Vicky should have an allergy for it.

I took bets when Deanna Durbin eloped with Felix Jackson that she would have a baby before the year was out. She just adores 'em. Deanna, by the way, has had the dozens of plants she received during her time in the hospital planted in a special flower bed known as "Jessica's Garden."

I wish you could see the look of real yearning in the eyes of Lauren Bacall when the talk gets around to the subject of babies—which is only all the time. "When it happens to me, you won't have to ask. I'll tell the world!" says (Baby) Bacall . . . the envious whisper from June Allyson, "You must feel so proud!" Merle Oberon's whispered, "I'm hoping to have a baby still," and Joan Fontaine's, "I wish I were as lucky as you are!" Kathryn Grayson's eloquent greeting, "Hello, little mother!" And so on, right down the line.

A change indeed from the old days when the stars, with few exceptions, never, never would say, "Yes, sir, that's my baby!"

MEXICO

The south-of-the-border screen has color, contrast and Latin charm by PEGGY LE BOUTILLIER

LIKE the face of Mexico itself, the Mexican movie industry is color, contrast, and like the Mexican people, it is in growth and ferment. Before the war Latin Americans saw mainly pictures from the United States with Spanish dubbing. Our stars were their stars. But in the few years pictures made in Mexico have far out-grossed pictures from the States. Within five years the box-office take throughout the Republic has tripled: Eighty pictures are made a year. (This figure will skyrocket as soon as more film is available.)

There are eighty-two cinemas in Mexico, D. F., many of them luxurious, seating 5,000 people, and twelve new ones are under construction, one of which will be the largest in Latin America. Throughout the Republic in towns of less than 5,000 people ambulantes (moving theaters) pass through regularly and show their films in schoolhouses or in public meeting halls, and many of the Mexican pictures are currently made in two languages: In Spanish for the tremendous Mexican and Latin American public and in English for the United States.

Last year on Holy Thursday and Good Friday, the two holiest days of the year, every Mexican cine broke records. This, perhaps, more than anything else—in a Catholic country—shows the vivid interest in the cine.

The two biggest totally Mexican studios, Clara and Azteca, have mushroomed to six times their size and 7,000,000 dollar Chromium Studios (partly RKO owned) which lies over a fabulous forty acres under the historic snow mountains, Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl, rival anything in Hollywood, containing the world's best recording stage and twelve huge sets.

In spite of its activity and vitality the Mexican cine is on the threshold. Men, women with talent take note! Learn Spanish! Mexico is the new frontier!

We talked about "this" and "that" of Hollywood happenings for a while and then, as though we were brushing aside inconsequential things, Ann said:

You know, Lenna, nothing happened between Bob and me that isn't happening to thousands of young couples all over the country—and in other countries, too. We've been articles written about it—about us. They tell us that every married couple parted by the exigencies of the war needs a certain amount of readjustment. Then, they give a lot of rules.

I would guess—guess I suppose everything would be all right. "Patience" is prescribed in sort of a general way. Also "understanding" and "not losing one's temper." That's wonderful advice. The only drawback to it is that readjustment is individual and advice, in capsules, doesn't always fit.

"Our problem, of course, is that both Bob and I are of the entertainment world. We both have a certain amount of temperament or we wouldn't be able to portray emotions. But, on many points, we are similar to thousands and maybe millions of other young couples...

"We were married during the war. Bob was already in uniform, but we weren't a war romance because we had been in love for a year before it came along. We had our troubles, as all our jobs and everything seemed on the upgrade for both of us. Then came that sudden parting—and almost without our realizing it we were hurtled into completely different worlds..."

I THINK I know what Ann meant and perhaps it will be easier for me to put it into words than for her to do it. When the war came along, Bob was on the threshold of stardom almost as bright as her own after he appeared in "Somehow I'll Find You" with Lana Turner and Clark Gable. He was hailed as a romantic ace, one of the greatest possibilities at M-G-M. Of course, he was happy—he was young and life was his oyster cocktail. He had worked hard to get where he was and he was not bitter, as many young men were, who was called the "war generation."

Like the rest of them, he thought that the same spot, the exact set of circumstances, would be waiting him when it was over. No, he's not scientific and serious he worked as hard to become a good airman as he had to become a good actor.

Bob went to each school. He studied and sweated until he passed the rigid examinations and then he was given the assignment of teaching students to learn to fly B-25s.

He was gone for four years—four years in which the Van Johnsons, the Peter Lawfords and the Tom Drakes rose to fame and movie popularity. Ann, too, had reached the peak of her success in the "M-G-M" both as a radio and screen actress.

And still there was no bitterness or cynicism in Bob. When he was home on furlough he talked constantly about her new pictures and she couldn't hear enough about his new work and the boys he was teaching. Of course, they talked mostly about when it would all be over, Bob would be home again and they could be completely happy.

Then, just as suddenly as they had been parted—the war was over—Bob was home—but somehow they weren't happy!

As many another boy has discovered, things were not "just the same." Why? No one can answer that. Things have to change. It doesn't make any difference... whether you’ve been a peanut vendor or a movie star, it takes time to step back into the vacated niche. It wasn’t that M-G-M had forgotton Bob. But the mills of the studios, like the mills of God, grind slowly—yet exceeding small.

Bob had been living at a fast pace where events happened in the flash of an eye. He was restless and ambitious. Life in the burbs was not yet down to earth! And so—during those few weeks and even months of idleness—he felt he had received a raw deal because his studio had no plans ready for him. They gave him a contract—but in his bitterness, he felt they hadn’t wanted to. The lot seemed to be crowded with new heroes who were moving from picture to picture—hardly a name to fall off between. Maybe it was supersensitiveness—but it was also very human and understandable that Bob felt the way he did.

A ND what had Ann been doing in those four years? Better let her tell you.

“Four years lived alone, a woman learns somehow to get along. It’s only part of a life and because the real vital force is gone you learn to lean more and more on your work or on anything that will keep you busy and occupied. I was working very hard making pictures at the studio and reading and appearing on my radio show every week.

“You get into habits that are hard to break. Habits of thinking about your own day, your own appointments and whether there will be hours in which to crowd everything. You also develop a set of ‘career woman nerves’,” she laughed.

Then, serious again, she went on: “And so the war ends. Your man comes home. He is relaxed, as are all little beavers. He is used to being just as active and busy every minute in the Army or whatever branch of the service he has been in. You love him perhaps even more, but you have your own work to do and your own busy life. Suddenly, he is without anything to do—and naturally he is unhappy. He wonders what to do with his time if he hasn’t yet started on a job. Such a bunch of quarrels Bob and I quarreled—and how I wish I could take back every word because you say so many things in the heat of anger which you wish you had never said. I think too many people feel their marriage vows Bob and I were married in a church and I promised to love, honor and obey. I am ashamed that I forgot my vows when we parted and got married.”

“Honey,” interrupted Bob who had been very quiet and I think a little uncomfortable, “I was more to blame than you were. I had been so busy in the Air Corps that country and war getting started again and the days of inactivity. I know I said things I shouldn’t have.”

It was my turn now, so I said: “Perhaps without realizing it, this flare-up between you was the most you needed to clear the air and make you both realize again how much your marriage meant.

“When that is true,” agreed Bob. “Along with this other good advice they dish out for war nerves they should tell you to say what you have to say, give off the steam and get it out of your system. Things that shouldn’t be repressed aren’t good for any marriage.”

“The minute Ann and I quarreled and slammed doors and parted, we both realized what an awful mistake we had made. I really wanted to go right away. But we had to be stubborn and stick it out for seven days. During that time, I thought out everything that had been bothering me. ‘What’s the matter?’ I asked myself. ‘You’re living in the world to make a man happy, a wonderful wife and baby, a contract with one of the biggest companies. I wanted to call Ann up and ask to come home. I didn't.

"After all and I went home to live. I had a very interesting talk with a friend of mine who has been married thirty years. He said, 'My wife and I separated and then kissed and made love at least a dozen times in the first years of our marriage. The war has nothing to do with it. There are such things as marriage nerves, for instance. It happens to all young people. Now we have worked out our marriage successfully and now we don't have all those hot cruel words—except, maybe, once in a while."

"I asked him," Bob smiled, "what was the best way of finding happiness. He told me, 'Married people are together too much. Once every now and then the husband should go fishing or hunting or the wife should have a night out with her girl friends to talk over clothes or the children or whatever interests women when they get together and aren't self-conscious that men are sitting around listening and laughing at them."

I didn't learn whether he and Ann are going to try that recipe or not. Right now they are so completely happy over being together again that I can't imagine their一辈子 from now out. They talked about Tish, their charming little baby, at great length.

"Isn't her name Patricia Ann?" I asked, puzzled.

"It is," said her proud ma, "but she doesn't look like a Pat. She has a little turned-up nose and fluffy blonde hair and looks more like—"

"A Tish," finished Mr. Sterling—and laughed.

And here's some news for you: Ann expects to have another baby when Tish is two years old. "I've always felt it was meant to bring up a child alone," she said, seriously.

"I'm looking for a cobbler shapen for her," Bob went on. "My Boxer is so rough with the baby. He rolls over her and hits her face and she doesn't like it one bit."

"Has your Boxer and Ann's Siamese cat been the real cause of the trouble?"

I couldn't help kidding them.

"No, they laughed, "our animals get along fine. We are the only ones who made a mistake. And it will never happen again."

And cross my heart—I believe them!

Mrs. Laurene Donaldson loses 57 pounds, becomes a slender beauty

"I can hardly believe it myself," says Laure- ne Donaldson of Connersville, Ind., when she looks at these pictures. "It's like being a new person, living in a new world."

"For several years, I had been getting heavier. Finally I faced the situation. I weighed 186 pounds and to wear a size 40 dress —at the ripe old age of 26, mind you! Almost in desperation, I enrolled for the DuBarry Success Course. The first week I began to look and feel better. I went through the Course again and again and in seven months lost 57 pounds. Now I wear size 14, find more styles to choose from, and for less money. My skin and hair show great improvement. I feel so buoyant I want to sing again—and I do, all day long!"

HOW ABOUT YOU? Wouldn't you like to have a figure you're proud of, a soft, glowing skin, a flattering hair-do—know the secrets of glamour and beauty? The DuBarry Success Course has helped more than 275,000 women and girls to look better, feel better, be at their best. You get an analysis of your needs, then a goal to work for and a plan for achieving it. You follow at home the same methods taught by Ann Delafeld in the famous Success School in the Richard Hudnut Salon, New York.

BANDIT OF SHERWOOD FOREST, THE—Columbia: Cornel Wilde is an energetic and colorful hero whose horse, Abilene's son who takes up arms when unscrupulous regent Henry Daniell attempts to dethrone the youthful king of old England. Louise is the court lady in waiting who helps Wilde track down tyranny. Edgar Buchanan is Fritz Tuck and Jill Cordom is the queen mother. (May)

BECAUSE OF HIM—Universal: Deanna Durbin again turns to comedy, in a tale reminiscent of many other Deanna Durbin entertainers of a stage or screen, and her efforts to waggle it using New York star Charles Laughton and playwright Franck Tone. Pleasurable, and Deanna is still cute. (May)

BEHIND GREEN LIGHTS—20th Century-Fox: William Gargan as a hardboiled yet honest police officer. Carole Landis is the love interest, Mary Anderson as a gangster's wife. Murders, melodrama, all in one evening's routine in a police station, actually hangs too long with the ever present flashback to make a pretty good little B picture. (Apr)

BLUE DAHLIA—Paramount: A tough mystery drama about a woman, Alan Ladd, who gains his wife, Doris Dowling, has been untrue. He fights the other man, Howard da Silva, thus providing someone else with a line for murdering Miss Dowling. Alan tries to find the murderer since he's under suspicion himself. Veronica Lake has a small but effective part. (Apr)

BREAKFAST IN HOLLYWOOD—Golden-U: If you're a woman loyal to Tom Breneman's radio program, you'll probably like this picture, showing a genial master of ceremonies who finds time to patch up old scores and be kind to old ladies. You'll also see Hedda Hopper, Spike Jones, Andy Russell, King Cole Trio, Bonita Granville, Eddie Ryan, Billie Burke and Cassi Potts. (Apr)

BRIDE WORE BOOTS, THE—Paramount: A slaphappy comedy that's supposed to be very funny, but unfortunately not even the slightest presence of Robert Cummings, Barbara Stanwyck and Diana Lynn can make sense out of this silly story. Barbara's love, Harold Cumings, doesn't and their quarrels lead to a divorce over Diana Lynn, a Salesmoreskin who tries to get Bob for herself. (June)

DEADLINE AT DAWN—RKO: Against a background of murder and the necessity of saving it before dawn a charming love story develops between Bill Williams and Susan Hayward. Bill gets drunk with Lola Lane, finds her bewitched, and since he is suspected, seeks the murderer. Suspects are Joseph Calleia, Marvin Miller, Jerome Cowan and Paul Lukas, all good portrayals. (Apr)

DETOUR TO Danger—Planet: On sixteen millimeter color film, somewhat burrred in spots, Planet productions organized for the use of small groups of people who want good clean entertainment. John Day and Nancy Brindell make this one in search of a drug store, a blending romance and suspense at a swank summer resort. (Apr)

DEVOPTION—Warner's: This brings to the screen the touching story of the four famous Brontës. Charlotte (Olivia de Havilland) who wrote "Jane Eyre" tragic Fanny (Ida Lupino), author of "Ther- ring Heights," the poetess Ann, played by Nancy Coleman and drunken painter Branwell, Arthur Kennedy, Paul Henreid is the curate who with Ida's and Olivia's love, but his Viennese accent seems a little out of place in picturesque village. (June)

DIARY OF A CHAMBERMAID—Begus-R-U: A peculiar picture that doesn't hang together very coherently, nonetheless this will undoubtedly be popu-

Goldwyn girl,
Karen X. Gaylord

By Mary Jane Fulton

The Goldwyn Girls

Will tomorrow's bright stars be Karen
X. Gaylord, Shirley Ballard, Martha Montgomery, Virginia Belmont and Betty Cargyle? These 1946 Goldwyn Girls have determined feet on the slippery steppingstone to Hollywood stardom. You will see them in the Samuel Goldwyn Technicolor comedy, "The Kid from Brooklyn."

In New York for a short visit, they were busy rushing from one appointment to another. We caught up with them at "21"... All the girls but Martha (who is a blue-eyed blonde) have brown eyes. Karen is a true redhead; Virginia has reddish-brown hair; Shirley and Betty are brunettes... Of course you'd like to know what their special tricks are for applying lipstick to make your lips more glamorous, so we jotted down these notes:

For Picture-pretty Lips

Karen X. Gaylord advises a shade darker lipstick on whichever lip is larger. This minimizes fullness. If one lip is too narrow, build it up so both "balance." Her best lipstick shade is an orange-red... Shirley Ballard first covers her lips with make-up base, so that lipstick goes on smoother and lasts longer. Her most flattering tint is red-red... Martha Montgomery uses a lipstick brush to outline, then fills in with up-and-down strokes. She smooths edges with an orangewood stick to prevent "running." A medium-dark lip rouge gives whiter brilliance to her pretty teeth... Virginia Belmont makes sure one side of mouth is not lipsticked fuller by test-blotting lips on tissue. Then, if necessary, shapes before blotting again. Russet-red shade is especially becoming to her... Betty Cargyle anchors little finger against chin. Then she carefully does a neat, lucent-looking job of lip-painting.
She wears a striking true-red shade beautifully... But all agree a happy smile gives the prettiest red curves of your lips the most glamorous touch of all!

Cooling System

For the look of a lady whose spirits don’t fall as the temperature rises

Tip-off

Look cool from tip to toe. A well-groomed head is the first guard against a hot, disheveled look. Use lacquer to keep the hair in place and shining. Try this home recipe for a lacquer, given to Martha Vickers by Perc Westmore: Cut two lemons into round slices. Put them into a pan with water sufficient to cover. Allow to boil until all juice is removed. Strain and use remaining fluid as a lacquer, applied either with fingers, brush or spray.

Toe-hold

Lay a routine groundwork for “summer” feet. When the feet are tired and overheated, relax them by rolling them over an empty pop bottle, a miracle-working Hollywood trick; follow with a cooling witch hazel foot bath or one of those cologne “cooling lotions.”

Finger-tips

As for another extremity—watch your hands. A little talcum, anti-perspirant or skin freshener sprinkled in the palms of the hands will keep them calm, cool and collected.

Frontispiece

Present a perfect face to summer. Keep your skin cool and fresh by changing your make-up often. Take time off every two hours to re-do your face completely.

Use a light foundation cream or a liquid powder base that clings to the skin and prevents perspiration from displacing make-up. Always wake up your skin with an early-morning cold shower.

Fragrant Touch

Be meticulous about perfumes; use light ones and apply them on the skin; never on your dresses. Another feel-cool pointer: Andrea King uses a powder mitt filled with powder to dust her body. Lovely feeling—the powder comes out in little clouds.

Clockwork Coolness

Make a summer round-the-clock plan of action. Drink at least eight glasses of water daily, more as the mercury rises. Try a Hollywood heat-preventive, a new improved type of salt tablet with Vitamin C, dextrose, B-1 and salt. Eat more fresh fruits and green vegetables, less of the starches and carbohydrates. Make sure you get eight hours sleep. Move slowly; a hurried routine gives you a harried look, makes you overheated. Wake up happy, watch your temper and your looks and you’ll be all set for a summer of freshness, fascination—and fun.

Meet My Mr. M-U-M: You've seen this backstage musical before, but it's still a pleasant fare. Fred Brady is the theatrical producer who tries to break into the big time by staging an amateur show in a country club. Marjorie Reynolds is his leading lady and Betty Lou, who is a falsetto singer, gets herself involved with Loren Tindall. (May)

My Reputation—Walters: By far Barbara Stanwyck's best work in a double bill, this is an adult and intelligent picture of one woman's fight for her love against a convention-bound town, and even against herself. Her strangled mother Lucile Watson, her love George Brent, and her friends Eire Armstrong and John Ridgely are flawlessly interpreted. (Apr.)

Notorious Gentleman—Rank: Universal: An intelligent and knowing British picture, although rather long and occasionally it lacks a superb performance as the rascally son of an English gentleman who swaggers his way through one trouble after another until he marries Lily Palmer for her money and then breaks her heart by running off with her father's secretary, Margaret Johnstone. (June)

Portrait of Maria—Mundes: M-G-M: A Mexican good will picture with Dolores Del Rio playing an Indian girl who meets a tragic end. Pedro Armendariz tries to defend her from the over moralistic villagers. Emma is dubbed in, the dialogue doesn't quite rate, but perhaps foreign film fans will enjoy it. (Apr.)

Postman Always Rings Twice—M-G-M: Not a pretty tale, but this gripping drama of love and murder is three irresistible people packs a mean wallop. John Garfield is the little fella who carries on with a married woman and plots with her the murder of her husband, Cecil Kellaway, owner of a roadside cafe. But the love of John and Lana soon becomes a thing of the past. (Nov.)

Rebecca—Selznick International: This picture is now being reissued and if you missed it the first time you'll want to see this fascinatingly well acted study that made Joan Fontaine a star. Rebecca, Laurence Olivier's dead wife, never appears in the picture, but shadowing the whole are an intense, throaty threat to Olivier's new marriage to Joan. With Judith Anderson and George Sanders. (May)

Riverboat Rhythm—Rko: Leon Errol's pattern in films never is the same, and this weak-kneed farce in which, as an impoverished showboat captain, he pretends to be a Southern colonel is nothing funny. Walter Catlett, as the Colonel Errol impersonates offers solid support to the star, and Marc Carmen and Joan New顿. (May)

Sentimental Journey—20th Century-Fox: A tale of a young woman, Maria Montez, who, following her immediate death, adopts a child in the hope the child will bring her love. John Payne is the small boy she clings to after her death. But the little orphan's adoptive father, John Hodiak, who feels his wife's death, fails to understand her. (May)

Seventh Veil—The: Sydney Box—Universal. A tale of a girl who tells the story of a woman who becomes a great pianist under the name of Lily LaSalle. The story is a superb one, but the parallel to the story of James Mason—British's No. One heartbeat. When Mason tries to break up her romantic, she suffers an accident which solves the riddle of which man she really loves. (May)

Shadow Returns, The—Monogram: Kane Richmond, nephew of the police commissioner, assumes the Shadow's role in order to solve a series of murders which are baffling all the police force. Barbara Reit is the object of his love, Tom Dugan isn't. (Apr.)

Shock—20th Century-Fox: A different who-done-it story of a girl who sees a doctor kill her and thinks he is the killer. Vincent Price is excellent as the criminal psychiatrist who wants the same, and Osa Massen and Myrna Loy are positively first rate. (June)

Smooth as Silk—Universal: Packed with surprises and suspense, this is one of the slickest, most convincing mystery yarns to hit the screen in many a month. A very good one. Leon Lydford is the plumbing contractor who, against his will, is engaged to a rich woman. When she proposes to Ameche, marries him and gently prods him on to success. Women especially will love it. (June)

Suspense—Monogram: A lavish ice revue is the setting for murder in this excellent production. The revue is owned by Albert Dekker and he marries a girl, Belita; and all goes well until Barry Sullivan becomes manager of the show and makes love to the star. The suspense mounts when Sullivan's former girl comes to town and accepts his past, but what happens next won't surprise you. (June)

Two Sisters From Boston—M-G-M: When Kathryn Grayson heads for an operating career via the vaudeville stage, her sister, June Allyson, follows her to protect her from worldly influences. Throughout all this, the polka, the yodel, and the music are charming. Peter Lawford the socialite who falls for one of the sisters and Lauritz Melchior plays a grand opera star, makes the story. (June)

Swing Parade of 1946—Monogram: Gale Storm's the attraction of this opus—she acts, sings and dances most charmingly. Besides that, the picture is full of spectaculars. Louis Jordan's and Will Osborn's music, the Three Stooges, Dance Director Jack Beal is a new star, and gay and you'll love it. (June)

Tars and Spars—Columbia: At last the Coast Guard gets a musical for itself too, this one featuring the beautiful Janet Blair singing, and bright people like Jeff Donnell, Alfred Drake and Sid Caesar. (Apr.)

Tars and the Leopard Woman—Rko: Tarzan, played as usually by Johnny Weissmuller, and Brenda Joyce get involved with the Leopard Men, a strange people with a strange cult, and one of the most exciting chase sequences in a fast pace. Acquaintances plays the high priestess of the Leopard People; Jackie Gleason is the chief of the plot developing. With John Sheffield as Boy and Chester the chimpanzee. (May)

They Made Me a Killer—Paramount: Robert Lowery, innocently implicated in a robbery, attempts to clear himself and is aided by his loyal girl, Barbara Britton. The plot is neatly developed, and MacDonald and Frank Albertson round out the cast. (Apr.)

Tomorrow Is Forever—International: We recommend this one highly. It is a tragic drama of two people, whose affair, through the study of John and Lana soon becomes a thing of the past. (Nov.)

Virginian, The—Paramount: A rather exciting Technicolor Western, Joel McCrea in the title role, plays opposite pretty Barbara Britton, the Easterner who comes west to teach school. Brian Donlevy is the bad rustler, Sonny Tufts, Pay Bainter and Henry O'Neill are all excellent. (Apr.)

Walk In The Sun—20th Century-Fox: This film is a really unusual one. The story itself is different and went right to our heart. The male cast includes fine performances from George Taft, George Tyne, Sterling Holloway, Hunt Hall, and many others. It tells of a lone platoon in a single action, and is built about an objective. It's definitely worth seeing. (Apr.)

Well Groomed Bride, The—Paramount: There are giggles bubbles a-plenty in this gay story of a matron and a young starlet and champagne. Navy Lt. Ray Milland wants it, for a car and a job, but Olive Heffernan has her last chance to in the film world and is determined to use it for her wedding to Army Lt. Sonny Tufts, James Gleason his wife. Despite Dowling adds to the comedy of errors. (May)

Whistle Stop—Nero: For George Raft fans only, this gloomy tale never managed to really arouse our interest, it is and dull. The story of a young doctor and eventually reforms for the sake of Ava Gardner, gets framed by Tom Conway, is eventually solved through the deceptions of his strange friend Vie McLaglen. (Apr.)

Wife Of Monte Cristo, The—Prc: Cops and robbers in sain breaches and flying capes. When chief of police John Loder sets a trap for the person who has stolen his horse, the Count of Monte Cristo, Martin Kosleck, is forced to get out of the affair and to jump into his shoes and carries on the raids, thereby complicating everything. (June)

Woman Who Came Back, The—Republic: Nancy Carlin, a waitress, has inherited an ancestor's curse of witchcraft and not until she marries a man does she freed of her obsession. With John Loder, Ruth Ford and little Jeanne Gall, all good. (Apr.)

Yank in London—A Corporation Ltd.—20th Century-Fox: This film does a good job in bringing about a better understanding between the English people and the American GI. Dean Jagger is the GI who is in the throes with a chappie on his shoulder and falls in love with Rex Harrison. (May)

Young Widow—Stromberg-Ua: At last you'll see the much publicized Jane Russell, and we think you'll like her very much as the young widow grieving for her husband George Brent. She accepts a new love. Louis Hayward is the Army officer who falls in love with her and carries on the romance in the room mate and Mary Wilson a not-so-bright but very popular blonde. (May)

...and possibly she may—for the amazing strides of medical science have added years to life expectancy

- It's a fact—a warm, wonderful fact—that this five-year-old child, or your own child, has a life expectancy almost a whole decade longer than was her mother's, and a good 18 to 20 years longer than that of her grandmother. Not only the expectation of a longer life, but of a life by far healthier.

Thank medical science for that. Thank your doctor and thousands like him...toiling ceaselessly...that you and yours may enjoy a longer, better life.

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

More Doctors smoke Camels than any other cigarette!

Not one but three outstanding independent research organizations conducted this survey. And they asked not just a few thousand, but 113,597, doctors from coast to coast to name the cigarette they themselves preferred to smoke.

Answers came in by the thousands...from general physicians, diagnosticians, surgeons, nose and throat specialists too. The most-named brand was Camel.

If you are not now smoking Camels, try them. Let your “T-Zone” tell you (see right).

the talk today is about an M-G-M picture that will probably win prizes and trophies and acclaim for its very sincere, warm and human story. It's called THREE WISE FOOLS and it tells of a little Irish-girl-with-a-brogue (played by Margaret O'Brien) who brings a flood of sunshine into the lives of three hard-bitten bachelors. It is so rich with laughter and tears that for years to come it will be enjoyed again and again by millions of Americans.

\[\text{Anna and the King of Siam (20th Century-Fox)}\]

As individual a motion picture as it was a book, this fairylike story of an Englishwoman who becomes an intrinsic part of the fabulous Siamese court of the nineteenth Century will completely satisfy your desire for a "good movie." Irene Dunne plays the English schoolteacher who comes to the palace of the King of Siam to teach his harem and his children the ways of the world outside. The King, a fabulous personality portrayed by Rex Harrison, aware that progress must come to his backward country, is constantly fighting himself and his background with its barbarian brutalities. It is the Englishwoman who, by the dedication of her life, helps him in the winning. After the initial strangeness one feels at the appearance of Rex Harrison as a Siamese king, the picture takes you under its spell to give you a delightful glimpse of an exotic life in the long ago. Harrison turns in an excellent performance in a very exciting role which in other hands might have been a strain on the credulity; Miss Dunne is warm, sympathetic and, as always, finished; Gale Sondergaard plays with a fine restraint.

\[\text{Cluny Brown (20th Century-Fox)}\]

Well, it's just a lamb of a picture with mint-sauce dialogue and spiced-pear action. Charles Boyer steps right out of his heavy-lover role to play a refugee with a love of life, an abhorrence of stuffiness and a humorous disdain for England's caste system. In Jennifer Jones, the housemaid with a flair for plumbing and a spirit of honest impulsiveness, he finds interest, pleasure and even romance. Jennifer is positively fancy as the maid in the home of Sir Henry Carmel, played by Reginald Owen. She couldn't be cuter. Nor could Richard Haydn be more typical as the small-town English chemist and Jennifer's suitor. He all but killed us. Him and his organ playing!

Peter Lawford as the son of Reginald Owen and Helen Walker (who sits her horse well) are the romantic pair who quarrel, make up, quarrel and get together again. And Pete, we may add, is appropriately stuffy.

Sara Allgood and Ernest Cossart, housekeeper and butler, Margaret Banermann as Lady Alice Carmel and Una O'Connor as Haydn's mother are simply delightful. In fact, the whole affair is a satisfying and delicious treat.

Your Reviewer Says: It tickles like champagne bubbles.

\[\text{A Stolen Life (Warners)}\]

Based on the simple elemental story of the good and bad sisters that people all good fairy-tale books, "A Stolen Life" provides Bette Davis with opportunity to display her talent to double advantage, for Bette plays both sisters with clever shadings and astute perception. Bette knows, for instance, that Kate the good sister would be shy, slow to action, incapable of caprices. Pat is her antithesis. Even the tone pitch of the voices are marked. Miss Davis is subdued, forceful when necessary, never hysterical but still the craftsman whose every move suggests intelligent foresight.

Glen Ford is the victim of the good and evil forces who succumbs to the charms of conniving Pat only to discover that Kate, after all, is her real love. One is almost impatient with the character Glenn plays for his shortsightedness. Ford, incidentally, steps out of the Marines into big-league movie acting and should go right on big-league-ing.

Dane Clark as the artist injects a few forceful punchy moments that almost knock the picture off balance—he's that good. But his presence seems almost unaccounted for in the story.

The photography, and especially Warner's process department that conceived the double shots, deserves whoops and hollers for achievement. The script writers, however, might have cut down on some of the everlasting traveling the characters had to do. Made you feel as if you were on a scenic merry-go-round.

Charles Ruggles as the cousin and Walter Brennan as the lighthouse keeper are excellent.

Your Reviewer Says: A woman's treat.

Till the End of Time (RKO)

The word "adjustment" had been bandied about in veteran family circles since VJ Day; now RKO provides a candid celluloid picture of what this adjustment can mean to three young men home from the wars. They are Guy Madison, an ex-college freshman who comes back to a loving mother and father; Bob Mitchum, a self-sufficient buddy with a subconscious yearning to find some roots; and Bill Williams, an ex-fighter who, without his legs, thinks he can find no path to walk. This is their story—and it is the story, too, of a woman casualty of the war—Dorothy McGuire, the young widow whose world has been taken from her.

The three male characters are well played—Madison with open-faced candor; Mitchum with true professional ability; Bill Williams with intense sincerity. Dorothy McGuire lends a touch of true art, lifts the woman's role, especially in the love scenes, to the focusing point of the film. One of the strongest episodes is the moral rescue of a veteran with the "shakes"; during this the audience feels a touch of true horror at what war can do to a strong, normal young man.

This story belongs to everyone today; it may well bring the "happy ending" that many spiritually displaced veterans and their disheartened families are seeking.

A Scandal in Paris

(Pressburger—UA)

You may or may not know that Vidocq was in life the colorful French rogue who decided there was an easier and more profitable living to be made by operating on the side of the law. So he offered his brand of black genius to the French Surete which was the granddaddy of Scotland Yard and our own F.B.I., and materially increased its fame as well as his own. This is history. What happens in "A Scandal in Paris" is something else again, though its central figure is Vidocq, played with the dash and verve of George Sanders at his best.

The devastating George and his villainous pal, Akim Tamiroff, wind their way through various colorful adventures that range from stealing the ruby garter of Carole Landis to planning a clean sweep of the Bank of Paris. Love, however, in the form of Sigrid Hasso, rears her pretty head and the seasoned Sanders abandoning his seasoning for gentler paths. Even the bloodless ghost of Vidocq must have blushed at this piece of romantic license. Nevertheless, the film is highly entertaining for those of sufficiently sophisticated taste to relish it. It is richly mounted and the camera work is better than we have seen in black and white for lo these many moons.

Your Reviewer Says: Romantically scandalous.

Make Mine Music

(Disney—RKO)

Not since "Fantasia" has there been such a rare combination of music, mirth, fantasy and whimsy. Walt Disney's top-form style. Divided into separate sequences, the artist elaborately illustrates the songs with cartoon characters or scenic drawings that tend to heighten every emotional value of the melodies without once detracting. From the opening number, "The Martins and the Coys" as sung by the King's Men, through Andy Russell's singing of "Without You," Benny Goodman's playing of "All the Cats Join In" and "After You're Gone," the Andrews Sisters' warbling of "Johnny Fedora and Alice Blue Bonnet," Jerry Colonna's rendition of "Casey at the Bat," a ballet number performed by Lichine and Ribouchina and "Blue Bayou" sung by the Ken Darby chorus—the Disney artist displays the perfect blending of technical perfection with artistic imaginings. In "The Whale Who Wanted to Sing" episode and in the "Peter and the Wolf" fantasy Disney reaches new imaginative heights.

There is no story, remember, and no attempts made at a continuity whole. It is simply a ten-part musical offering with music and draw-

TOWN JOTTINGS: When the Agars' almost completed home, Shirley Temple's former playhouse, caught fire, the firemen put it out in time to prevent much damage. Incidentally, Shirley and John will soon take a belated honeymoon in Honolulu . . . Since John Dall's return to New York, after his release from Warner Brothers, Jane Withers has been seeing handsome Farley Granger . . . Joan Fontaine had no desire to return to the home she and Brian Aherne shared after her recent marriage to producer Bill Dozier, so she and her bridegroom have taken a new house and Joan will rent the other . . . Louise Allbritton, who left all in a flutter to marry radio commentator Charles Collingwood in New York, took time to write Cal a thank-you note and contribute this piece of information: "I want a family right away." . . . It was the difference in religion that broke up the marriage plans of Bob Hutton and June Haver, who looked so cute together. But isn't it good news that Bob goes into three Warner pictures one right after the other after a year's idleness?

The report that Freddie Bartholomew is to become a father takes Cal’s memory back to the time Freddie arrived here from England with his Aunt Cissie to play the lead in “David Copperfield.” Seems only yesterday and now Freddie is due to become a father. He and his Aunt Cissie, who together weathered so many legal storms, have quarreled and she is going into movies herself to augment her income.

Neighbors: Calling to Alexis Smith and Craig Stevens as they drove out of their garage a few doors away, reminded us of our many star neighbors. Two doors down lives Bob Walker and his man servant, and well do we know it when Bob goes clipping through our alley in his sleek low roadster sending everyone scurrying for safety.

In the building owned by Lloyd Nolan directly across the alley, lived John Hodiak in his bachelor days. John shared a daily cleaning maid with Cal. “Hmm!” she’d say of a morning, “that nice Mr. Hodiak never leaves his things around. Neatest man I ever worked for.”

Edna Skelton, who owns Cal’s building, drops in to call every once in a while and Red himself can be seen every so often tearing up and down the stairs that... (Continued on page 12)

"Losing 20 Pounds was so Easy!"

Schoolgirl makes herself over, is now confident of success

Beatrice Molnar is a talented pianist, ambitious for a concert career. But her wise teacher told her she was too shy and too heavy to be popular. Beatrice knew she was shy because she was self-conscious about her size. In eight weeks, through the DuBarry Success Course, she lost 20 pounds (down from 116 to 96), learned skin care and make-up, turned herself into a poised, slim, petite, attractive girl.

He is her man: It's wedding bells for Johnny Coy and dancing partner, Dorothy Babb, together in Paramount's "Ladies' Man"

INSIDE STUFF

You see, having stars as neighbors is just like having the Joneses and Smiths next door which makes Hollywood the nice little town it really is.

The Coys: Johnny Coy wanted to choose his own dancing partner for "Ladies' Man," so Paramount told him to go right ahead. At the end of a week, after trying out fifteen girls, Johnny selected a cute little five-foot brunette, Dorothy Babb, and not only danced with her in the picture but asked her to marry him.

They planned on going to Las Vegas but finally decided on "The Little Church Around the Corner" in New York. Bill Eythe as best man and Bul Cobb as maid of honor flew on to New York with them. The only drawback was that Johnny was violently ill of the plane and had to take a four-hour stopover before going on.

After the ceremony Johnny took his bride to meet his family in Montreal.

Fan-minded Van: Hollywood got a walk up out of Van Johnson at "The Spiral Staircase" premiere. Van drove up to the theater, got out of his car, bowed and grinned for several minutes and then got into his car and drove away. The customers looked curiously at each other and shook their heads, but Van's bosses shook a scolding finger. It is all right to receive acclaim they suggested, but to go about inviting it is something else again. Several stars who made a trip east with Van were bewildered when he refused to go to bed lest some (Continued on page 14).

Trailing the Sherrys: The trailer Bette Davis acquired for that trip she and her husband William Sherry will take across country to New Hampshire was hauled onto the set of “Deception” the day Cal went visiting. We were lucky enough to get a grand tour of the three-room beauty-on-wheels and you never saw a more complete and compact house anywhere. There’s a complete kitchen with an electric stove, refrigerator, sink, table, cupboards, a neat bath with lavatory, shower and toilet, a clever living room and bedroom combination which Bette is using as a dressing room on the picture. For his birthday Bette gave her husband a complete set of paints, easel and brushes. They will stop en route wherever they choose and Bill will paint to his heart’s content. When Bette’s birthday rolled around recently, Bill gave her a party with only their Laguna Beach friends present. He is rather adamant on his “no movie colony” ban and Bette, who never was active socially in the Hollywood crowd, doesn’t in the least mind. Knowing garnets are her favorite stone, Bill gave Bette a beautiful garnet necklace.

Holiday in Disguise: Ray and Mel Milland arrived back from their New York jaunt so weary with crowds, parties and excitement they decided to postpone their South American jaunt until next year. Instead they bought a house in Newport, half-way between Los Angeles and San Diego and are deep in the throes of decorating.

Mel and her market basket are a familiar sight in the village, as the Millands are “housekeeping” themselves with no servants, no anybody to disturb the peace and quiet of Ray’s three-months vacation. In the evening they sit out on the sun deck and watch their neighbors, the Bogarts, who live on their boat not far away. Across the cove in private waters, they can glimpse Errol Flynn’s yacht with Nora Eddington and daughter Dierdre entertaining Errol’s former wife Lili Damita and the Flynn son, Sean. And that’s as near to Hollywood as the exhausted Millands care to come right now. And to make very, very sure it is, Ray has clipped off all his hair and can hardly be recognized with his short head and old dungarees.

Solid Comfort: In a small and unpretentious white frame bungalow in an unfashionable section of Hollywood live the Zachary Scotts. Zach in a bright shirt, Elaine, his wife, in trim slacks, meet the guests out on the porch with friendly neighborliness. There is no formality, for the Scotts see to the comfort of the visitor. Elaine spreads the crackers with caviar and chopped onions and Zach hands them around before dinner. The conversation with Waverly their ten-year-old daughter is reminiscent of conversation in thousands of homes everywhere. After dinner Zach proudly shows off the Christmas poster Waverly made for him the time she was ill with measles and after unsuccessfully persuading Jingo, the French Poodle, to perform Zach quietly takes him off for a walk. They’re a good staunch American family in the midst of glamour and somehow Cal thinks they always will be.

It was nearly midnight when our friend, who now lives there quite alone, turned the car through the entrance gate. We paused at the massively carved doors, stepped into the wide foyer and on, into the living room. The heavy black drapes, black velvet carpets, dark beams across the ceiling were gone. The house had been redecorated and the tiny seance room where Valentino and his friends held their mysterious rites was bare and empty.

We remembered his amours, his first heartbreaking efforts to crash movies, his flashing smile as he drove down Sunset Boulevard after "The Sheik," and the headlines when he died suddenly nearly twenty years ago.

From his bedroom downstairs, we stepped out onto the landscaped terrace that leads down to the garden shrine, which was now shrouded in heavy fog, and we shivered. With a sigh of relief we drove back to Beverly Hills, still remembering, still bemoaning an idol that passed too soon.

Stork Dept: Zorina, of the gorgeous torso, and her wealthy bridegroom Goddard Lieberson have a date with the stork this winter... And Virginia Gilmore, who deserted movies for stage plays in New York temporarily, will be rocking a cradle soon... Trudy Marshall and her husband, Phil Raffin, will be ma and pa by the time this reaches you, as will the Richard Cranes. And sympathy goes to little Dorothy McGuire and John Swope whose blessed event turned sad. And they wanted the baby so much... The Robert Cummings baby is the "spittin' image" of his pa, as any of their pals will tell you. But when Jack Benny acted as godfather to the child at its christening, he pulled the prize crack on the resemblance. He said, "Looking at that infant is just like looking at Bob through the wrong end of a telescope!"

You Should Know: Don't want to depress you but there's a possibility that you won't be seeing Humphrey Bogart on the screen after the end of this summer—for maybe two years! Reason? That suspension he's been taking at Warners after many arguments there now has him in the mood to sit out the remainder of his contract. He'll accept a loanout to Columbia in the meantime because of a prior understanding—but after that—it's a fifty-fifty bet whether or not he'll do any movies until he's free to pick and choose. After all—he has his "Baby" Bacall—and his boat (to say nothing of that bank account) and those are all he really cares about... James Mason is still the "big talk" around Hollywood. Many fan clubs have sprung up for him in this country even though he hasn't set foot on Hollywood soil yet. There's a slight possibility that the new company that Joan Crawford is going to make two pictures for in the fall may snag him for her leading man. What a coup that would be!”

Ether News: We have a secret about Bing's fall radio plans. He'll switch sponsors—but he's not deserting the ether (we can hear the cheers now!) though just what lucky concern will tie him up is the unknown quantity in our little story. But his "package" show is all set—signed and tied up—between Bing and those who'll be with him. John Scott Trotter and his band; the Charioteers; that wonderful croonstress Peggy Lee (her record-breaking record of "Baby, You Were Soo Right" slayed you—remember?) and "Skitch" Henderson, who really massages a piano round out Der Bingle's show.

Tragedy: The tragedy of the month was the sudden death of Mrs. David Niven, a result of an accident at the home of the Tyrone Powers'. Every Sunday the same group of friends, including the ex-Harrisons, Richard Greene, Arthur Little Jr., Cesar Romero, Gene Tierney and Oleg Cassini, and the Nivens, gathered at Tyrone’s for an afternoon of croquet, tennis or swimming and an evening of parlor games. Time and again someone in the group had sported how glowingly happy the Nivens were and how deeply David loved his wife whom he had met during an extended stay in England.

When she was due to arrive, David was on hand to meet her. “She’s had a wrenching time of it during the war without fun or new clothes,” David said, “and this eighteen-day crossing with the two babies has been hazardous. Certainly I want to be here to meet her.” So David stayed east, flew up to Maine to meet the boat from England when it landed there and back.

New York arranged with the Raymond Masseys to care for the two small children while he and his “Primmie,” as he affectionately called her, did the New York shops, the shows and the town.

Hollywood instantly liked the tall, blonde Englishwoman who served as a British WAAF during the war.

At the dinner table at Tyrone’s that fatal evening, when they began playing the whispering game, where one tells a tale to his dinner partner who repeats it to his partner and so on until the last person repeats the garbled version, Mrs. Niven called across the table to David, “You’re beginning the game counter clockwise, David. That’s such bad luck.” An hour later while playing “Sardines,” a game in which one person secretes himself in a corner and the players attempt to locate him in the dark, Mrs. Niven opened the cellar door by mistake and plunged twenty feet down. At first they all thought it was merely a concussion but as the hours wore on it became apparent her injury was serious.

Never have hearts been so torn with emotion as they have for the popular David. Hollywood knows this will always be a great tragedy in his life and is waiting to help him bear it as best the town can.

We don’t care what your calendar says— it’s June on the cover! And the sunny June Allyson has a lot of the attributes her name implies. She’s got sky-blue eyes, hair as blond as a daffodil, and a warmth and brightness that’s reminiscent of the loveliest month in the year. For you statistic hounds, we will also state that she’s five-feet-one and weighs in at exactly 99. There’s no way to measure charm, but she’s got oodles.

And speaking of charm, M-G-M was looking for exactly that when they needed a star to play the part of Julia Sanderson in “Till The Clouds Roll By”. When Miss Sanderson, the famed musical comedy star, was commencing her career, she was small, blue-eyed, blonde, with a sweet voice and a delightful dancing style, so it was as if they’d found her all over again when they cast June Allyson in the role. It’s a performance—and a picture—you mustn’t miss.

June was as delighted as the studio with her role in “Till The Clouds Roll By”. It’s the love story of Jerome Kern, and to anyone as fond of the theater as June, playing a part in it has strong sentimental inducement. You’ll remember June got her start in musicals on Broadway, first as a chorus girl in “Sing Out, the News”, and then graduating to specialties in other song-and-dance shows. It was in one of those that M-G-M spotted her, and since then she’s become as delightful an actress as she is an entertainer.

If you saw June in her early pictures, then you realize how ably she fulfilled her promise in “Two Girls And A Sailor”, “Music For Millions”, “Two Sisters From Boston” and other hits. But the ardent Miss Allyson was never more excited than now. She’s like that about her work—and “Till The Clouds Roll By” has her as exuberant as a kid with a sugar-plum.

That sparkling enthusiasm is one of June’s characteristics. She’s that way about everything—her home, her hobbies, her career! June is avid about swimming, sailing, horse-back riding. She collects records and loves planes. But her greatest interest right now is her new home—and her neighbors feel just the way her fans do—she’s a lot of fun and their favorite person!

Melody memorandums of the songs you remember from your favorite motion pictures

A NIGHT IN CASABLANCA: Somewhere between all the mad Marx mirthquakes there's a pretty tune called "Who's Sorry Now?" and Bing Crosby (Decca) and Harry James (Columbia) weave it on the waxworks for you.

STRANGE LOVE OF MARTHA IVERS: Again Paramount called upon composer Miklos Rozsa of "The Lost Weekend" and "Spellbound" fame to compose a theme melody for its new dramatic hit. This time it's the haunting "Strange Love." Tex Beneke and the splendid Glenn Miller orchestra give it sympathetic treatment. (Victor)

HOODLUM SAINT: Connie Boswell ably records this film's theme, "Sweetheart," which is a nostalgic favorite of a few years ago. For good measure Miss B. slips in another movie tune, "If I Had A Wishing Ring" from "Breakfast in Hollywood." (Decca)

ONE MORE TOMORROW: Warner Brothers' hopeful drama has a fine title song and the serviceable Glen Gray Casa Loma orchestra platter it for Decca.

NO LEAVE, NO LOVE: M-G-M's forthcoming musical has two potential hits in "Love on a Greyhound Bus" and "All the Time." The current joy of the jukes, Vaughn Monroe, sings and plays them (Victor) with vocal assists from the Norton Sisters.

JUDY GARLAND: Teaches the newcomers a few vocal tricks with her rendition of the plaintive "Carousel" hymn, "You'll Never Walk Alone." (Decca)

BOB HOPE—SHIRLEY ROSS: A tuneful twosome platter two oldies, "Two Sleepy People" and "When We're Alone" that is great for fireside listening. (Decca)

GILDA: Leo Reisman spins the Rita Hayworth beguine, "Amado Mio," and uses the other side for a dance treatment of the "Spellbound" score. (Decca)

TALK ABOUT A LADY: This Columbia film has a tune dedicated to California's favorite fruit "Avocado" and Decca has the Andrews Sisters singing it affectionately.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: Fritz Kreisler records for Victor an album of his own compositions and arrangements of best-loved melodies, including the familiar "Old Refrain" that is tops in violin virtuosity...Beethoven's Sonata No. 7 in C Minor for Violin and Piano is a Columbia album classic, played by violinist Isaac Stern and pianist Alexander Kakin...Helen Traubel, majestic Wagnerian soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, sings the great Bridal Chamber Scene from "Lohengrin" with fine assistance given by tenor Kurt Baum and Artur Rodzinski's N. Y. Philharmonic Orchestra (Columbia)... A perfect combination is found in Andre Kostelanetz conducting a potpourri of Tchaikovsky music, played by the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra. Highlight of this Columbia album is the beautiful "None But the Lonely Heart"...For sheer piano magic, don't miss the Franz Liszt Columbia Masterworks album, featuring Gyorgy Sandor, highlighted by a thrilling keyboard rendition of "Hungarian Rhapsody." Columbia has just issued an album of the complete "Showboat" score sung by the original company, including Carol Bruce, Jan Clayton, and Kenneth Spencer...A single twelve-inch record treasure is James Melton's tenoring of "Soliloquy" from "Carousel" recorded on Victor Red Seal.

... to Mexico with

Joan Fontaine and Bill Dozier stepping from the clouds to say “I do!”

IN a graceful old house with a tar roof and grilled gates, Joan Fontaine and William Dozier said “I do” to each other last May second... the only English words spoken in a Spanish ceremony. But in any language the marriage ceremony makes the same sweet pledges.

They had eloped in the modern spirit—in a great American World Airways transport plane that left Lockheed Airport late one afternoon and set them down in Mexico City the next day. Once there, they had gone straight to the house of Joan’s old friends, Mr. and Mrs. George Conway, and with them had gone Bill Dozier’s long-time friend Colonel Max Felix, who was best man. And now, several hours later, they were being married—with Joan looking the way every eloping bride longs to look.

She wore a natural-colored shantung two-piece suit, with a hat of the same shade trimmed in brown and green orchids. On her right arm swung a dark green handbag which she carried open—to show that it was filled with fresh brown and green orchids which she herself had rushed out to buy from a greenhouse only an hour earlier. This was her bridal bouquet, the real orchids in the bag matching exactly the artificial ones on her hat. Beside her stood Bill Dozier, the blue-eyed, brown-haired, thirty-nine-year-old studio executive who was becoming her husband.

There was quiet in the sunlit living room as the flow of Spanish words from the judge came to a stop. Everyone waited, including Joan’s attendant, Mrs. Conway; Mr. Conway; and the best man, Colonel Felix. Even the Mexican judge seemed to (Continued on page 26) man and wife.

Every elopement has a story behind it.
Behind Joan's and Bill's are several stories.
Bill had just been divorced by his wife of seventeen years' standing, a wife who had married in his boyhood home of Omaha, Nebraska. In the ten years he had lived in Hollywood, he had come a long way—from a business adviser of the Berg-Allenberg Agency to its top story salesman; from that to story head of Paramount; then to assistant to the president of RKO. His forceful personality is known to the inner circle of Hollywood—whereas Joan is famous all over the world.
People everywhere know the Fontaine vital statistics: That she was born in Japan; that she was divorced from Brian Aherne two years ago.

But behind this Mexican elopement lay a far different romance to the one Joan had had with Aherne. That first courtship had begun with the time Joan walked up to Brian at a cocktail party and told the amused Englishman: "A fortune teller told me you and I would be married in a month.
I'm Joan Fontaine." There followed a rapid courtship in every night club, at every restaurant—and a month later, marriage.

But this romance had been rooted as deply in business as the Aherne romance had been rooted in flirtations fun.

It began one evening last October, when RKO executive William Dozier asked RKO star Joan Fontaine to have a business diner with him at Lacey's, directly opposite RKO. This meeting was to discuss "Christabel Cain," in which Joan was to star—a picture that was finally postponed completely.

That dinner was the start of many business meetings, most of them at the studio, some of them at the same handy-to-the-studio restaurant. And then one night business went out the window and love came in . . . but still there were overtones of business echoing in their romance—even in Joan's exquisite wedding-ring itself.

It is a beautiful ring—a wide gold band with tiny diamonds forming a barber-pole pattern across it. It was made especially, for Joan to wear in "Christabel Cain." When they were discussing a ring before they eloped, Joan told Bill how much she loved that ring.

Bill, without telling her, sent down from her office to the wardrobe department—and bought the ring from the studio! So it was that ring that he slipped on her finger in Mexico City on May second.

Their first two days together were spent in Taso at the La Borda Hotel, while a typically Mexican wild holiday celebration was going on around them in the —some kind of a fourth of July celebration on May 3rd, with firecrackers and —explanation vagueness . . . vaguely that they were hardly aware of the celebration or of anything else but each other. Then they went to Acapulco for three days, staying at the Los Flamingos Hotel. There Bill took two hours out to go fishing, while Joan stayed ashore and waited for him.

"Since it was his first ocean fishing, I thought he'd come back empty-handed," says she. "But no—he came back with a 150-pound marlin and two large sailfish.
After two hours' fishing! That's my Bill!"

Of course honeymooners don't resemble ordinary tourists in any respect, and Joan and Bill hardly saw Mexico City while they were there. They went only once to Ciro's famous night club, and the sole Hollywood acquaintance they looked up was A. C. Blumenthal. Occasionally they visited Joan's Spanish and Mexican friends for cocktails and dinner. But most of the time Joan saw Bill, and Bill saw Joan.

Even the far-famed shopping indulged in by all tourists in Mexico City went by the board. They bought presents only for Joan's cook Augustine, her maid Mona and her new secretary Mary Simpson (who is Bill's former secretary!). Otherwise they came away from Mexico City empty-handed—but full of memories.

They were only in Hollywood two days before leaving for the second half of their honeymoon. They headed for New York.
Joan's sister Olivia de Havilland met them at dawn at the airport, and for the next six days they were on a dizzying round of theater-going and partying—with a different cocktail party given in their honor every night of the visit. And Joan made up for the "no shopping" in Mexico City—by buying so many fluffy new hats for herself that now she owns eighty-five!
"But I never dare wear one without Bill's okay," she says, laughing.

One night they were rushing out to see the play "State of the Union." In the elevator as they went down to the lobby, Bill suddenly discovered that they had four tickets instead of two. "What'll we do with the extra ones?" Joan asked as they raced through the lobby toward the taxi.
She smiled in passing at two of her most faithful fans, a ten-year-old and a twelve-year-old who waited nightly at the hotel door to wave to her.
Bill saw them too, and pulled Joan to a stop just outside the taxi. "Why not take the two kids with us?" he asked, gesturing toward the small fans at the hotel door.

"Why not indeed?" said Joan—and so it was that two startled and utterly delighted kids found themselves stuffed into a taxi with Joan and Bill and carried off to an evening in the theater. In the foyer of the theater, Joan telephoned their parents to tell them the children wouldn't be home until eleven. And after the theater, Joan and Bill saw the two dazzled youngsters home in a taxi.

They will have the place (if not the time) for all kinds of hospitality in their newly bought honeymoon home in Brentwood. It is a small and charming house made of flagstone and redwood, set in three and a half acres of woods. There's an orchard, too, and beside the house is a pool. In the house will live the newlyweds, plus three other people—Joan's tried-and-true servants Augustine and Mona, and her new secretary Mary Simpson. They expect Bill's sixteen-year-old son by his former marriage to come calling often, and to bring his friends for a swim.

The furnishings of the house are from Joan's recently-sold home, but all of her "formal" things she has put in storage—all her elaborate silver and linens. For Joan, famed in Hollywood as a precisely perfect hostess, now has a completely new concept of happy living.

"We're going to live in a different way, Bill and I," she says now. "We're going to live informally. Our living room will prove it. It's an enormous room, and we're going to try and make it look like the outdoors—with pottery and plants, and great glass windows looking over the pool. And for carpeting we're going to use a huge artificial grass mat, the kind they use on a movie set for lawns. We'll have card tables scattered around it, and a built-in Capehart, and in it we hope to entertain at casual buffet dinners—and to just enjoy it when we're alone together."

This from the girl who planned the perfect bachelor girl house with no servants and no steady man in her life! But love changed her mind and heart and plans for the bachelor-girl house have been carefully tucked away!

THE enjoyment of their new home couldn't start for more than three weeks after their return from New York, though. They reached Hollywood again on a Saturday morning. Saturday noon they moved into their new house, and Saturday night Joan left for location on her new picture, "The Emperor Waltz."

But the location, Jasper National Park in Canada, was beautiful enough to almost make it seem worthwhile. Here Joan (an Academy Award winner for "Suspicion") was acting with Bing Crosby (the Academy Award winner for "Going My Way")—under the producing-directing banners of Charles Brackett and Billy Wilder (Academy Award winners for "The Lost Weekend"). And to make things perfect, Bill decided to spend ten days on location with Joan. She could act, he could fish—and their honeymoon could go on.

"But we expect to honeymoon for at least ten more years," he says, looking into her eyes. "After ten years, then maybe we can settle down to being dull married people."

"And meanwhile we'll have three children," Joan says, looking into Bill's eyes. "Yes indeed," says Bill. "One that looks like Joan and another that looks like Joan—and another that looks like Joan!"

"You're a very lucky guy," grins Joan. "You're a very lucky girl," grins Bill.

How can you help wishing a couple like that all the luck in the world? Even if they don't need your wishes?

THE END

Are you in the know?

Which leaves you cooler—

- A hot bath
- A lukewarm bath
- A cold shower

When the mere goes berserk, dunk that sizzling little carcass in a lukewarm bath. It leaves you cooler than hot or cold ablations. There's no taboo on tubbing at "certain" times, either, when bathing's not only beneficial but a must if you'd be dainty. And did you know Kotex contains a deodorant? Moreover, the deodorant is locked inside each napkin so it can't shake out. A new Kotex charm-saver!

If your nails split, should you—

- Smooth them with an emery board
- Trim them with your teeth
- Wear artificial nails

No use sighing over split nails. To smooth them, give your nails the business with an emery board, daily. Since a gal can't hide her hands forever, nail care spares you many uncomfortable moments. And so, on "trying" days, does Kotex. In fact, Kotex is the Word for comfort—because the softness of Kotex stays and stays. Yes, Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing. That means curfew for chafing!

What's new on the beach this year?

- The Lifeguard
- The Bloomer Girl
- The hamburgers

If you want to wow the beach crowd, take your cue from the Bloomer Girl (shown here). Her swim suit's news—and a far cry from the bathing bloomers of granny's day! Just as Kotex is far different from old-fashioned sanitary napkins. Consider the blessing of Kotex flat tapered ends: pressed flat so they don't cause revealing outlines! And that special Kotex safety center gives you plus protection.

A DEODORANT in every Kotex napkin at no extra cost

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

TWENTY years ago, the Warner brothers stood on the threshold of a vision.

Vitaphone was ready. Sound motion pictures were a reality. Years of planning and research now were rewarded by the assurance of success.

But the extent of that success was beyond the grasp of anyone at the time.

In mid-1926, when Vitaphone was ready for its introduction, we were in the twentieth year of motion-picture business. The beginning had been a tiny theater remodeled from a storeroom in New Castle, Pa. My father had had to pawn his cherished gold watch to raise the money for our start. We had borrowed ninety-six chairs from a nearby undertaker and every time a funeral took place the audience had to stand.

By 1912, when there were five Warner theaters, we decided the only way to insure a supply of acceptable films was to make them ourselves.

From the time of our entrance into production, many factors worked in our favor. But I am sure, now, that the cohesive force in our company's progress was our earnest belief in the importance of motion pictures and the inevitability of their advancement. We attempted many developments and changes of technique, some of which today might appear trivial or obvious. But at that time, they were critical milestones.

The time came when it appeared likely that science could give substance to our dream. To go ahead would call for the staking of our entire resources.

We went ahead. And we won.

It was a hard, exhausting experience. An unforeseen sacrifice was the life of my brother, Sam L. Warner, who unstintingly had given himself to the vision of progress.

Ahead of the company now spread a panorama of triumph. From every quarter came the highest praise—for the technical perfection and the artistic achievement of Vitaphone.

What few of us realized then was the far more important fact that democracy was to be given a new voice. Now all the people of the world—all, at least, who were permitted to patronize the politically untrammeled screen—would be able far better to understand each other's ambitions, problems and ways of life. Unable to help in preventing war, because they were banned from the screens of the aggressor nations, American films did help to awaken democratic countries to the dangers ahead.

In war, motion pictures served spectacularly in conveying government messages to the home front. And in the preparation of troops, they were credited with a reduction in training time of as much as forty per cent.

Our company is proud of having brought into reality its original dream of giving a voice to the screen. But we are prouder still of having met, in full measure, the great responsibilities and opportunities presented by the medium we created.
I want you to know two people in my life. One is Timothy Quine whom Dick and I have just adopted; the other is Laraine Day who started the whole thing . .

(Signed) Susan Peters
I'm glad it's Laraine I'm writing about this month. She'll understand if I should digress a bit. You see, I don't become a mother in every issue. I must watch myself in the future, too, or this series will switch from "My Hollywood Friends" to "My Baby's Diary," or "The Life and Loves of Timothy Quine." We adopted Tim, (it was a mutual agreement—he likes us, too!) when he was ten days old. He weighed nine pounds, two ounces at birth and he has the prettiest blue eyes you ever—there, you see!

The reason I'm so sure Daisy (that's Laraine) will understand my motherly one-track is that we are both in the same bassinet, so to speak. She, too, is an adopted mother—but on a mass production basis. What Henry Kaiser was to wartime shipbuilding, Daisy is to post-war baby adopting. The Hendricks family grew larger by three little people within seven months! That's a family, son!

Laraine just naturally does things in a big way. If it's worth doing, it's worth doing—colossally. No matter if it's a job of acting to be done, a home to run, a dress to wear, or a party to give. For instance, the shower she gave for Timothy last Sunday. Tim looked so cute. He was dressed in a blue knitted—well, I'll tell you about that (Continued on page 103)

Ever since I was a little girl I have had all sorts of pets. I remember in England at our house in the country there was a nest under the eaves, just outside my bedroom window, with a darling little family of swallows in it. That was why we named our house Little Swallows.

It was such fun down there. You see we lived in London on Wildwood Road, and we went down to Little Swallows for the summer and weekends. The days were so busy and so exciting with all our pets. My brother Howard (who is two years and eight months older than I am) always had a lot of pets too.

We had rabbits, turtles, snakes, baby lambs, guinea pigs. Then we always had kittens all over the place and dogs of all kinds.

But—we never had a Chipmunk!
Now if you have never had a chipmunk, you won’t know what you have missed. I think a chipmunk is the nicest little pet and companion anyone could possibly have. I caught twenty-five when we were on location and they were all different. Some were shy and timid, some more daring and bold. But the point of it is they were all little individuals, and then! there was—

NIBBLES.

To introduce you properly to Nibbles, I'll have to tell you first of all how and where he came into my life. It was a year ago this August when we went to Lake Chelan, Washington, on location for "The Courage of Lassie." When I read the manuscript, I could hardly wait to get started. The first part of the picture is like a wonderful symphony acted out by all sorts of animals. And when I heard we were going to Lake Chelan for three months—three months outdoors—it just seemed too good to be true.

Mummmie was afraid I would be lonesome without any other children to play with, but (Continued on page 68) Dream, it says here. But what do you call a dream that comes true?

"Symphony of love," chorus Jeanne and Paul
THIS is to give you the present Crossley on Hollywood’s “madcap” marriage. To tell you what manner of girl she is, this very lovely, very young Jeanne Crain who had the courage to take what she wanted in her two slim hands. To get you further acquainted with the man who carried off the sought-after beauty against formidable odds.

Looking at Jeanne Crain you find yourself thinking of New York in May, after a clean spring rain. It seems almost impudent to ask this fresh, dewy-eyed girl how her marriage is working out. When, not fifteen minutes later, her darkly handsome young husband joins her, the answer is all too obvious.

Paul Brinkman arrives early to pick up his wife. You sense immediately that they don’t like to be separated for very long. He offers to go away and come back later—but by that time Jeanne has made room for him and is pulling him down beside her.

What do they talk to each other about, this supposedly madcap pair? They talk of floor plans, of blueprints, of the progress of the home they are building. Of plumbing, and gravel, and the cost of trees. Good sound stuff! With an African safari thrown in to hep it up a bit.

Looking at Paul Brinkman carefully, curiously, you like what you see. It seems good and right to trust the happiness of the much-loved young star to this particular young man. His manner is impressive. He has a dashing quality in his good looks, his tanned face, his casual clothes, which he wears with the complete assurance attributed to well-dressed Englishmen. With his girl wife he exhibits a deep sweetness.
Breakfast at the Brinkmans—who just get used to one kitchen when it’s time to move again.

In the Brinkman family it’s Paul who’s the boss.

It is hard to look at them now and remember that their wedding on the last day of 1945 unleashed a storm of speculation about their chances for lasting happiness. But the surface facts seemed to indicate that they had several counts against them.

In the first place, Jeanne was very young and of the Catholic faith and personal conviction which meant that her marriage would be “for keeps.” Her sophisticated husband was not of the motion-picture world which claimed so much of his bride’s love and interest. Most important, Jeanne’s mother had not been able, at a given moment on Christmas Eve, to say the words that would encourage this beloved young daughter to take such a final step.

Jeanne Crain left her home that Christmas Eve and remained in seclusion until, by special dispensation from her church, setting aside the publishing of the last two bans, she was able to wed the man of her choice. It all added up, in the dramatic searchlight of publicity, to a “madcap” marriage.

But the true story is something very far removed from the hasty or thoughtless act of two infatuated people. The happiness and success of their union, evidenced by their real serenity and contentment, by their far-reaching plans for a rich full future, is the result of their strict adherence to what they consider the most important thing in (Continued on page 107)
King of his valley: Ranch hand Clark Gable in his happiest role
He rang the bell in "Adventure"—against his own judgment. He does all right in the romance handicaps, too. But there's another score that Clark Gable has yet to settle.

But—

"How bad does a picture have to be to make a fortune?" asks Mr. Gable himself. "Am I as lousy as I appeared to be to be in that one?"

Clark Gable is gratified at the success of "Adventure" and feels a deep sense of satisfaction and humility over the fact that his public did not forget him. But he's not fooled by this hit. He's not fooled by many things. Not that he is a great thinker. But he instinctively arrives at the right answers.

Now that he's back, now that he's returned to civilian life—and now that neither Garson nor any other lovely has got him—he is trying to find a lot of right answers to many things. The most popular man in the world, he's desperately lonely. He dashes around from place to place—in any one of his five high-powered cars, or by plane, or by motorcycle, or on horseback—but he doesn't remain anywhere.

Recently he was at the Arizona Biltmore, that luxury hotel in Phoenix, having a bout of hunting, golfing and riding. There the name in the Gable news was blonde and gracious Mrs. Betty Chisholm, widow of iron magnate Archie Chisholm. She has a home in the Biltmore Estates not far from the hotel and Clark spent a good deal of time with her, for she fits the Gable formula of being a good sport. Also, it is possible they had something in common in the memory of a love taken away by death. (Continued on page 110)
Appeal in tweeds: Guy Madison, starred in "Till the End of Time"
The thing I like best about Guy Madison is his frankness.

I let other people swoon over his tall and terrific looks. What I go for is the way Guy gives you a straight answer. He'll level with you even when he knows his answer may hurt.

Take hats, for instance. He hates them. I do too. But sometimes I've got to wear them. I put one on and I ask in what I hope is a very persuasive voice, "How do I look?"

"Gruesome," says Guy.

He's like that about everything. He thinks if people ask his opinion they really want it. So he gives it. That's personal integrity, a wonderful quality anywhere, a practically unique quality in Hollywood. Maybe it's even a stern quality, but I like it because you know where you stand with Guy.

Not, you understand, that it bores me that he's handsome—but I've always sort of disregarded looks in a man—and so does Guy. He's not such a goon that he's unaware of the total effect of his height, his face and his eyes combined, but he has no conceit about it. I suppose one of the things I admire most about him is that he refuses to wear any make-up whatsoever for the camera, and I've never yet caught him in that comb-through-the-wavy-hair routine. He's always sneaking away to comb it because people are forever kidding him about it. He always comes back with it plastered down.

All I've ever required of a man is that he should look rugged.

Another sharp thing about him is his having so many (Continued on page 74)
Days to remember from an ace director about a redhead the marquee calls Rita Hayworth and whom he calls "all emotion"

RITA HAYWORTH has to work with other directors. I have to work with other stars. Therefore it is, I suppose, very indiscreet of me to say that she is my favorite star—and I hope I am her favorite director. But that is what she is and that is what I hope I am.

I regard Rita as one of the most beautiful, one of the most talented, and one of the sweetest of human beings. We have made three pictures together so far—her first essay into real acting, "The Lady in Question" in 1940, and her two top hits, "Cover Girl" and "Gilda." Personally, I wish we were going to make another thirty together.

Do not decide from this that I am a Pollyanna who feels admiringly about all stars. I would undoubtedly be a much nicer person if I did and perhaps a much better director. But since I'm trying to tell the truth about Rita, I might as well go the whole way and tell the truth about me, too.

There are, alas, some stars whom I can't abide—and probably they return the feeling. Once I made a picture with a star to whom I never spoke—off the set. That's how terribly we were on one another's nerves.

A director's job is to get from his players a greater performance than they know they are (Continued on page 86)
Exciting Woman-

BY CHARLES VIDOR
As told to Ruth Waterbury
It was the blackest night of his life as he walked alone, a three-time failure, fighting the will to die

BY DOROTHY DEERE

IT WAS a black night, but a soft one. Breathing was like a deep drink of mimosa and jasmine syrup with a stir of Pacific salt-breeze for seasoning. All the sharp noises of the day had muffled themselves in dusk. Tires hummed instead of sang on the pavement now and the radios along the California campus row had taken on a wooing tone. Even the trees held their ceaseless conversation down to a gentle whispering.

A soft night for most, but for the tall boy walking alone it was only a black one. Gregory Peck’s fists were clenched in his pockets and his face strained upward to the stars. Perhaps no one abroad this night was so acutely conscious of how close those stars seemed, or so agonizingly aware of how unattainable they actually were. His long legs that had no clear idea of where they were going quickened their desperate stride.

Not mimosa, but a stale odor of cookery drifted from a sorority house window as he passed. “Phi Beta Cabbage” house, the fellows called it who “hashed” there for their meals. Under their breaths, they called it that because the girls in the house were pretty and pert, and even running down to breakfast in flannel robes and with their curlers still tied up under scarves, they smelled quite pleasant. There was one girl, with green eyes, who used an especially nice brand of soap or cold cream or something. The trouble was that the green eyes could turn so mocking and the lips under them could take on such a quick, amused curve, if a fellow proved a bit awkward in setting the coffee or scrambled eggs on the table. The mocking green eyes and the amused smile had been there in the student theater workshop tonight—along with all the other mocking eyes and smiles.

She rates whistles on the street, but feels more like a queen when a man doffs his hat in the elevator

By BEN MADDOX

You can't understand Maureen O'Hara unless you meet her. Then it doesn't take long, for she is no poseur, this girl who, after weathering years in Hollywood as a mere beauty, is now coming spectacularly into her own.

You sense instantly she's not cold or haughty, as the scripts of the swashbuckling tales she's decorated have made her. There's a clear, fresh warmth to her smile and the grasp of her hand. As you talk to her you know she would never be attracted by a super-dashing, flamboyantly adventurous hero, for great gestures strike no spark in her.

Almost the only thing she has in common with what you have seen on the screen is her beauty. Yet there is a surprise quality even in this. For she hasn't a vestige of vanity. Good looks run in her Irish family, so she takes them for granted. Her share she regards as nothing but a professional asset, never to be used as a snare for others or as a substitute for qualities that count.

Blithely she violates many a touted Hollywood rule; for instance, the one about being seen with the right people. Maureen herself would be the first to tell you she's not in with the society pace-setters.

"I've rarely been asked to a glittery Hollywood party," she admits frankly. And adds, under her breath, "My life with my husband is simple and complete." Thus she proves you don't have to buzz about with the gay whirlers to be rated as one of the top actresses (Continued on page 71)
Taking Drake Apart...

... and putting him together again through a revealing friend's-eye view

BY HOWARD SHARPE

IF YOU want to know what Tom Drake is doing these days—what he thinks, how he feels about things, what gets his goat, what doesn't, what he does and with what fervor he does it—you would be well advised to go out to M-G-M and look up, first, a writer named Morton Thompson. Thompson has two great enthusiasms, one old, one new. The first: Horses. The second: Tom.

They first met one morning when the young man came hesitantly into Morton's office carrying a book. It was Thompson's "Joe, the Wounded Tennis Player" and would Mr. Thompson mind autographing it? This sort of thing is always a mussy business; you have to be grateful and modest and casual all at once; you have to keep the rest of the paragraph you were writing in mind while you gabble something and the pen always, diabolically, runs out of ink.

Besides, this fellow looked a good seventeen—without-much-sleep—lately, bit his nails and obviously had selected his clothes from the United Nations Relief box up by the front gate. Thompson, who rather likes lemon-colored flannels and twenty-dollar shirts, felt suddenly short of conversational topics. Remembering that, for the movies, the title of his book had been changed to "My Brother
The lived-in living room of his house.
Tom’s a seeker, demanding to know the answers to whatever interests him.

They’re buddies—Tom, as an Army sergeant, with Lassie during filming of M-G-M’s “The Courage of Lassie”
Who Talks to Horses," he made a remark or two about the ponies.

The next thing he knew he found himself tearing down the highway to Tijuana, Mexico, on the way to the races there. They were in Tom's convertible, piloted by Tom himself, who lay flat on his spine behind the wheel and looked anywhere but at the road. Thompson—when he could speak again—said, "Why don't you take up flying and be done with it?"

"Good idea," said Tom. "As soon as I get the racing stable started." He considered for a moment. "What the heck," he said then, "no reason why I can't do both at once. What kind of a plane should I buy first?"

Morton just sat, a delighted, amazed grin spreading over his face. No one like this had happened to him in years and he had just discovered that he could be very fond of this young man, given time.

"Tom," says Thompson, "is the most naive living human, and yet one of the smartest. He can't add two and two, but he can take a Taylor-Craft twoseater upstairs with an instructor for one hour, and then they tell him to go for his physical so he can solo next time. While Betty and Dick were making "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," Dick was scheduled to give a noon interview. He was chatting with the writer when Bill Burton, eyes a-glitter, dropped into a chair and pulled himself up to the table. "Don't let on," he warned Dick, "but I've just planted a wonderful gag with Betty. I told her—strictly in confidence, see—that today was your birthday. I said you had kept the date dark because you didn't want to take a lot of ribbing. Nor, on the other hand, did you want a big celebration planned. She was all excited. Said she was going to have a cake with candles sent to the table."

Dick groaned. "You shouldn't have done it," he said. "You know how Betty is. She'll send her secretary out to Beverly Hills and pick up some really nice gift for me. The truth that this isn't my birthday is going to fall pretty flat when I'm handed some white-tissue package."

A few minutes later the waitress arrived at the table bearing a silver tray covered by a glistening white napkin. With a ceremonial flourish, she set it before Dick. "From Miss Grable," she said.

Dick swung around toward the table at which Betty was seated, bowed, grinned rather sheepishly, then turned back to his own table. "You see," he said to Bill Burton. He lifted the napkin ... and roared. In all its splendor there lay the very (Continued on page 116)

Wifely touches for Richard of "The Brick Foxhole"

Our Junie has a brand-new set of encyclopedia and plans to have four brand-new babies, as distinguished from the adopted kind, thereby finding time to read all twenty-four volumes. Only by these Acts of God can a star like Junie get any time to herself. Junie ambitiously figures six volumes to the baby without allowing for the possibility of all four chickadees arriving in a set like encyclopedias or Dionnes (minus one). In that quad-blessed event the studio might allow no more time out than for one six-volume accouchment. Anyhow, here's a hot tip for Louella, our beloved stork-chaser: Just find out when Junie begins a volume.

The studio has her working in two pictures simultaneously so they will be ahead, although this really signifies nothing inasmuch as the public is always yelling for more Junie as for sugar.

"Richard says it doesn't hurt to know a little bit about everything," is the way June explains the encyclopedias. Richard is her husband, hitherto known as Dick Powell, reformed crooner turned crook.

Sparked by Richard, Junie is sampling all the sweets of knowledge. She stuck her thumb into the Britannicas and pulled out "science" which she finds so delectable she is crying for a laboratory. Richard says he will build her one (Continued on page 113)
Some movie stars have traveled around the world on the screen. Peter Lawford has done his traveling in real life. He was born on September 7, 1923, in London, the only child of Lieutenant General Sir Sydney (retired) and Lady Lawford.

He has probably visited more countries than most travelers see in a lifetime and his wanderings read like Sinbad’s diary—Paris, Monte Carlo, Nice, Deauville, Cannes, Sydney, Melbourne, Colombo, Honolulu, Tahiti, Barcelona, Lisbon, Nassau, Bombay, Panama...

Strangely enough, it was Peter’s successful debut in British pictures (in "Old Bill" in 1930) which started him on his travels. Papa Lawford didn’t relish the idea of a child prodigy for a son so he kept his boy out of harm’s way by making two trips around the world during the next eight years. Their world wanderings wound up in Hollywood where by a strange freak of fate Peter’s histrionic talents were to save the day for the Lawford dynasty!

By Lynn Perkins
M-G-M executives were searching high and lo!—in walked the very young man they were looking for. Peter Lawford had arrived on a sight-seeing jaunt of the studio. Here eagle-eyed big shots, desperate for a British lad to play in “Lord Jeff,” pounced on him and wouldn’t let him leave the lot before he had signed a contract.

There was a Palm Beach vacation at the outbreak of World War II with Peter out of funds, owing to the freezing order on British currency. The versatile lad rode herd on cars in a parking lot to earn the fare back to California.

Back in Hollywood, Peter found that, unfortunately, one role doesn’t necessarily mean another. A fanatical movie fan, he satisfied his hobby and solved his financial problems by working as an usher and general handy man at the Westwood Village Theater.
He got a part in the Academy Award-winning picture, "Mrs. Miniver." Next, "Eagle Squadron," "Thunderbirds" and, back at M-G-M, "A Yank at Eton." He started studying like mad under Lillian Burns, dramatic coach and noted star groomer.

His musical slant on life is towards ukulele and drums. He likes his music hot! In fact, he likes everything American, including hot dogs and drive-ins and he soon hopes to become an honest-to-goodness American—when he gets his citizenship papers.

PHOTOLIFE OF PETER LAWFORD

Lawford's aristocratic air fits him perfectly for his role in "Two Sisters from Boston"—a wealthy art patron. Here he's with co-star June Allyson. Pete also stars with Jennifer Jones in "Cluny Brown."
His tremendous vitality seems to counteract his one meal a day—one continuous one. He is a remorseless eater. Lady Lawford starts her men off with a big breakfast. When he's away from the set, ten to one you'll find him in the commissary downing a hunk of pastry and malted milk.

By the polls, and by the mathematics of the fan-mail figures, Peter Lawford, who is six feet tall and weighs 158 pounds, is coming to be reckoned, by all accounts, as "the hottest young man in Hollywood!"

Peter is not (yet) entirely American in word . . . but he is all-American in deed! In the United States five years, he is reeling for his citizenship papers by making an extensive study of America.

His parents share in everything he does—and often, when he goes home from work or a date to the modest white stucco cottage in Westwood, he finds admiring fans visiting with his parents while they wait for him.

Eager, intelligent, talented, young Lawford combines the best qualities of the British and American characters. In the near future you will be meeting a new man—

If you break a mirror do you shudder—just a little—at the seven years ahead?

Ever hang a horseshoe over your door?

Some manner of superstition is common to almost all of us. For superstitions are heritages, handed down from our savage ancestors who eons ago roamed a wet green world. The origins of many have been lost with the years. Others, like a broken mirror bringing bad luck or a horseshoe over a doorway bringing good luck, are easily explained.

The savage who watched his reflection in a pool believed part of his spirit was imprisoned there too. If a stone was thrown into the water, perhaps by an enemy, and broke his image, he screamed with agony and writhed on the ground as if mortally wounded. For he believed, you see, that when his image was shattered some of his spirit had flown from him—that he was in danger of dying, that anything could happen for the next seven moons; seven being the mystic number of all time. Thus, breaking a mirror, we fear “seven years of bad luck.”

A horseshoe, like the headdress of Isis the Egyptian goddess of life, is an inverted U. The ancients, terrorized by death, hung a U emblem over their doorways to keep evil spirits away. Even as you and I.

Often enough, of course, still responding to our distant relatives’ belief that certain symbols court good fortune or repel ill fortune, we create superstitions of our own based on individual or family experience. . . .

Like Glenn Ford who sees to it that the letters OPC appear in every picture he makes. In “Flight Lieutenant” these letters were worked into the orders on the fliers’ call-board. In “Texas” they were written on the back of one of the wagons. In “Gilda” they were the initials of one of the members of the cartel.

But when it came to “A Stolen Life,” the fate of the OPC was hanging in the balance. My good friend Bette Davis reports that she had bet him fifty dollars his lucky letters would not get into her picture. It was the last day of shooting—and the letters had appeared nowhere. Time was short and Bette's eyes were merrily mocking. The scene was a beach sequence in which she had long passages to say and in her preoccupation she failed to note the pattern Glenn was innocently tracing in the sand with a stick. Presto—OPC was in the picture—or rather Glenn was seen writing it.

Glenn explains to no one what OPC means. He says only that for him they stand for something very sentimental and lucky.

Joan Lorrning, on the other hand, cannot pass a hitchhiker and very eloquently tells why. One night, when the hunt was on for a girl to play in "The Corn Is Green," Rhys Williams, noted Welsh actor who helped cast this film, picked up a man thumbing a ride because his car had broken down. Driving along, Rhys spoke of the difficulty they were having in finding the right girl to play Bessie Watty. His hitchhiker, a radio actor, immediately launched into praise of Joan with whom he had worked in radio. Interested, Rhys asked for Joan's name and address. The next day he telephoned her and she went to the Warner Studios, took a test—and got the part which launched her upon her screen career.

"I've never passed a hitchhiker since," Joan says, "in spite of all the warnings I've had about its not being safe for a young girl to pick up strange people. I have a feeling that something terrible might happen to me if I don't stop for anyone who is thumbing a ride."

THEATER people, highly imaginative and subject to frequent and sudden changes in fortune, are especially superstitious. Take Joan Bennett, born and bred in the theatrical tradition.

"I'm not superstitious," Joan says with her quiet smile. "It's just that I don't enjoy lighting three on a match or walking under a ladder or having in my house ivy or love birds or elephant statuettes—unless, of course, their trunks are up. As for throwing salt over your shoulder or knocking on wood—it does (Continued on page 100)
Among those present—Ingrid Bergman joined the audience of patients at Birmingham Hospital for first look at picture she starred in, "Spellbound"
THE
OF

In critical times, man invents the thing he most needs, whether it be an atom bomb or a leader or a symbol.

In the flamboyant decade of the late twenties there came a woman named Garbo who answered a need, a reaching for the unattainable. Quite the reverse was the vogue for Mae West who arrived at the peak of the depression when the world wanted a lusty laugh.

Now, in the pain-ridden years of these forties, has risen another answer—the Bergman dream of a woman, a dream a man wants to keep beside him.

To him she offers the poetry of daytime, of open warmth and liberated laughter, of vitality and gentleness and companionship.

This is mother and lover and companion.

This is Maria and Clio and Sister Benedict.

This is Ingrid Bergman.

On her travels, mothers have brought their daughters and asked if they might meet her. "She wants to be like her," they have said to me, "and I am glad."

Once, when returning to Los Angeles on The Chief, a hatchet-faced woman strode up and slapped Bergman on the shoulder. "Hello!" she shouted. "Y'know last night when you walked through the club car, a man next to me said, 'Now, there goes a gorgeous woman!' I told him who you were and y'know what he said? 'Haven't seen a movie in ten years—never heard of Bergman. But that's my idea of a gorgeous woman!'" Whereupon the woman gave Ingrid another resounding thwack and disappeared.

During the filming of "Notorious," one of Hollywood's irresponsible columnists intimated that Cary Grant couldn't see straight because he was so "madly in love" with Bergman. Cary, who adores her (as who doesn't?) and who is the soul of decorum, raged at the implications underlying the statement. I saw the castigating note he sent by messenger to the misguided columnist.
The indignation sizzled and spread throughout the whole company.

In her dressing room Ingrid found a note from the make-up man: Never mind those leading men. Who ain't in love with you? Include me in! (signed) Lane Britton.

Then a petition was drawn up by the sound recorder, addressed to the hapless culprit, declaring that “we, the undersigned, are all in love with Miss Bergman,” followed by the signatures of every technician and mechanic on the set.

Here, indeed, was the symbol born of the need.

Speaking of Greta Garbo, it is of more than passing interest that the two have never met, although four years ago they both worked on the same lot at the same time. Garbo, eternally “unattainable,” never took time out to make a gracious gesture towards her countrywoman. They even passed each other on the studio street without Garbo so much as glancing in Bergman’s direction. Despite this, however, Ingrid has never ventured one word of criticism and never has ceased to speak of Garbo as one of the great actresses of all time.

In all her acts and attitudes Ingrid manages with an unpretentiousness and warmth characteristic of one to whom fame has been but an adjunct of a profession.

While on her camp tour of Europe she casually wandered one day into the Red Cross in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia. Without ado she got a doughnut and a cup of coffee. At first no one noticed her; then slowly GIs, who never dreamed that she was in the vicinity, stared at her incredulously. She finished her coffee and just as casually departed.

At an American Youth For Democracy dinner, at which she was a guest for the purpose of presenting an award to an heroic Army nurse, she singled out of the 600 guests a soldier whom she had met two years before in Alaska. She remembered the soldier who had accompanied her to the PX and helped her buy cleansing tissue and chewing gum. The reunion was spirited.

To the horror of milliners, Ingrid Bergman never wears a hat, and when traveling carries with her only a wide-brimmed, plain black felt, which she puts on only in case of inclement weather. When she was in Ottawa she was invited to a reception at Rideau Hall, the Governor-General's palace, to be received by the Earl of Athlone and his wife, the Princess Alice.

When the royal emissaries arrived to escort us they were aghast that Miss Bergman was not wearing a hat. It seemed that women could not appear hatless before royalty. It simply was not done.

The black felt—designed strictly for travel and street wear—was the only headgear she had. "Very well," she said and, shrugging her shoulders, donned the hat, gave it a tilt, and together with her semi-formal black dress, made her appearance. The ensemble could hardly be termed vogueish, but the lady carried it with grace and dignity.

On several occasions she breakfasted alone at New York's Schrafft's. Once, lingering over a morning (Continued on page 88)
DEAR MISS COLBERT:

After a brief and unfortunate marriage to a man I discovered was a heavy drinker, I got a divorce, put our infant daughter in a boarding nursery home and went back to my old job.

For six or seven months I was able to visit Noreen every weekend. Then I took sick, lost a month's work and when I went back to work I was so broke that I didn't have car fare to go to see the baby. When I finally did get out there, I found that she had forgotten me completely. It became clear in the months that followed that I was a stranger whose presence was resented. The baby's foster mother told me that the baby would not go to sleep and that I needed to get away from her. I have spent the day with her. I know that it's a strange thing to say, but my own daughter doesn't like me. She is now a little over two years, with definite personality and positive tastes, and I'm more than half afraid of her.

I am now preparing to marry a fine man whom I have known for eighteen months. We're in love and we mean to build a good life together. When I talked this over with the baby's foster mother, I thought she would lose her mind. She says that I will make the baby sick and she has implored me to let her adopt Noreen.

This woman is a fine person and loves the baby; so does her husband. As for me, I could start another family. What should I do?

Mrs. Barbara T.

Since you already feel alienated from the child and since Noreen's foster mother is so devoted to her, perhaps the best possible thing for the child—considering the possibility of an emotional upset if she were taken away—would be to leave her with the woman who has reared her thus far.

However, she is—and I say this without meaning to be maudishly sentimental—blood of your blood and bone of your bone. There may come a time in her life when she will turn to you, having come to need the positive assurance that she belongs inalienably to someone.

For that reason, I think you should continue to pay for her care with her foster mother and that you should not give her up for adoption. If the foster mother really loves the child, and your letter would lead me to believe that she does, she will agree to these terms simply for the happiness of keeping Noreen as, apparently, her own.

In closing, may I wish you the greatest possible joy in your new marriage.

Claudette Colbert

DEAR MISS COLBERT:

Two years ago I met my girl and we fell in love. We were planning our future together when I came into the Navy. At that time a lot of girls from my hometown wrote mushy letters and for fun I wrote them the same kind. My girl friend found this out and wrote me a hot letter.

After I went overseas I didn't hear from her for four months. I wrote to her, calling her down plenty. She wrote and said she was sorry and she still loved me. A week or two later I received a letter saying that her conscience was bothering her and she wanted to tell me the whole story. She had been going with another guy ever since I wrote those mushy letters.

I then wrote her an awful letter for sending me that "Dear John." I also had my buddies write what they thought of a girl who did that.

Afterwards I was sorry and apologized, but she didn't answer my letter. When I was at home last August, I knew from the way she acted when I met her accidentally that she still liked me a little—maybe more. But I had hurt her, she said. Well, she has never been hurt like she hurt me.

I'm getting my discharge in seven weeks. When I go home I'd like to see this girl and get started over again with her. Can you tell me how to do it?

Patricia Sanford—charming young New Yorker, engaged to Sergeant Andrew Donnelly, Jr., also of New York.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Sanford, Jr.

Patricia Sanford was sixteen when she first knew Andy Donnelly, and he was nineteen. "He was as unromantic as a big brother to me then," she says with a cute twinkle in her eyes.

Things are different now. Patricia and Andy are engaged!

She's another Pond's bride-to-be. Another girl with a soft-smooth Pond's complexion! "I adore Pond's Cold Cream," Patricia says. "It has the nicest feeling on my face—and leaves my skin looking so clean and smoothed."

Here is her favorite Pond's creamsing:

She smooths soft, snowy Pond's Cold Cream thoroughly over face and throat—and pats well to soften and release dirt and make-up. Tissues it all away.

She rinses with another cream-over, swirling her fingers around in little circles. Tissues off. She thinks this extra Pond's rinse "just fine" to get her face extra clean, extra soft.

Give your complexion a double Pond's creaming every morning, every night—and for daytime freshen-ups! It's no accident so many more women use Pond's than any other face cream at any price. Ask today for a big jar of Pond's.

Looking down into mirror, apply mascara clear to end of lashes. Hold brush there till lashes "set." (About 30 seconds.) Wipe brush clean with half Sitroux Tissue. (SAVE Sitroux!*) Go over lashes to separate. Apply mascaras to upper lashes only for "natural" look.

To extend eyebrows, remove almost all mascara from brush with half Sitroux Tissue. Brush brows the wrong way to pick up tiny hairs. Then brush back into place. If necessary, sketch in hair-like lines with eyebrow pencil.

At bedtime, use eye-cream generously. Gently work out toward temple under eye—back toward nose on eyelid. Remove excess with Sitroux. Keep Sitroux handy for facial cleanings, manucures, dozens of daily "beauty" aids!

Nibbles came from the far end of Lake Chelan, up past Stehegan, where we took some of the scenes with the sheep, and where Frank Morgan, who played Old Harry, was supposed to live. When Mr. Morgan and the sheep were acting, I was out catching chimplunks.

When I trapped them in my box and they seemed frightened or unhappy I let them go. I let several of them out because other chimplunks came up and talked to them and seemed so worried and upset that I was afraid they might be the mother or the father of a family.

When it was time for Nibbles I already had seven others. But I knew he was the one. He knew it, too. He looked me straight in the eye and chirped away. He seemed a little disappointed that I didn’t chirp back. I tried to but it wasn’t quite chimplunk. But he knows what I say to him. Every few minutes he runs back to kiss me and when he eventually gets tired he’ll come back to rest in my pocket or up my sleeve.

He is happy with me. I know he is.

One day Mummie had a very bad cold and the company doctor wouldn’t let her go on location with him. I was afraid she might be lonesome, so I left Nibbles with her. There were seven other chimplunks in their big cage and I thought they would be good company for her. But after I was gone the doctor called me and said when the doctor came to see Mummie he had the cage moved out into the hall.

Well, somehow, the trap door came ajar, and out of a series of movements weird and wild came the wildest chirping and scampering. She opened the door into the hall and there they were, leaping and jumping about on a pile of bedspreads stuck at the end of the room. Nibbles knew Nibbles was among them but they were all moving so fast that she couldn’t tell him from the others, so she decided to catch them all. So she made a trail of seeds and nuts leading from the springs to inside our room.

Finally she got them all into our room. Leaving the cage door open, Mummie went into the bathroom and peeked around the corner to see what they would do. They climbed the curtains. They jumped from one curtain rod to another.

Nibbles, the adventurous one, decided to explore the other end of the toilet. He ran across her toes, up her dressing gown. Then he was off in a flash ... and with a loud splash he landed plunk in the middle of the toilet bowl.

Poor Nibbles! There was only one thing to do—give him a bath. Mummie held him in one hand and soaped him with the other. Then, to sweeten him up, she gave him a bath in a dish of cold bubble sud...

So that was how Nibbles came to have his first bubble bath.

Mummie dried him and put him in his pocket to keep him warm until he fully recovered his composure. Then he was quite content to go into his traveling dressing room. Mummie put him in there and he was quite happy until his sweet smell wore off, as she was afraid the other chipmunks would come near him and think he’d gone Hollywood.

O N E day Eleanor, the hairdresser (Eleanor Hor and Tommie, the wardrobe girl, were both all "National Velvet," and we just love them both), was getting my hair. I was playing with Nibbles when someone came in and, with Nibbles on the back of my neck, I turned to the window and opened the screen.

There was a vine with little red berries all over the building and Nibbles scampered off to feast on the berries. I was dainty and standards out the window bet she first. Fortunately, Eleanor grabbed on foot and Tommie the other and then they held onto me while I dangled head down. Then I saw Nibbles. He was sitting on the violet box and looking out. When I reached him he hopped toward me, onto my arm and into my hand.

Mummie rounded the corner of the hall and saw all the dogs and cats, it was wonderful.

They were all very curious about this new addition. If sniffing anything is any indication, I think they were certainly a lot of conversation about Nibbles.

The next day I could hardly wait to go to the studio to show all my friends Nibbles. I put a string around his neck and thought he looked like a little Gable or a little Garbo and how surprised everyone was. Some of the stars (ladies) screamed and thought it was a mouse ... but when he fluffed up his tail and opened his eyes, and opened a little in developin places, I was no worse for wear.

As soon as I knew where we were leavin location I had a lot to do getting my family organized for the journey. One of the crew made a darling little traveling box for Nibbles. The others were to come on the animal boat, with all the other animals we had used in the picture.

When we got home to Beverly Hill and saw all the dogs and cats, it was wonderful.

o make an exception. We are delighted with the behavior of Nibbles.
Aren't people wonderful?
After that Nibbles went with me everywhere.
He even had interviews. The nicest ones were with Maxine Arnold of Photoplay and Sara Salzer of Screen Guide. And now he loves having his picture taken!
One day when we were going to an interview we ran into Hedda Hopper. She was all dressed up and looking very lovely, and I introduced her to Nibbles. She noticed he was dancing and put out her hand to him whereupon he, with one hand swish of his beautiful tail, leaped lightly onto her hand. He ran straight up her arm, under her coat sleeve! Now you've never had a chipmunk run around under your arm, you just can't imagine how it feels. It's the most terrific tickle in the world. I'm used to it, but poor Hedda wasn't. She screamed and laughed, a wonderful laugh that made everyone run just in time to see her skimming out her coat like a streak of lightning, everyone was roaring—everyone but Nibbles. He meets everybody. He even knows Mr. Louis B. Mayer.

'IBBLES loves cake and ice cream with hot chocolate sauce. Our mutual fondness for ice cream was partly the reason for my breaking my foot. We had lingered over our dessert a bit too long when we suddenly realized it was almost time for my dancing lesson. I was learning "Summertime," one of my favorite songs, and I didn't want to be a minute late so I handed Nibbles to Mummie and said, "Take Nibs and I'll run on ahead."

I had hardly said it before I lunged forward, but my right foot stayed on the floor (my heel caught on a seam of the noleneum) and my body with all the horsepower of my forward lunge came down on my foot. I heard the bone break. I screamed it hurt so and I couldn't move. Mummie and a policeman lifted me up and the chief of police called the ambulance.
It's awful on the lot when you hear the ambulance coming—everyone is so worried. So when they took me in the ambulance and I saw everyone looking sad, I sat up and laughed very loud and waved to them so they wouldn't feel unhappy but would just think I was having a joy ride. And they did. They thought that Nibbles and I were up to some mischief. When the doctor set my foot and put it in a cast I held on tight to Nibbles' traveling case and the first thing that happened was that the cast was on—and we had weathered that storm.
The next big event in our lives was my birthday, February-seventh. One thing in the world I wanted was King Charles (or The Pi, as he was called in National Velvet). I had finally talked Mummie and Daddy into letting me buy him, and every day for a week I had been going up to Mr. Thau's office, but he was in the office and didn't come in. So the day before my birthday I was feeling so low I didn't even know whether they could sell him to me or not now that he was a big star, getting fan mail and all, and him costing such a lot of money. My heart was very heavy and I told Marjory sheeves, Mr. Thau's secretary, all about it. She said, "Don't worry, Elizabeth, you go come and I'll talk to Mr. Thau about it."
The next day—the most wonderful birthday in all my life—Marjory called up and said, "Happy Birthday, Elizabeth, and Mr. Thau wants to speak to you."
My heart stood still, and then as I heard what he had to say I screamed, "Jeepers." Mummie said I screamed "Jeepers" three times and jumped straight up in the air. At that time, Nibbles on my shoulder jumped with me, and the tears rolling down

Well...we're still counting. Letters from housekeepers who discover new uses for Fels-Naptha Soap are almost a daily occurrence. They tell us there's hardly a spot from attic to cellar that can't be improved by the Fels-Naptha treatment.

This much we know: there isn't one piece of family apparel, from rough deeply soiled work clothes to sheer and dainty infant wear that can't be washed cleaner, with gentler handling of fabric and with less work—by Fels-Naptha Soap.

We know the reason, too. It's the Fels way of blending gentle, active naptha with good, mild soap, that makes Fels-Naptha such an extra fine laundry soap—and all-round household cleanser.

my face. I can still hear Mr. Thau saying, “Elizabeth, we're giving you King Charles for your birthday!” If you've ever loved a horse as I love that horse, you'll understand.

It all started on the third of July. Daddy and Mummie had arranged with the stables that I would have a horse's holiday. We were going fishing with Uncle Howard in northern Wisconsin.

UNCLE Howard's house was on Lake Kiwanseesagee (or Lake Minoqua, as it is sometimes called). Uncle Howard loves Nibbles and he thought it was wonderful for me to have such a wonderful little pet and new companion as long as the chipmunks and horses, I was safe. Nibbles was quite content to sit and smell the flowers. Only he wouldn't smell them, he would tear them apart. He loved to sit on the back of a chair looking out the window.

One day he sat there so long and so still, looking out of the window, my heart began aching for him—wondering whether he would like to be where the woods he truly belonged. I felt my heart would break if he went off and I never saw him again. And yet I felt if he wanted to go, it was wrong to keep him.

I talked it over with Mummie. She said, "It's up to you, darling, to make your own decision."

I couldn't decide! So I went for a walk in the woods. My heart was crying out for the answer. Then it came.

Howard called me to come and see a chipmunk he had. I went over to him and there was such a poor, frightened, frantic little animal—

I said, "Oh, please, Howard, let him go—"

And he said, "Why don't you let Nibbles go if you feel so sorry?"

Then I told Howard that I was trying to let Nibbles go and I asked him to help me be strong. He said I should let him go and that we could turn them both loose together.

I held Nibbles to my face and kissed and kissed him. I leaned down and set him free. Then Howard opened the trap and let his chipmunk out. Like a streak, he was off into the woods. Nibbles flouted off his tail and chirped and started off. I thought that was the end of everything, but he never was happy without something. He ran to the edge of the wood... then he stopped to eat an acorn he found. My heart cried out to him, 'Goodbye, Nibbles—and then—the next thing I knew, ran to me and jumped up on my skirt and into my hand.

Oh, I can't describe what I felt! Then there was no more doubt. He was mine—by turns through the day.

After that it was such a happy holiday. We fished and had wonderful picnics.

All too soon came the time to go home. We left Wisconsin in the morning, and the train of V-J Day came just as we were pulling out of Milwaukee.

When we arrived in Chicago the town was wild. As we walked down Mich-igan Avenue, we were so surprised to find in all the excitement that crowds of people recognized me as "Velvet" and wanted my autograph. It made me feel very happy.

We went into a beautiful church and sat there almost alone and prayed. Why didn't more people come in to pray and thank God? There were only a dozen or so when we were there... But I'm sure they were praying in their own way wherever they were.

The next morning I shall never forget as long as I live. It involved Nibbles' most hair-raising and heroic, most last adventure, and I am to record in this book.

It happened like this.

We were all exhausted next morning from getting to bed so late. Nibbles was furious with me and scolded me like anything for sleeping so late. I just let him scold away until Mummie got me up. Then we closed the windows and turned him loose for his morning playtime.

NIBBLES was having a lovely time running all around. I was so happy, we all became conscious of a dreadful silence. I rushed to the windows. There was no way he could get out, but I knew something had happened. I was frightened.

I tried to relax, but I couldn't. Something told me he was in trouble. Mummie knew it, too. We began looking everywhere for him. Daddy took the beds apart to see if there was a hole in the box springs or mattress he could have crawled into.

By this time even Daddy was convinced that something had happened to him. But what? We were helpless, absolutely— and we knew it. After a moment's silence, Mummie said, "Let's ask God for guidance."

And with all our hearts we did. I was still talking to God when I heard Mummie open the door into the hall. I followed her. There was a door open and a maid was running a carpet-sweeper. Mummie told her we had lost our pet chipmunk and she said, "Oh, that thing—he was in here and we all tried to kill him, but we couldn't corner him, so we took the door off and he escaped and chased him out there."

Mummie looked up and down the fire escape, but not a sign of him. We were both praying with all our hearts. Then Mummie came in—she found the next instant—right in the place where Mummie had been standing—there suddenly appeared Nibbles! He must have been clinging to the side of the stone building and from there jumped to the fire escape and landed squarely on two of the iron railings. He is so little he could have fallen in between them, but there he was balancing on that slippery iron railing. Eight flights up.

He was shaking all over. He crept to the door, talking to him all the time, and lay down flat on my stomach on the fire escape and reached out to see where he was. He could hardly wait to creep into my hand. As I closed my hand gently around him, I could feel his tiny body trembling... We were speechless. We just sat there on the floor with our hearts brimming over with thankfulness.

We left Chicago that night. I didn't let Nibbles out of my sight. When the porter made change when he went to the diner, Nibbles was right there. People were so amazed. They had never seen a chipmunk traveling by train before. I expect he really is the world's most traveled chipmunk.

When we finally got home, Twinkle, my cocker spaniel, was off her head with joy. She adores Nibbles.

I wrote some things of them. Twinkle posed quite nicely, but Nibbles, as usual, was all over the place. He loves to have his picture taken—but only if I am there. I have to be in all his photographs.

Howard says that when he sees me he still thinks he's running wild. That is not meant to be a compliment—but somehow I think it is.

Perhaps someone will write a moving picture for Nibbles. Then you could see it in action—and see through your own eyes, instead of mine, that he is the cutest, sweetest, most adorable, and adored chipmunk in the whole world.
Oh, O'Hara!

Then there's the dictum about the advisability of having sophistication. Maureen has none and makes no bones about it. She's almost Victorian in her properness. Good manners to her are a must. "If a man takes off his hat when I'm in an elevator I feel—like a queen!" she says. She believes rushing around should be cut down by more forethought, so that the outward courtesies can speak of the inner heart.

Moreover, if a bold leading man should wink at her or attempt to be personal, she is honestly shocked. In her code married women don't flirt.

This has proved no mean bulwark in her marriage to Will Price, RKO's talented young writer-director who has just returned from overseas service with the Marines. It was on her third day in Hollywood, when she was testing for her first lead, that she met the friendly looking, helpful dialogue director. True to form, Maureen was impressed because he flung no line, because he was a gentleman with a nice sense of humor.

Two weeks later he was her first Hollywood date. They went together then for two and a half years. Securing her parents' consent, even though they were in Dublin, she formally announced her engagement. She had a real church wedding in her home state, Mississippi.

When war came, Will, to Maureen's intense pride, chose to do it the hard way, ignoring Hollywood pull and registering as Will Price from Mississippi. He took his Marine boot training at San Diego and every weekend Maureen maneuvered onto the jammed day coach down and back. Her desire to be with him had no competition from Hollywood invitations.

This was a time when she utilized to full advantage the fact that dressed inconspicuously she can go almost anywhere without being gaped at. With a bandana tied around her head and no spectacular make-up to betray her, no one ever guessed she was famous as she sat on chair arms or stood in vestibules on her weekend trips to see Will. She stood in line with all the other wives seeking permission for their husbands to come out and talk.

Maureen has plenty of ingenuity, however. She was tipped off by a fellow wife that only so many husbands were allowed to visit, and women from near-by homes were often told to come back in another week or so. From then on she was always Mrs. Price from clear up San Francisco-way.

When Will was sent to Quantico for his officer training, Maureen, with no trumpeting to the columnists, went east to be with him. She lived there for five months, although she could see him only on Sundays. "At least I was in the same area," Sue Daly, my stand-in, was married to a sergeant in the Marines who had been sent there, so she and her little girl went ahead and got an apartment. It was on the top floor and in our five months together I fought cockroaches and lice with her from morning till night." Ironically enough, Sue's husband was sent back to California on temporary duty which lasted all the time they were East!

Meanwhile, Will got his commission at Quantico and thereupon made seventeen training films for the Marine Corps. One was so outstanding on the treatment of enemy prisoners that it was taken into Japan for use as a Marine manual. When he went overseas he was in the Iwo Jima invasion, a tense, stark time for Maureen. It was while he was in the South Pacific that she negotiated her present wonderful contract with Twentieth Century-Fox.
CALL OF THE Wild
by
J. B. Priestley

He is the doctor prescribed please.
He is the doctor prescribed please. The very best things happen to him alone; as always on far-reaching matters, she outlined everything to Will—this time by mail.

Will will retire upon completion of her present contract and she will be thirty years old then. Before that time it is her hope that she will have won an Academy Award. She knows that so far she's been chiefly decorative. This knowledge was part of the specific plan which accounts for her current voltage. Early in her Hollywood days she was advised to get box-office strength with the help of a studio which was arranging to borrow her. Then a girl under contract fangled the part and the loan was off. The studio wanted to keep its O'Hara Technicolor test in its files, just on general principles. She wanted it so her agent could show it elsewhere as a sample of how she photographed out of black and white. A few kind friends managed to stop her where it could be seen as a selling point. That was how she was "discovered" for Technicolor. But even in black and white as she appears in "Sensational Squadron" her career is sensational.

She doesn't let her wardrobe gum up her life. She's had to learn style, for her mother was with her at first and selected her clothes. Maureen began by buying the prettiest things in the average hit-or-miss manner, when she assumed this responsibility. It was through wanting to please Will that she acquired true fashion sense. She doesn't squander a cent. Her one big luxury to date is a splendid mink coat. It has great shoulder flaps, full sleeves, and she adores opening it to show you how the step by step are superbly fitted. As a top star, she owns just two evening gowns, both strapless— one a blue brocade lined with magenta taffeta in a ballerina style, and the other a shell pink, silhouetted lame—three dinner dresses; eight tailored suits; two daytime dresses and lots of shoes, gloves, bags and belts. She goes to custom dressers and also to the best Los Angeles shops where she's made friends with the head salesgirls.

Beauty parlors never see her. Aside from creaming her face at night, she uses only soap and water on her face skin and lipstick is her only off-screen make-up. She avoids suntan because she freckles. Her lovely titian hair is no problem. She brushes it whereby she is paid a handsome stipend fifty-two weeks a year for seven years, no limits, but or options. She didn't do it alone; as always on far-reaching matters, she outlined everything to Will—this time by mail.

woman.” They eat what Will wants to eat, go to bed early when he wants to. They share a passion for good music, so it’s prominent in their life. They went to a concert at the Hollywood Bowl on their first date, and always take a box there for the musical season. Maureen prefers operatic melodies, then symphonic arrangements, in records. For instrumental, she picks the piano for its strength. She can’t play anything else, but is now attempting to master the guitar. Only she calls it a “monkey-pod,” the GI term.

Will’s pet name for her is Snooks, and when she’s most affectionate towards him she exclaims, “Why, Will Price!”

Every Monday night the Prices dine out with regularity. They never go to a swanky cafe, but are always searching for some new little restaurant with good food. No one’s ever asked along then. If they’re not working the next day, they stop in at a neighborhood movie. Work days see them arising at 6 A.M.

The Bob Crosbys are their best friends.

The Crosbys have four children, and there is a continual exchange between the two homes, in baby clothes and baby mind ing. Maureen habitually takes the Crosby children to Sunday School, as it fits in with her church-going time.

She’s self-conscious about her tardiness, a trait yet to be rectified. Her chief fault is procrastination. After outlining her plans, she’s apt to do all but the one thing she dislikes most, and then beamingly alibi, “But look at all I’ve accomplished!”

It’s in the furnishing of their new residence that Maureen’s her truest self. Since she’s kept in such close touch with her own big family, and adores Will’s (she and Will flew to Mississippi for two months of visiting there last Christmas) the new Price home reflects in size and permanency this love of large families. The rambling Monterey stucco with its tile roofs and many rooms is being furnished slower than they thought. They had to move the day before she started “Sinbad the Sailor,” but at least some of the carpeting was down.

Maureen, with her bandana around her head, had scoured the town for weeks. “We have to have carpet on the stairways so if Bronwyn should fall, she’ll bounce! I can’t go home if I don’t find some. They all want about forty dollars a square foot!”

Bronwyn, as her contribution to the decor, applied Mom’s lipstick to the green carpet in the dining room. Will’s chair almost covers that!

On his own first day off Will toured the town, found some red, green and white plaid wool at Sears for den draperies, and hurried home lugging twenty-five yards of it.

“Some of that would make a nice dress” hummed Maureen. “You can’t have furniture made, you can’t get fabrics, everything costs five times as much as before, and some of our windows will go without drapes for a year!

Will’s mother has the second-best camellia garden in the world, and he has fortunately inherited her green thumb. So their new garden will truly bloom.

Maureen’s only big unsatisfied want is her delayed trip back to Ireland. She can hardly wait for time enough off to get Will and Bronwyn on an Atlantic Clipper. Almost seven years have passed since she has seen her father. Her older sister is a nun, and her two younger sisters have become actresses in her footsteps there. Both are married. Her incredibly handsome brother Charlie is a twenty-one-year-old lawyer, and James, the baby, is now seventeen.

She wants to present the first grandchild there, as she already has to the Prices in Mississippi, Shure, and it’ll be a great day for the Irish!

My Kind of Guy!

(Continued from page 41) interests. Until we began going around together, I had my dates all classified. When I wanted to ride horseback, I went with some member of the "horsey" set. When I felt like night-clubbing, I answered the telephone calls from someone of that crowd. I didn't dream until I met Guy that there could be a boy who liked to do all these things—who'd like weenie roasts on the beach and dogging up in white tie and tails to dance at Mocambo or to sit around listening to records and going out bow and arrow hunting. Every girl knows how it is—we're forever reading about the necessity of our being full of diversity, of being nine personalities in one in order to hold male attention. Let me report, therefore, that it is keen when a girl encounters the reverse—a chap who has a lot of sides to his character.

Guy has. He's sincere and yet he's light hearted. He's ambitious and intelligent but at the same time he has no intention of working so hard that he'll be the richest man in the graveyard. He knows swing and he enjoys symphonies: doesn't know one from the other but he likes the favorites, such as "Claire de Lune." He can't ride at all but he swims like a tuna. I can only dog-paddle in the water but I can ride. So he's teaching me to swim and I'm teaching him to ride. Kicks!

Kicks! That's Guy's word. Everything is kicks to him—a pleasure, an excitement. Not that everything has to be all red, red roses to him or mad, mad wine. He'll say "kicks" just because it's clear, blue day with a fine, fresh breeze blowing in from the Pacific. He'll say "kicks" because we're out with Diana and Henry and he has, at very long last, mastered the box step of the rumba.

It was through Diana Lynn and Henry Willson that we met. Di is my best friend. Henry is his. We two met during the war when Di was running around with a local swain who had a friend who was shipping out overseas. We made a foursome—Di and her date, me, and the friend—and danced until it was time for the fellow to shove off. He slipped out alone. That was the way he wanted his farewell, but just as he left, we locked up and saw Henry Willson entering with a positively sensational sailor.

Henry is one of the nicest people on earth and his composition was Mr. M., of course, wearing those bell-bottomed trousers. Di, her date and I joined them. It was all right. Guy and I didn't make a date that night. We couldn't have, even if we had wanted to. Guy was only up on a weekend pass from North Island, down near San Diego, where he was stationed. But I did learn that he was headed for Hollywood when he was discharged, and that news didn't annoy me one bit.

WHEN they turned Guy back into being a civilian last summer, he started to work at RKO, which is right at the end of the same short street where Paramount, my studio, is. What's more, Selznick sent him over to the diction coach on my lot. It meant we two kept bumping into one another every night as we were heading for home. When Guy discovered that I still lived with my parents down in Westwood, at a place where we can practically stretch our arms from the Russell living room and be in the Pacific, that was for him. He murmured something about liking beaches. I murmured something about what did he do Sundays and that was that.

I must tell you that the way my folks, particularly my dad, went for Guy at their first meeting was nothing short of atomic. Now both Mother and Dad move about in a daze over him. He is but their dreamboat. They definitely like him better than any date I've ever had. But that's okay. I do, too.

Having been brought up near the water, I can take beaches or let them alone. That lying out in the sun, turning over every hour on the hour for the benefit of your tan, does not add up to the summit of life's ambitions to me. After all, how brown can you get? Until I knew Guy, all I asked of my own swimming and sunning was that I could keep afloat. But such a lazy attitude was not enough for the Madison. He's expert and he wanted me to be, too. As he said he'd teach me, and he did. However, I agreed to learn. But I got even with him for being so slick at his sport when I led him out to a corral. He barely knew which end of a horse faces. And as for his dancing—

Diana and Henry, Guy and I became so thick we called ourselves the Gold Dust Foursome. We are always going on double dates, though they are much more city slickers than we are—more given to exclusively dressed-up clambakes. Guy and I also have wonderful times on beach parties, mostly sun-tanning and drinking milk.

Here I must interrupt this history to report Madison's greatest weakness. Milk to him is what whiskey was to Ray Milland in "The Glass Key." He must have it, and I mean milk, not in bottles but from a little bottle, milk in the back of his car when we start out for a drive, for all the world the way other people stow away soda water. I've been told of moon juice at a sitting and never blink one of his sun-burned eyelashes. When RKO cast him for his first big role in "Till the Game Is Won" he had to go to driving school in his car and rehearse his scenes, me playing the Dorothy McGuire part (and don't I wish I really had!) and Guy playing his own. And what did we have with that? That's right—milk. Milk and hamburgers.

That's practically all Guy eats—hamburgers or steak, milk and salads. He really gets for his meals with big blobs of mayonnaise. For dinner he always wants steak and salad—and his favorite place to dine is one where the lights and the music are low, but if you give him that combination he'd just as soon have it be some quiet little place with two tables and a juke box as Romanoff's or Chasen's—in fact, he prefers the former.

I must tell you, while I'm still on this milk route, about the time he was driving me home at two o'clock in the morning. We'd been dancing with Di and Henry—and on the way to the Russell locale, Guy got milk-hungry. There wasn't a place open between Hollywood and the beach. I suddenly recalled we'd used every drop of milk in our house earlier that morning when I meant to make a glass of milk," said Guy, as though that were enough to cause cows to pop up in Wilshire Boulevard right in front of us.

Just then we passed the house of a girl friend of mine. Her lights were on. Guy had never met her. "Want to go in here and see if we can raise a glass of milk?" I asked. "Sure," said Guy. "We'll go in, and if she's not home, and she kills a pint. He wasn't the least bit abashed. That's the way he is, simple and direct.

Except, as I started to say, about dancing. On the dance floor the shortest distance between two bad points for Guy was on four toes. We used to sit and watch Henry and Di tear into a mean samba. Finally I said, "If you don't learn to rumba and samba, I'll kill you!"

"Dancing means that much to you?" asked Madison.

"It does," said I.

No more was said. He began taking lessons secretly.

But then he paid me off on that score, too, by insisting that I learn bow-and-arrow hunting (Continued on page 76)

(Continued from page 74) Now I've admitted I like men rugged. I'll add that I also like life rugged. Why, I don't know. Maybe it's because I spent my littlest girlhood on a Michigan farm. Lately Paramount loaned me to Republic for "The Angel and the Outlaw" opposite John Wayne. (Guess which one I play?) We went on location to a dot in the Arizona desert called Sedona, lived in tents, ate mostly off paper plates—and I loved every minute of it. But there again, comes in the diversity of Madison. He loves it rough, too, and he is positively fantastic when it comes to that bow-and-arrow work. When he shoots an arrow into the air, it doesn't come to earth but sticks straight through whatever was his target. So to keep up with this Robin Hood in him, I'm having to learn to do likewise.

Every twice in a while, somebody moseys up to me and asks, "What are you thinking about the future?" I reply I never think about the future—because the future has never failed to happen yet—and Guy and I are still young enough to have a lot of it before us—and the present is practically perfect.

Ways and means of getting the most out of every breeze when the mercury hits 100 degrees (not to mention the humidity!):

The new loose short jackets are wonderful. Make a couple of them from gingham, pique or any other cool fabric. With such a free-swinging jacket and a skirt you'll be set for coolness and chic.

Tie your hair up loosely in pale tinted tulle and anchor it with your favorite flower (real, please). This is strictly for evening and looks dreamy with light or dark clothes. It's also practical for "let's drive with the top down."

Jumper's are cool and you will be too in one made of a sheer fabric. Wear it with a low-necked short-sleeved blouse.

Make a Juliet cap of daisies to compliment a dark dress. And tie a band of daisies on each wrist.

Those new ob-so-open sandals look wonderful laced up with colored ribbon. Try red on one side and white on the other for a gay effect.

Put an under-the-chin black velvet ribbon on your big straw hat. Not only will this keep your bonnet on when the wind blows but when it hangs down your back, swinging on its ribbons, you'll look like Nell Gwynn.

Yellow—in every shade—is a favorite with the beautiful Hollywood gals at the moment. And very flattering it is to most of them. Combined with gray it's divine, of course.

Which reminds us of Irene Dunne's favorite dinner gown... When she wore it to the Beverly Hills Club men turned admiring eyes upon her—women too! The bodice was mimosa yellow crepe. The two-tiered skirt was yellow chiffon, polka-dotted with tiny gray velvet bows. Irene wore pale gray elbow-length gloves, two diamond snowflake pins clipped to the bodice and matching yellow sandals. A gray fox stole kept the cool evening breezes off her shoulders.

At the opening of the new Cherry dining room at the Aquacade, Marsha Hunt on the terrace beside the Beverly Wilshire pool was a symphony in chartreuse and yellow. Her slightly frayed print dress had everything from tiny pale yellow blossoms to large orangy flowers on its vivid chartreuse background. Over her shoulders was a loose three-quarter coat of chartreuse abardine. Her hat was a small-brimmed ailor, the brim loaded with spring flowers duplicating the colors in the dress. Her accessories, bag, gloves and shoes were a soft warm brown. With her reddish brown hair and pale clear skin she was something to write home about.

Everybody is mad on the subject of carvings—for street, cocktail or evening clothes. The movie belles wear them in every possible way—around bare shoulders (strapless formal gowns are still its favorites), tied to the belts of portswear and, in the old-fashioned way, around the neck too.

Ann Blyth, lunching at the Farmers' Market in a slim and sleek pale gray semi-sports dress, wore two scarves tied together for a waist-binding belt. One was bright red and the other bright yellow. The end of one, hem length, poked soft and floaty when she walked round saying hello to friends. Gray shortie gloves and a gray draped turban completed the picture.

Stoles are seen everywhere and are made from every possible fabric—in brocades for evening, cotton for daytime and fur for all occasions.

Olivia de Havilland, lunching at La Rae, wore a stunning yellow silk suit... with almost invisible black and gray stripes. Her coat was collarless and boxy with large flat pockets. Her skirt was slim and straight. A high-necked pale yellow tailored blouse, black patent leather pumps and bag and black gloves completed the costume. No hat, but then with her wonderfully casual hair she doesn't need one.

Caught Sylvia Sidney shopping in a knockout print crepe suit. Without the coat this suit is a simple cocktail dress. With the coat, it's perfect for lunching or shopping. The black background is covered with a hundred shocking pink French poodles. The neckline is high and slightly draped to give a cool effect. The sleeves are almost not there. The skirt is quite full below a tiny waistline. And the jacket has the new drop shoulder and long full sleeves. Sylvia wore madly pink suede gloves, a huge pouch bag of black and black kid sandals. A twisted roll of black and pink fabric crowned her head.

Marie McDonald (and who could wear it better?) has a divine summer evening gown of cotton that was dreamed up by Howard Greer. It's navy blue with a pink scroll appliqued on the dark background. Of course, it is an off-the-shoulder model. The dramatic note of this dress is the long, cuffed gloves of the same material that give the effect of long sleeves. The long, enormously full skirt is lifted slightly at the front hemline but really sweeps the floor in back. A tight-fitted basque bodice and a pink sequin evening bag complete this glorious evening costume.

an escort for her. "No, I'll bring my own," Rita said.

Half an hour before dinner, Rita telephoned us: "Is it all right if I come alone?" she asked. Naturally we assured her that she was always welcome—alone or in a mob. So all by herself she came—the reigning glamour girl of the season, whose telephone rings constantly with men asking to take her out. Obviously we did not question her concerning her lack of an escort—but, characteristically—Rita herself offered no explanation.

As supreme at the box office as Rita is today, I nevertheless believe she is only on the threshold of her powers. Just as her beauty has steadily increased so I am convinced that her emotional range is developing. I told you earlier that the "Gilda" slapping scene was difficult for her to do—it went so against her natural impulses. In a sense I tricked Rita into it. I mean I talked to her about the scene for six weeks before we shot it. That is the way I always work with her. Other performers may study scenes, brood over them, then be ready for the camera. That is not the Hayworth approach. With Rita, it is better to talk her into the mood of a given situation. Often we talk as long as an hour before one take—but it is a saving of time when she flashes into it and does it flawlessly. But the slapping scene I kept for the last shot of the picture and I warned Glenn Ford about it. "You mustn't move," I cautioned, "and we can shoot it only once. For if Rita wakes from the spell of it, she will be so revolted by it she won't be able to repeat it."

So Rita gave it all she had. She did, in fact, give it so much that her blow practically knocked Glenn down.

"Quick," I said. "Do it again."

She was so in the fury of the scene that she did it again, without knowing it, but this time Glenn was prepared and he took it without flinching. I saw Rita's eyes widen as she saw that scarlet bruise coming up on Glenn's face. "Cut," I cried, just as she began to cry.

Do I think that Rita will marry again? She says she won't but I think she will, for within her half-afraid, half-repressed, little-girl soul, she is lonely and insecure. Will she find the right man? Of that I am not so sure—but with my whole heart I hope she does. Rita is a lovely creature who could make a perfect wife, a very great mother. She looks sophisticated—but she isn't at all. She is tender, simple, sweet. She loves clothes and her career for identical reasons—they both give her assurance. Nevertheless, I believe if the man wise enough to understand her and great enough to be worthy of her came along, she would give up her career without so much as a backward glance and with the greatest happiness bring up a very large family—every child of which, I am sure, would certainly be most extraordinary and very possibly be a genius.

It never occurs to the disclosure of her identity would work wonders.

Before going on a bond tour she would always ask her husband how many bonds they had bought lately. I haven’t the stomach to ask people to buy bonds if I haven’t bought all we can. (She even nurtured a guilty feeling about buying the house in Beverly Hills—their first home.)

The Bergman is an Eldorado. It is the fantastic全国各地 of Hollywood and by the opulence of its movies. She was the woman who, when filling out a customs form at Port Huron, Michigan, wrote after the question: How much do you have on your person?”—One dollar, fifteen cents.

SHE resists being exploited and hates the exploitation of others. She shies from special privileges and abbors patronage in any form. A Hollywood columnist—by the same one—titled that Ingrid’s gown for the 1940 opening of Idiot’s Delight being designed specially for her by Travis Banton and being paid for by David O. Selznick, to whom she was under contract at the time.

And the obvious fact that this information came from the Selznick publicity office, she forthwith telephoned Banton, cancelled the gown and declared that she would wear the oldest dress she had the same one she wore at the previous year’s function.

And she did.

The “hottest” star on the screen today was at first a movie fan as any boyboss you choose. One day, in the midst of shooting a picture, she was dismissed early in the afternoon and given an eleven o’clock call for the next day. She perceived in this windfall of leisure an opportunity to catch up on her pictures.

Enlisting the company of Miss Ruth Roberts, her English coach and valued friend, they set up an astounding and unparalleled movie-drunk. Starting out at six o’clock they went to “Marie-Louise.” After the show they paused for coffee, then attended a double bill including “Blithe Spirit.” When the two indefatigables emerged it was only 11:15 P.M.—still time enough, they calculated, to see one of those “owl shows.”

Sitting with servants in the car and Ingrid drove ten miles to downtown Los Angeles to see another double bill with “Leave Her to Heaven.”

Five features—not to mention newsreels and short subjects—thin nine hours. She got home at three A.M.

The Lindstrom home is an oversized mountain lodge, built of stone and timber, situated in the foothills—well, the upper foothills from the telephone directory of Beverly Hills, looking as though it had been there for a hundred years. It is designed for simple unpretentious living and looks precisely like the kind of a home Ingrid Bergman should and would live in.

Her reference to it as “the Barn” best describes the huge vaulted room which combines within its undivided space a den and living room, an arrangement admirably suited to the informal tastes of its occupants.

It is probable that Ingrid Bergman will never get accustomed to the formality of dining table and courses. The coming and going of plates and courses irritates her no end and she is happiest when she herself performs the serving informally from a buffet. The dining table is used only under duress when the large coffee table, facing the great stone fireplace, is unable to accommodate the number of guests.

So eating. Ingrid seldom indulges in a several-course dinner, preferring to nibble on snacks, mostly cheeses, that are always on hand. Her taste in foods is catholic and she is ever ready to try a novel food. She admits to a weakness, however, for the special type of Chinese concoctions to be had at Hollywood’s famous Beachcomber’s.

As for any other star of comparable rank she is as keen shopping for groceries in Beverly Hills or the picturesque Farmer’s Market in Los Angeles.

Around the house she is quite systematic and methodical. But to her working at home is orderly in her habits and in her mind. It is virtually impossible for her to loaf or to occupy herself in meaningless pursuits. When not engaged in exhaustive and meticulous study of her scripts and production problems, she is catching up on the latest books or studying music.

Nothing bothers her so much as the problem of time and the confusion between pictures. During the war years she employed these periods in war—bond tours, camp tours, radio and personal appearances for the government. Bergman’s hectic life is spent. And her restive appetite for experience and accomplishment is the dominant force in her life.

The Lindstrom home hardly hears the native Swedish tongue. Indeed, the language is brought into use only on two occasions—an in an excited discussion, when they suddenly and unconsciously revert to it, and on non-private telephones when it comes in mighty handy as a befuddler of would-be eavesdroppers.

As for pensive little Pia, she does not understand her parent’s native tongue since one is English is spoken to her.

Pia, by the way, never saw her famous mother on the screen until recently when she was permitted to see “The Bells of St. Mary’s.” Ingrid previously felt very freckle that none of her pictures were quite proper for a little girl of five, six or seven.

Pia sat next to her mother at the showing of “The Bells” and watched the picture with her hypnotic fascination that one day on two occasions when Ingrid asked her how she liked a certain scene, Pia turned to her with an impatient “Shhhhh!”

AFTER her European camp tour a colonel and a GI, unknown to each other, said to me that she was the greatest ambassador Hollywood ever had.

“Blazed and Bothered,” the official GI paper at Bad Mergentheim, Germany, published the following: “...Bergman, who was pressing a skirt she was to wear at the evening performance, came down the stairs in a long German fraulein quaint and attractive in her peasant dress, she did not think that the American girl should lose any sleep worrying about being woosed and pursued byGI’s. She made us ‘em more glamorous than Ingrid (‘Iggy’ we called her for short), but they don’t make ‘em more genuine.”

I have never heard a broadcast of Paul Gallico’s exquisite “Snow Goose.” Milton Berle, who was to follow her, stood in the wings, entranced, like everyone else, by her tenderness and interpretation. When she finished he soberly remarked: “Now I’m supposed to go out there and try to be funny.”

Hollywood is indeed proud of Ingrid.

Bergman. And The Bergman wears this lustrous diadem of affection with unchanging grace and humbleness.

Much of this is due to Ingrid's love of her work, a work which to her is an end in itself—not a means to an end.

Asked if she ever planned to retire, she responded: "Retire? My goodness, what for? Think of the wonderful parts I'll be able to play when I'm seventy!"

Shortly Bergman will be appearing on a New York stage as Joan of Arc in Maxwell Anderson's 'The Girl from Lorraine.' It is eminently fitting that this product of honesty in a brutally realistic era should essay the peasant girl of France whose own simplicity and honesty created a world.

For here is a woman keenly aware of a changing world and keenly aware of the need for that change. Deep in the well-springs of her character is a strong and intelligent social consciousness.

Money, per se, has no meaning for her. The only meanings which motivate her are those concerned with quality and philosophy and growth.

Bergman saw "Spellbound"—with Gregory Peck—for the first time at a special showing for the patients at Birmingham Army Hospital, near Los Angeles. She sat with the GIs, saw the picture and afterward appeared on the stage. Following brief talks by Ingrid and Gregory, the wounded hobble around for autographs.

Standing next to a boyish veteran supported on crutches, I asked him if he enjoyed the picture. Angels hovered in his shining brown eyes. "Oh, yes," he said, never taking his eyes off Ingrid. "She's awfully good. She's going places."

Puzzled by this remark I asked him if he had never seen her before. "I've been in a Jap prison camp for four years," he replied.

This young man, whom Ingrid Bergman had by-passed, had appraised her with an objectivity only possible in his unique case. But the judgment he made is a universal one:

"She's going places."

A graduate of Santa Monica High, Glenn was awarded membership to their Hall of Fame. Dramatic class listens to expert pointers.

He's surrounded by autograph kids, but he doesn't mind. Glenn is only man to belong to Hall of Fame. Joan Blondell, also an alumnus, holds same honor.

A big-time winner returns to his alma mater to make the award to high school drama award winner, Audrey Smith.
Taking Drake Apart

(Continued from page 51) Kentucky Derby Winner in racing history. He has a mind like a piece of blotting paper, and absolutely no shame in his curiosity. Everything is brand new to him. Like the bull fights... The went one time to Tijuana to watch the deliberate, artful contest between man and beast. "If I had an eight-year-old kid with me I couldn't have been busier answering questions," Morton remembers. They couldn't. "He had to know the origin of the little hat the matador wears and the names of the colored barbs that are planted behind the bull's shoulder—and after it was all over he wanted to know what happened to the carcass."

Morton explained patiently that they cut it up and distributed it to the poor. "Well, what are we waiting for?" Tom said. "Let's go watch."

So for two hours they stood in a dank apartment far beneath the stadium watching the butchers work.

It is with the same childlike detachment, Morton remarks, that Tom watches the workouts at the famous Northridge breeding farm, on fine mornings just after dawn when such superb animals as Brevity and Roman stretch their legs in the sharp California air. Usually Morton comes along on these excursions, at the risk of his life because they always use Tom's car and he persists in driving himself. Once he couldn't get the thing started; they pushed it for a mile and a half along a bumpy dirt road before someone came along in a station wagon. Even then the motor refused to flutter into life. "Have you tried everything?" Morton asked, wiping his drenched forehead.

"Everything," Tom answered. Then Morton caught a glimpse of the ignition switch... "I don't have the kind of mind that bothers with details," Tom said grandly, when they were once again soaring along. "At least I remember to keep plenty of gas in the tank."

The motor sputtered irresolutely. "Do you?" said Thompson, with some bitterness. "Almost always."

The station wagon took them home.

FROM Morton Thompson's office you go across the Metro lot to the little bungalow where Harriet Lee, a handsome blonde woman with enormous vitality and a deep voice, teaches studio aspirants how to sing popular songs. She puts a platter, partly cut, on a playback and after a moment against a simple piano background you hear a pleasant young male voice singing a chorus of a poetic song beginning, "I don't know why I love you like I do."

The lyrics are read with perfect timing but the voice follows the tune with an occasional slur, like someone crooning into a girl's ear while dancing. This, it turns out, is precisely what will be happening in the picture, "Faithful in My Fashion."

The guy is no Sinatra, but he has appeal and he is not bad. The voice might someday be very good indeed. Tom hopes it will. "He has a burning passion to sing," Miss Lee explains. (Everything he wants to do is a burning passion.) "I love him, but he drives me crazy. I can't get him out of here. Sometimes he even asks if he can come home with me and keep on practicing while I have dinner."

The first time he came to her he said, "Some day I'm going to be in the biggest musical. Metro ever turned out and I'm going to be the only one singing." In his first audition he stood with his hands over his face, his knees shaking; got out of breath; sounded like a schoolboy re-iting his piece. It is different now, although when he made his first test records he was as nervous as a bride. Miss Lee brought him a coke with two aspirins in it and he later went on to hear what he had done. Then he held out what remained of the coke. "Put in another aspirin," he said.

"I didn't consider the record a bad advertisement for me," Miss Lee will be quick to tell you. This from her is high praise indeed.

You want to know, of course, what it meant to work with her, particularly if you are young and pretty and your first big part opposite Tom could mean everything to your career. So you catch little Beverly Tyler as she emerges from a taxi, and picture the hands of soda at the commissary counter and find out.

It is pretty hard for Beverly to be anything but wide-eyed, even somewhat breathless, about Tom. She is still too close to the recent afternoon when that problem of the camera angle came up on "The Green Years" set. Tom was supposed to be studying at a table; Beverly comes to take him to a picnic; and she has a speech to make. There just wasn't any way it would work, with the furniture unplanned and the lines set, so that you could see both faces and get the speech too. Tom solved it nicely.

"Simple," he said. "It's one of Beverly's best lines. Take it with my back to the camera."

THERE may be times on the stage when to turn your back on the audience is an effective, even poetic thing to do; it may be equivalent of quitting the scene entirely. "You can't mean that!" the cameraman gasped, while everyone stared at Tom incredulously.

He shrugged. "I've got plenty of footage." The remark is a rarity in Hollywood history. Let it give you the impression that Tom is not very shrewd about his career, observe the way he managed to wave the lead for himself in "The Green Years."

He had read the script, and that was enough. He came into a friend's office waving the book of mummified signs and his hair rumpled, his eyes wild and determined. "I've got to have this picture," he announced firmly and tore out again. A second later his head reappeared at the door.

"I'll get it, too." He winked and was gone.

A week later he'd got it. He had not used direct methods, because front offices hate peacemakers. But he had approached nicely and the approach would not have been in character with the role he wanted. He had turned himself into a shy, hopeful, slow-spoken, gentle boy who had been taught when the persons of influence were discussing casting for "The Green Years," who just happened to ingratiate himself with those persons at that particular time, who just happened to be just right, just what they wanted for the role, just when they wanted him.

"It was a wonderful act," Beverly will tell you, while the tone of her voice and her eyes really say, "Tom Drake is wonderful. Period."

You have to leave Metro and drive over to Beverly Hills—to the Lyons and Lyons agency to come around to the Brown Derby—to see Bob Kennedy, but it's worth it. Bob is Tom's brother-in-law; he got the lad his first stage job (in "June Night"), as a matter of fact, and Tom retaliated by introducing him to his sister, Clare.

It is from Kennedy that you learn other facets of the young man's nature. Char-

Dark Hour

(Continued from page 44) turned off the Berkeley campus and headed up a lonely street, that he hadn't the courage ever to face any of them again. Somehow or other he had propelled himself through that nightmare in which he, a kind of disembodied spirit with dry lips and thumping heart, had moved across the stage. And somehow or other he had lived through that agonizing period later when his fellow actors had exercised their privilege as critics and slowly torn him apart, limb, head and heart . . .

"The most embarrassing actor I ever saw—it embarrasses the audience to have to watch him . . ." said one. "Walks like a stick and talks with a mouth full of oatmeal . . ." That one had brought a burst of laughter from the open forum—and from tonight on he would know that nothing is ever quite so cruel as the laughter of youth. "A skinny goon—the kind that ought to be kept out of the profession . . ." As long as he lived, he'd see the bright red hair, the bulky shoulders and hear the contemptuous assurance of the fellow who'd said that.

As long as he lived . . . To be an actor, a good one, had been his last chance to still the restless urging within him telling him that he, Gregory Peck, must live fully and triumphantly, or he didn't want to live at all . . .

At twenty, the tall boy had tasted failure three times and the bite of it was bitter on his tongue. Once he had thought that to be a doctor was the best way for any human to put himself to the greatest possible use. The ambition to study medicine had come upon him when, as a small boy building a boat, he had learned the importance of a doctor to a person with torn and blistered hands . . .

Test tubes—cadavers—case-histories—all those months of driving himself through medical, fighting a deepening sense of futility. And then one day, the professor had looked into his eyes and straight through to his mind: "Peck, you have everything necessary to make good in medicine except an eagerness for medicine . . ." On the University of California reports, he was just another student flunking his course. Inwardly he was a fellow beaten by the knowledge that a poor doctor would be of no use to the world, nor to himself.

To be a great athlete, then; that was another way of being on his own. A way to give his sweat and wind and stamina, to prove he was good enough, to win something no one could take away from him. "Never stuff. Always do a little better, a little bit more . . ." Dad's words, echoing in his mind—he'd stroked his oar to them, bending his lean and sweating back with the U. of C. crew. It was a good blow—until the Poughkeepsie regatta and the fall on the slippery—wet pier. "Not a serious spinal injury—but I'm afraid you'll have to give up the idea of any strenuous activity," the medico had said. Give up, too, that pride and certainty that his could have been as good a name on water as Dad's had been on the basketball floor and gridiron . . .

And now, tonight, the tall boy walked once more in that black and lonely world he'd been so sure he could find his way out of. The shy, sensitive world-of-his-own filled with such painfully moving

“Skiyoo--gum--mouth full of oatmeal--exhaling into the snow, half the time I’ll be an actor...” His heels were clicking the ugly words out on the sidewalk, as he headed with a sort of blind instinct for the railroad. The freight trains could take him anywhere now, besides away from failure—out of this world. For the wheels of the train were sharp—and grinding—and permanent ...

The right side of a gleam of cold steel in the moonlight as he followed them to the switchman’s hut. Maybe there would be a schedule posted outside, saying at what time a fast freight would be through. He would try to sleep partly this night. To die fully wouldn’t be so hard. He was young and strong; he had courage.

“Courage—you have courage?” his heels were scooting at him now from the gravel alongside the track. Of course he had! But with courage, real courage, was there a need to die? The penetrating whistle of a freight train brought it back to him. Presently the thin shaft of the headlight shone around the bend growing brighter, ever brighter on its journey southward. Now was the quintessential moment.

Southward ... Across his mind flashed the picture of his dad. Against that vision was the cold actuality of the gleaming tracks.

Another full-throated warning from the train—and the engine lumbered toward the tall youth still frozen with irresolution.

The hot breath of the engine was now upon his face. Behind him the locomotive steamed by, then the coal car, more coal cars, refrigerator cars, farm machinery cars, empty cars. Was his to be an empty vigil too?

The lantern of the caboose was now looming up in the night. That meant the end! Suddenly his muscles tensed, then released in pure reflex action ... And Gregory Peck had stepped onto the step of the caboose. He was headed for La Jolla! Headed for home!

Hours later—he didn’t know how many, maybe a day—he reached the sleepy little Southern California town. The station was Dad with his deep, calm eyes and welcoming smile. “You look a little tired, son. Better get yourself some rest ... Not an order, just advice—the way it always was. Gregory was not one to go down the stairs, taking with him what he had learned tonight: Courage was its own kind of greatness and beauty.

The rest of it: Gregory Peck some years later when he would once again walk with blackness and fear ...
What Should I Do?

I don't think any great damage has been done to your romance. If you can make a girl angry, at least you have aroused emotion, which is infinitely better than complete indifference. Both of you were under a strain, and misunderstandings are easily increased by naiveté. Words spoken with a gesture and a twinkle get by in personal conversation as jest; those same words, committed to a cold, white page, are likely to be insulting. I've had a little experience along those lines when writing this column— I'm sorry to say. Sometimes things I have intended humorously have been taken with deadly seriousness!

The thing you do, as soon as you go home, is to send your girl friend flowers with a card saying something light and gay like, "Look who's back, thinking— as always—that you're wonderful. You might follow them with another bouquet in two days, then a third offering.

When you telephone her, she will be interested, I'm sure. I think she'll give you a date at which time the campaign is all yours. If you can find ways of following up that advantage, well you just haven't benefited by your Navy training, sir.

Dear Miss Colbert:

Dell and I had been in love ever since high-school days and had always planned to be married when the war came along. He was eventually shipped to England, but during his service in this country he wrote regularly.

Finally I received a note from him saying that he had married an Irish girl. You can imagine how I felt about it. I tried to forget him, but that had been such a strange letter that it haunted me.

Last month, he returned and immediately came to see me. He said he wanted me to know the full story. It seems that this girl became pregnant because of him, so Dell married her. Now she is perfectly willing to give Dell a divorce, provided that he will take his daughter and rear her.

Dell says that he loves me now and never stopped loving me. As for myself, the instant I saw him I knew that I would probably love him all my life. But I'm not sure I want to get mixed up with his child by a previous marriage. Perhaps I would be better off to look around for some nice boy without a blot on his past, and rear my own family.

I need advice—you can see that.

Elma de J.

If you really love Dell, as you say you do, you should marry him. And if you are at all the woman you should be, you will take that baby and give the poor little thing the love and tenderness to which it is entitled.

Each one of us, if he is at all a thoughtful human being, tries to become more understanding. That is constructive and more useful to the world as he gets older. Here is a ready-made opportunity for you to prove your worth by being a devoted mother to Dell's daughter. She needs you.

However, if you are wise, you won't discuss the baby's origin with your friends. Remember that anything you say may eventually come back to hurt the child.

Claudette Colbert

Discretion would advise that you do absolutely nothing, since the object of your admiration is married. Refraining from trying to speak to the lady or getting to know her would be the part of a weakness, but of a philosopher.

If you will read Dante's "Inferno" you will learn that all his life was made lovely by recollection of Beatrice, whom he saw only once. G. B. Shaw never met Ellen Terry, yet their exchanged letters were a delight to both. Perhaps you have a dream that you may keep unspoiled forever.

So why not be happy in your fragile romance and not seek to further it.

Since the epigram has distance lending enchantment, why don't you make it loan permanent?

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Before my husband was discharged from the Army, I lived with my parents and my fourteen-months-old baby daughter. As soon as Tom came home, we moved south to live with his people until Tom could get settled. And there our trouble began.

Doris is an active youngster, bright and happy. She is too young to be spanked, but my husband and his family say that she should be whipped for the slightest thing. She can't talk yet and can't understand why she mustn't play with anything she can reach. I run after her constantly, trying to explain that she mustn't touch things that don't belong to her.

I have studied child psychology and believe that if a child is given a substitute toy, her attention will be distracted. This tale is no substitute, however. Of course, I believe that it will develop a nice child. My husband disagrees. He says physical punishment accomplishes more than talk anything. It is a bunch of silly theories.

Much that is written about motion-picture children indicates that they get the best of care and are charming youngsters. Will you please tell me how the children of your friends are disciplined?

Mrs. Serena L.
Most of my friends, I'm sure, would agree with you that a young child must be taught by the substitution method, must be given the advantage of enormous patience and loving forebearance. However, most of them will also agree that there are times when a child will seem to be possessed of some evil spirit, and the only answer is a bit of paddling in the soft spots that can't be damaged.

You are in a particularly difficult situation, since you are living with your husband's people. Older people are shorter tempered and less inclined to take the hard road of psychological wisdom in dealing with a youngster.

I think you should try to keep the little girl outdoors as much as possible—away from the temptation of the gadgets in the house. So far as your husband's viewpoint is concerned, he would seem to be old fashioned. Nothing can be gained by arguing the point of child-rearing, however. You will simply have to be calm, silent and resourceful about your methods.

I feel that you should stick to your beliefs, train your daughter and conduct yourself so as to avoid argument. And you might pray that the housing shortage will soon be alleviated, so that you three can live alone.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am deeply in love with a Marine who is now overseas and expects to be home this fall. We have planned to be married as soon as possible after his return.

Six months ago I met a very wonderful fellow and have been going out with him ever since. I have only a sisterly affection for him but he has fallen deeply in love with me. I have told him repeatedly that I admire and respect him, but that my interest is purely platonic. A month ago I learned that he has an incurable heart condition and has less than a year to live.

This boy wants me to marry him. He says that he isn't being selfish because I will be able to marry the man I love eventually; he only wants these last few months with me.

I haven't written the Marine about this situation, as I think it is something I must settle for myself. However, I've wracked my brain and can't reach a decision.

Dema C.

I know a man who was told twenty years ago that he had three months to live. He has already outlived the doctor who predicted his death.

Claudette Colbert

Three's a crowd, decides the puppy, and gets smiling approval from Col. John Coulter, Connie Bennett's fiancé Why wish and yearn for COMFORT-IN-ACTION?

GOSH, BETTY—SLOW UP!
THIS IS MY DAY TO LAG—I HAVEN'T HAD A MOMENT’S COMFORT!

It's a revelation—how soft, soft, soft Modess really is! And how soft it stays on the days you need it most. Modess’ comfort is something extra-special because it's...

Comfort-in-action! Gentle as a cloud whether you take things easy or fly through the busiest day.

You feel so safe and serene, too, for Modess has all the safety a girl could long for! A special triple shield guards against accidents. And no telltale outlines with Modess—it's silhouette-proof.

Daisy-fresh, too! Modess’ triple-proved deodorant in every napkin helps guard your charm.

Costs no more! Yet Modess is America’s luxurious sanitary napkin. Discover the extras it gives you—try Modess!

A don't mean to indicate any distrust of the medical profession from it. Frequently a doctor can predict almost to the hour the length of time left to a human being; but mistakes do occur.

My first feeling is, then, that this boy may live to a fine, ripe old age.

Aside from that hope, however, I still adhere to this belief: No girl should marry a man with whom she is not overwhelmingly in love.

Some well-meaning friends will probably assure you that pity is akin to love, but pity is to love only as your shadow is to yourself. No man in his right mind would want to marry a shadow—yet that would be all he had acquired if he insisted that he be married out of pity.

Nor do I advise your seeing him so much. I'm afraid you wanted, without quite realizing it, to have the companionship while your Marine was away without realizing the probable consequences.

—Claudette Colbert

GOSH, MOMENT'S SAFETY is! So telltale outlines with Modess—SHIELD is!

LADIES, THIS IS A REAL COMFORT! What a DAINTRY, too!

For the first time! Modess! And you can wear it with confidence.

With all my heart I wish I could tell you that I think you will receive a letter from George soon, but if I said that I would be doing it only to comfort you and not because I truly believed it. Men in the service often lived from day to day. Home was far away, they were homesick, lonely and scared. So when George told you he loved you, he probably meant it. It was the authentic emotion of the moment. But since then he has returned to the place and people familiar to him—and though he probably hasn't forgotten you, he may have forgotten his ardor promises.

However, I can say this: If you and George were really meant for one another by a force we like to call “Fate,” you will hear from him and you will see him again. If you two weren’t meant for each other, isn’t it lucky that it ended this way, instead of in heartbreak and lifelong unhappiness for both?

—Claudette Colbert

(A great deal of unhappiness is contained in the normal amount of mail received by this department. For that reason, the receipt of a letter as happy and constructive as that published below, is a real treat and we wanted to share it with readers.)

Dear Miss Colbert:
I was interested in the remark made in one of your March answers in Photoplay to the effect that eighteen-year-old girls were too young to marry.

I married a year ago when I was eighteen and I couldn’t be happier.

My husband is twenty-one and is still in service. We are living in a government project where he is stationed. Although we could get along on what he makes, I work to make it possible for us to save.

What is this: My husband and I are working toward the same end. We are seeking to better ourselves and establish security for our future. We work together, in housework and other things. He is always thinking of my comfort and I, of his. I believe these two things: Working together and considering the marriage partner make a successful match. Certainly they are proved by the glow I always feel when I am going home to him. The answering smile he gives tells me that he feels as I do.

Rita Gibson

A general letter to hundreds of girls throughout the United States:

Dear Girls:

During the last six months I have received literally thousands of letters containing the identical problem: A girl and a boy met during the war. Usually the girl was living in her own home town, and the boy was stationed at a camp nearby. They became very friendly, and each told the other that This Was Love.

When the boy was transferred to another camp or sent overseas, those two corresponded regularly. The letters ranged in caliber value from tepid to volcanic.

Then came the day when the boy wrote:

"I'm being returned to The States, darling. I can scarcely wait to see you. I'll wire or telephone the instant I reach home, and I'll be seeing you soon."

Unfortunately, that is the final word from the boy.

Whereupon the girl writes to me, asking how to secure the boy's address. If she has his home address, she asks whether it would be proper to write to him.

The problem is, then: Since he has not written to me, should I write to him?

I'm going to disappoint many of you girls, but my conviction is: Don't write. When a girl is really important to a man, he writes. A man worth having is capable of carrying on his own courtship. If he doesn't bother to let you know that he has returned safely and that he is still thinking of you, it means simply that you have engaged in a wartime romance and the instant peace was declared the romance was over. You might as well accept the fact, forget the man and turn your attention to new experiences.

Claudette Colbert

Have you a problem which seems to have no solution? Would you like the thoughtful advice of Claudette Colbert?

If you would, write to her in care of Photoplay, 8949 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood 46, California, and if Miss Colbert feels that your problem is of general interest, she'll consider answering it here. Names and addresses will be held confidential for your protection.

Joan also would walk a mile to keep a black cat from crossing her path.

So would that delightful young Englishman Peter Lawford. And with good reason! Pete was rushing to the studio one day to test for an important role when a very large, very black cat dashed across the road in front of his car. Almost immediately he had two flat tires.

"Also," Peter says, a little grimly, "I came within an ace of losing my chance to test for that role—I was so late reaching the studios."

Theater people generally do not forgive you for whistling in a dressing room. Plays have been known to close and movie productions have been known to turn into hopeless flops, according to the best people in show business, because someone whistled in a dressing room. "There may not be anything to it," Lee Bowman says, "but I, for one, don't intend to take a chance—and find out."

Bill Williams agrees.

Marguerite Chapman won't even whistle on a studio stage when a scene requires it. She just forms her lips as if she were whistling while the sound-track plays a whistling sound made by someone else.

Little June Haver, one of the sweetest girls I've ever known, is another who refuses, point-blank, to whistle in a dressing room, not so much because she is jittery on this score herself—rather out of respect for Ted Fiorito, who is, Ted, who gave June one of her first breaks, overheard her whistling in her dressing room one day when she was touring with his band. "Promise me never to do that again," he said. She never has!

Perhaps you are one of the exceptions who do not hold with superstitions. Or you may be one who adores charming old customs and traditions; who would reach eagerly to catch a bride's bouquet and later, surely having caught a husband, would respond to his sentiment when, on your wedding day, he carried you across the threshold of your new home.

These traditions too are born of old superstitions. It's the hangover of the savage, for instance, that finds in the flowers of the bride's bouquet the ancient symbol of life and rebirth. So a bride carries a bouquet as a sign of her conquest and, tossing it away after winning her mate, presumably tosses some of her power with it. Thus, whoever catches the flowers seems to have magic.

The wedding veil itself is a disguise against any demons who might happen along, see the bride and desire her for their own.

And if you think that when a bridegroom carries his bride over the threshold of their new home he is being true to a beautiful tradition and no nonsensical superstition is involved, pause long enough for the savage under your skin to remind you that a doorway is one of the pagan symbols of life. Therefore, to walk through this great mystery strong and surely is good medicine. But misfortune will dog the footsteps of those who stumble. To prevent such a mishap, the groom carries his mate across his doorstep.

A superstition by any name is still a superstition.

There's always been magic in numbers; black magic sometimes when a bank account won't balance. And don't forget the incantation to luck we chant over dice—"Come seven, come eleven."

Bill Eythe says seven definitely is his number. He was born on April 7. He got his first summer stock job on the seventh Bob Hutton says eleven is his number. He was born on June 11. He was eleven years old when he made his first trip to Hollywood, saw the studios and determined when he grew up to become a movie star. Eleven years later he arrived in Hollywood to fulfill this dream. On the eleventh of December a talent scout, seeing him at a neighborhood playhouse, arranged for his screen test. Eleven days later he signed his Warner contract. But alas, he was assigned dressing room No. 11. Richard Waring had dressing room No. 11. Bob cast longing eyes upon it, too, during all the discouraging months when Warners gave him no work and Uncle Sam wouldn't have him because of his weak eyes. Then Richard Waring was drafted. Bob moved into dressing room No. 11 and next day was given the juvenile lead in "Destination Tokyo." No wonder he keeps eleven in many conspicuous spots. He lives in a No. 11 apartment. There are two ones in his automobile license. And whenever he has a serious business deal he waits until the eleventh day of the month or sets the appointment at eleven o'clock in the morning.

We're so amused always when we read of the amulets people used to wear to protect them from witchcraft, accident and other ill luck. But show me the girl who doesn't have a dress she considers especially lucky. And I know any number of Hollywood stars who hold certain objects as talismans.

Johnny Coy wears a pair of old black beaten-up dancing oxfords in every picture he makes. He wore these shoes first in "Dancing in the Street," the Broadway show in which he appeared with Mary Martin. It was Mary, you know, who introduced him to Buddy de Sylva through whom he got his Paramount contract.

"They've been soled and re-soled more times than I can count, those oxfords," Johnny says, "and they'll be at the cobblers plenty more times too—because I'll wear them in every picture, once anyway. For me they're lucky!"

Angela Lansbury believes in the blue chiffon bits and pieces snipped from the dress her mother, Moyna Magill, wore in her first successful play in London. Everyone was so overjoyed at the success of this play that Angela’s mother cut up the dress and distributed pieces of it to her friends. One bit, treasured as a family lucky piece because it has brought success to many members of the family who wore it upon special occasions, is Angela’s talisman. She pins it somewhere under her gown whenever she embarks upon a new picture or a new venture. Another bit she long ago gave to a friend who needed good fortune with it. And two or three additional blue chiffon wisps which Angela still has will go to those she meets along the way who need luck badly.

The very handsome Zachary Scott’s lucky piece is plural—cuff links made from old gold dollars, the first money paid to his grandfather, who rose from the humble ownership of one steer to become one of the wealthiest cattle barons in the land. Zachary used to play with these links as a little boy. As a young man, he wore them in his shirts when he could coax his grandfather to lend them to him. Then his grandfather’s wife gave them to him for keeps.

Since these cuff links, which Zachary says make him believe in his luck (and that’s half the battle), came into his possession, there has been only one important occasion upon which he neglected to wear them. The play, alas, opened and closed the same evening.

You can imagine Zachary’s concern, therefore, when, walking on the set for the first day’s shooting of "Mildred Pierce," he realized he had left those links on his bureau at home.

"How long before I’ll be needed?" he asked the assistant director while he computed the least possible time he would need to dash home and back again.

"Sorry, Mr. Scott," the assistant director said, "but we needn’t have called you so early. The way we’re set up now you won’t work until this afternoon."

That afternoon when Zachary walked on the set for the first time the cuff links were in place—so was his belief in the ultimate success of "Mildred Pierce" and his performance in it.

So it goes. Wherever we turn we find superstitions at work. And always they have a lineage as old as time. And they’re fun, too, if we don’t take them too seriously. Incidentally, don’t let the man in your life be too superior about any little superstition, tradition or custom to which you cling. He clings to such too. Just ask him why on this warm July day he wears that uncomfortable collar about his neck. If he doesn’t latch the answer, tell him the reason men wear collars is for the sole purpose of protecting their throats from a dagger thrust!

The End

As I was saying, Daisy does things right. No halfway measures. Because of her thoroughness she has attained a quality that few women possess. She has the bearing, charm and grace of a fine lady. She is not stuffy or snooty—not at all the duchess type but there is a regal air about her.

She can be, and often is, misunderstood. When her mind is occupied with a purpose, nothing can block her concentration until that purpose has been secured. I've seen her walk into a room and all appearances ignore an acquaintance when actually she was so intent on doing some specific thing that distraction could not break through her shell. Those who know her, understand. Those who don't, feel slighted. They are so wrong.

My last picture, "Keep Your Powder Dry," was with Laraine. It was during its making that we became friendly. It was no immediate meeting of the minds but a gradual development. All Daisy's friendships bloom that way and all are perennial.

Her really close friends are anything but a "glamour" crowd. If you were invited to her house and arrived expecting to see a bevy of stars, producers and poten- tates, you would be sadly mistaken. Most famous people seem drawn to other famous people but Laraine's friends are her friends because they are what, not who, they are. Thus it gives one a feeling of satisfaction and comfort to be one of them.

Her home is my very favorite of all houses. It lies nestled in a private corner of the world sheltered by sycamores and ivy. A stream babbles through the grounds, pauses only long enough to form a pool to swim in, then on its goes, under a bridge and away. The house itself grows out of the greenery and disappears back into it. Inside is comfort and serenity with gay trimmings. Laraine's house is a home to live in.

Ray Hendricks is a wonderful guy and he's in love with Laraine. Being her hus- band makes it very convenient. Ray is a happy Irisher with a big heart and a big smile who likes laughs, children, grown-ups and airplanes. He was a singer and has a beautiful voice but the blue sky yonder lured him away and now he sings in the air instead of on it. He and Daisy make a better team than Pidgeon and Garson ever!

An evening at the Hendricks haven is always a happy one. The food is always

Photoplay
The shower for my Tim, which Laraine gave, was a lulu. Laraine invited all my friends on the distaff side and their daughters—a hen party with chicks. Ray, Dick and Timothy were the only men invited; Tim to admire his gifts (and to be admired, of course!) and Ray and Dick to ride herd on the toddlers playing in the back yard.

As usual, Daisy arranged everything beautifully and the shower was a thundering success; particularly for Tim who is now the best-dressed fell in town.

I did think he was a trifle blasé about all his lovely presents but then I suppose you can’t expect too much enthusiasm from a guy who measures his age in weeks. But what a wardrobe my young man acquired!

My first thought was to adopt three more boys quick in order to use all the natty suits before they were outgrown. Then I remembered that babies change their clothes quite often! Besides, our next recruit will be a girl. Seeing Laraine’s two glamour girls made me yearn for variety in the family. She dresses them as little girls were meant to be dressed and they just ooz femininity. What a model their mother is to follow while they are busy growing up. And Chris can’t miss being a man’s man like his pa.

Adopting a child is a wonderful privilege. Dick and I have always wanted a big family. Like any young couple we planned our family in our mind’s eye. When I was injured our pretty picture faded for a moment or two. The possibility that we may never have children of our own was a bitter pill but before we swallowed it the dawn broke through. We could adopt our family.

God always leaves a loop hole to crawl through when trouble strikes. Then, after you crawl through and stand up straight you discover that the alternate is just as great a fulfillment as the wish that was broken.

The more Dick and I thought about adopting a child the clearer it became that the child we received would be meant for us alone. Now that Tim is here, we’re so very sure. He’s our son—not borne by me but for us.

As I write this, Dick is out flying with Ray. Some day maybe Tim will be out flying with Christopher. Michele will have a shower for Angela’s baby and Laraine and I will sit on the sidelines pondering over this younger generation. Well, the younger the generation the better we like it, eh Daisy?

Now if you’ll excuse me, I must warm the bottle.

The End
Nature may endow you with breathtaking beauty, a lovely curvaceous figure. She may bestow gifts on you that make you a brilliant actress, a leader in your class at college, sought after at dances, or a charming wife and mother.

Yes, Nature may do all this. But even so—you may find your face mockingly slapped if you suffer these distressing symptoms which so many unfortunate girls and women do.

So if female functional monthly disturbances are causing you to suffer pain, nervous distress and feel weak, restless, so cranky and irritable that you almost turn into a 'she-devil'—on such days—this is something you shouldn't joke about. Start right away—try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. It's famous for this purpose. And don't forget—

Pinkham's Compound DOES MORE than relieve such monthly pain. This great medicine ALSO relieves accompanying nervous tension, irritability, those tired-out, mean 'pick-on-everyone' feelings—when due to this cause. Taken regularly throughout the month—Pinkham's Compound helps build up resistance against such distress—a thing any sensible woman should certainly want to do!

For over 70 years—Lydia Pinkham's Compound has been helping thousands upon thousands of women in this way. Don't you think this proof enough of its GREAT MERIT and CONTINUING SUCCESS? Pinkham's Compound is certainly worth trying!

A ragged little figure stands at the edge of a pile of rubble. He breaks off a piece of the crust of bread he holds in his hand, stuffs the piece inside his shirt. He has learned through tragic experience that it is better to have less of a morsel of food today so that he may be sure of even a crumb tomorrow.

Thousands of children are doing this today throughout war-broken countries: children without homes, without parents, without hope!

WHAT CAN YOU DO ABOUT IT?

Just this...

Become a Foster Parent under the Foster Parents' Plan for War Children. The children are cared for in colonies abroad and as Foster Parents you will be kept informed of their progress, exchange letters with them, help them feel loved and wanted.

_A group of fifteen may become Foster Parents for a year or longer at an individual cost of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A WEEK (Fifteen Dollars total a month for the group)_

_OR_

_A one person, as Foster Parent, pays only FIFTY CENTS A DAY_

That is why Jeanne says now, "It seems almost funny to have our marriage referred to as 'wild'—why, the thing we always had to fight was being too sensible. We planned and thought so much!" She smiles a little wistfully at her husband. She means the "almost"—for she still can't quite laugh, can't quite get over the hurt of having it misunderstood even for a little while.

Her husband looks down at her a minute in pure enjoyment and then catches up the train of her thought.

"We’ve known each other for three years, you know. It isn’t a lifetime, but when you put your mind to it and dissect as many things as we did—budgets and books, homes, hobbies, everything under the sun—you get to know a lot about each other. And we were very modern before our marriage—" he laughed and tousled her hair, "so we could be sure enough to be old fashioned afterward. No ‘going steady’ for us! Oh, no! Go out with other people—go out with ‘the boys’—"

Jeanne breaks in, "When it just made us miserable, we were sure—so we gave it up."

You see, they believe that if the foundation is sound, if you know for sure what you want, you must step out and take it, when the time comes, with complete faith that everything else will fall into place. That basic soundness permitted them to take their happiness in the only way open to them, with quiet confidence that everything would be all right. And is it?

"Yes. Yes, yes!" Jeanne says radiantly. "Everything is too wonderful. It’s hard for me to talk objectively about it—I’m so in it. But when it comes to true love and there’s that solid foundation, everything comes right. It can’t help it."

She tells about little things—a man they met offering them some bricks for their house—another man who is building a store is going to save them some plumbing fixtures.

They all seem so happy that we are happy. Like my mother. She’s delighted. Now she just says, ‘Well, dear, wait till it’s your turn—your daughter—and you’ll understand how hard it was.’ You see she couldn’t be sure what was really inside us. But there aren’t any complications any more." Here she is emphatic. "There aren’t any complications of any kind. How could there be? Real love does triumph—everything else does fall into place."

You must know what you want, Jeanne says. She knows! And beneath her sweetness is a strength of purpose, a faith in the worthiness of her aims that spells success and realization for anything she sets her heart upon.

She is enthusiastic and definite about their plans for the future. They seem so close and real to her that even the trying process of playing hide and seek with their belongings as they move from one apartment hotel to another doesn’t seem to upset her. It’s just a marking-time period while they are busily engaged in their first great adventure as man and wife—building that home of their own.

After weeks spent getting the floor plan right, that solid foundation down, they are ready for the more exciting part. They have designed a wood box for their fireplace which will be fed from the outside. They go together to their beautiful two and a half acres and watch the bulldozer filling in gravel and sand for their driveway. Jeanne talks of the trees that will line the drive. Of the informal fruit orchard she wants to start.

"Quick, Mommy! Us new housekeepers oughtta follow this hot tip!"

Mother: A hot tip on housekeeping? I could use it! All I know about housekeeping, I’ve learned just since Daddy got home from the Service!

Baby: A fine job, too! Well, here’s the hot tip: Put “Lysol” brand disinfectant in the cleaning water, to kill germs... like “old hands” at housework do!

Mother: What! Is using “Lysol” customary in cleaning?

Baby: Sure! Almost two-thirds of all housekeepers use this real germ-killer... to help guard family health.

Mother: Then no more chances on germs, Toots. I’ll keep our house “Lysol” clean—all the time!

Every single time you clean... disinfect with “Lysol” Brand Disinfectant

Swim and bathe TO YOUR HEART'S CONTENT

NO BELTS NO PINS NO PADS NO DOOR

This may be news to you—but thanks to Tampax more women every summer go right into the water any day they want to, including the sanitary-pretension days.... The Tampax method is ideal for bathing because there is no external pad. With Tampax you can wear a snug swim suit and (wet or dry) nobody is the wiser. So why shouldn’t you stay on the sidelines, lonely and conspicuous?

Applying the principle of internal absorption to this special monthly use by women, a doctor designed Tampax without belts, pins or external pads. Made of pure surgical cotton compressed in applicators, Tampax is efficient and dainty. As it is worn internally, no odor forms and there is no chafing. Changing is quick and disposal easy.

Just consider the advantages of this unbulky Tampax under summer shorts, slacks and sheer dresses—then get a supply at drug store or notion counter. Enough for a month will go into your purse. Three absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior.

Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

“I’ll just love having my picture taken picking my own peaches for a change,” she says.

The furniture will be simple—and not too much of it. For Jeanne hates anything that looks cluttered. “And of course it won’t be really furnished for a long time.”

For Jeanne and Paul plan to travel, really travel, to far-away, little-known places. Jeanne will bring home the things that catch her fancy, things of great beauty, or with a story behind them, or that bring back a memory. That way they will cease to be “things” and become something to love and treasure and enjoy.

Their greatest plan is a safari through Africa. With most young people you would call it a dream. But the Brinkmans have that amazing degree of confidence and faith that make you sure their dreams will come true.

When she speaks of this trip—this “someday” adventure—Jeanne cries in dismay, “I forgot to tell you, darling,” and breathlessly informs her husband that Mrs. Darryl Zanuck, the wife of the head of Jeanne’s studio, had made such a safari with her husband. Then Jeanne and Paul momentarily leave you far behind and dash off into the wilds of Africa—with Paul carrying the guns, but with Jeanne doing her part—she loves to shoot, but not at anything alive.

WHEN they go off like that you get a brief intimate glimpse of what their life alone must be. They don’t seem to mind your coming along—they’re just not aware of you for the moment. They are two people very much like very much alike who have escaped for a few seconds into a world entirely their own.

They admit this similarity—of mind, of interest, of sympathies, and they think it’s the best basis for a lasting attraction. They share opinions on everything.

Jeanne says, “There isn’t ever anything for us to fight about. We instinctively like and admire the same things. Even when I have a real passion, as I have for drawing, Paul draws a little and understands a lot. And Paul loves tennis and plays extremely well and I, well, I love it any way.”

They even share a secret longing. They both always wanted an older brother. Jeanne plans to have everything right in the household by having four younger and then one younger sister for them. “So they can really spoil her.”

Paul agrees that it’s a fine idea but takes a more practical view, saying they’ll take what they get. He hastens to douse the curious gleam, “But, of course, that’s in the future, anyway.”

Jeanne continues to look dreamy. “You see that’s why I understand what my mother said—about when it’s my turn. I’ve thought a lot about the responsibility—raising them well, trying to help them make the right decisions. I wonder how I’ll be—she stops and looks at Paul. “Anyway, I won’t have to do it alone. It’ll be something else we can share.”

That’s the way of families. They share! Their interest in each other’s careers, for Paul is rapidly carving out a name for himself in the manufacturing end of radio, their art, their sports, their mutual love of books and of friends. Their views on financial matters coincide.

Trying to achieve real financial security is a part of their basic plan. For security is the springboard to freedom to do all the things they want to do. Yet they hope they’ll never have everything they want. And they don’t ever want to get things too easily. They recognize each step, the anticipation, the joy of working for and the final achievement of the thing they want. And they feel that to miss a step is to be cheated.
Jeanne became twenty-one in May and gained control of the trust fund that had been set aside for her under the California law until she became of age.

"But it has made much difference. I'm really awfully saving, aren't I?" she appeals to her husband.

"Jeanne," he says solemnly, but with laughter in his eyes, "has never been known to cash a check for more than five dollars in her life."

"But if I did, I'd just spend it," she protest."

"That's right," and now he laughs. "She only has the five if you meet her coming out of the bank."

Next to her marriage, her career is the most important thing in the world to Jeanne. Her latest picture, "Margie," is the first in which the entire burden of stardom rests solely on her slim young shoulders. Her role in "Margie" delights her. In the prologue and epilogue she plays a mother of thirty-four talking to her very young daughter, but in the main portion of the picture she's a young flapper of the nostalgic gay late twenties. Yes, she is deeply interested in her work. But if it came to a choice?

"There wouldn't be any question," she says slowly. "But thank goodness, it won't ever come up. You see, I love my work. So I'm lucky that the need to sacrifice personal happiness to a career is a thing of the past."

Right here she gives a vote of confidence and thanks to the youth of our nation. "You know they are the ones, call them bobby-soxers or whatever you like, that made it possible for us to live our normal lives. They liked to find 'the girl next door' and 'the boy who came from my home town' in Hollywood. And they were willing to dispense with the old glamour-draped picture star. They demanded sincerity, simplicity and ability. They made their demands felt. They made it possible for an actress to throw everything she has into her work, to give her very best on the screen and then to go home and be herself in private life."

We will join in that vote of thanks. To the youth of the nation, to everyone who helps to keep Jeanne Crain, lovely, talented and happy on the screen and equally lovely, talented and happy as Mrs. Paul Brinkman.

IGNORANCE OF THESE INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS HAS wrecked MANY AN OTHERWISE HAPPY MARRIAGE!

Is your own case similar to this? Your marriage started out just sparkling with romance, love and happiness. Then slowly it dawns on you that your marriage is lacking something. Your husband grows more indifferent—less attentive in those little things so dear to a woman's heart.

Too many married women still do not realize how important douching often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, charm, health and marriage happiness—how important douching is to combat one of woman's most serious deodorant problems. And what's more important—they do not know about this newer, scientific method of douching with—ZONITE.

NO OTHER TYPE LIQUID ANTISEPTIC-GERMICIDE TESTED IS SO POWERFUL YET SO HARMLESS!

Thanks to a world-famous Surgeon and a renowned Chemist who have given the world the remarkable ZONITE principle—wise women no longer use old-fashioned, ineffective or dangerous products. The ZONITE principle developed by these two great men of Science was truly a miracle—the first antiseptic-germicide in the world that was powerful enough yet positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-burning.

For this reason—ZONITE has been found of great worth for intimate feminine hygiene. Ask your doctor. Despite its great strength, you can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without risk of injury.

WHAT ZONITE DOES—ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that ZONITE will not kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

The Score on Gable

But—Clark had a wonderful time with Dolly O'Brien, who was in much the same category. Widow of sportsman Jay O'Brien, she is very chic, gay, clever, New Yorkish and a shade older than Gable. "They should marry," said Clark's friends, "they have such a good time together." Well—Dolly has married, but not Clark.

Then there's Virginia Gray. Virginia is slim, beautiful, young and golden-tressed. An actress, she understands all about studio demands. She lives near the Gable ranch and likes to do the "Valley" things—dancing and working in gardens and such. "Clark and Virginia ought to marry," says their Valley friends. "They have such fun together."

They plainly do. and yet Clark seldom takes Virginia to the big movie-colony parties. He is, of course, asked to every party given, for hostesses cry for him, but he takes Colby to those events.

Why is Colby his favorite party date? She's a perfect party girl. She's gorgeous to look at. She's full of wisecracks and dances like a dream. But her big party appeal for Clark is more than that. It's that she doesn't get in his hair at such times.

Scores of women around Clark Gable act with frantic foolishness, but Colby, "The Face," has always insisted that she and Clark were simply friends. The hostesses wanting Mr. Gable with an intensity lavished on no other "extra" man, don't sigh for Clark and Anita to wed. They are too scared even to think that it might happen—and ruin all their dinner parties.

Still, they are even more frightened when they contemplate those ultra quiet dates that Clark has been having recently with Joan Crawford. For every important Hollywood resident can remember back ten years to when a bright flame burned between Joan and Clark.

That flame never really burned into a conflagration. There were too many factors throwing cold water on it—but it never quite died, either. Just after 1929, after Joan's parting from Phil Terry, Clark began seeing her again.

Mostly Clark has gone to Joan's house, though a few times Joan has gone to his—but the real Gable pals are not too startled at learning what they talk about at their dinners for two. It is not romance.

What Joan and Clark talk about is Carole Lombard. His friends know that when he talks anything beyond the standard social padder, Clark talks only two subjects, either Carole or his stretch in the Army.

He talks very briefly about the latter. His gripe with the Army is very simple. He wanted to do a job, a real and sincere job. That's why he enlisted as a simple GI, even though he was over age and could have pulled any amount of wires to stay out of uniform or, in going in, to have gone in among his top brass. But he just wanted to fight.

His fame, however, made him an Army problem. The simplest way of turning him into merely a figurehead was to push him through OCS and promote him. Clark couldn't blame the Army. He knew it wasn't its fault that it objected to women by the thousands hanging on the fences that surrounded any camp in which he was stationed. But that wasn't his fault either. He did nothing to encourage such feminine hysteria. He was a man, like a million others, inspired by his love of his country. He was willing to give his life for it.

When he was sent to England, Clark hoped he would be in the real fighting. The last thing he wanted was an oak leaf on his shoulders and orders to fly over the battlefields, camera in hand. But that's what he did—until the Army dismissed him.

Those months in uniform destroyed a dream of his. Clark, who honestly is unaware of how different he is from the average soul, has always dreamed of "simple" people. He always felt before he went into uniform that such people were to be discovered somewhere outside of Hollywood. That Army hitch proved to him that people are just as complex in Lum's Corners as in Hollywood. Being a romanticist, Mr. Gable didn't like learning that there is no Utopia in which everyone leads a calm, utterly happy life.

The loss of that dream made him more nostalgic than ever about his life with Carole Lombard, which life, he now realizes, was calm, simple, utterly happy and also complex, exciting, worldly and witty.

Carole was killed in an airplane accident on January 16, 1942, as she flew back from a bond drive. Even on January 16, 1942, then, Clark has gone away alone somewhere. While he was in uniform, he could only escape for a couple of hours, but this past January, being a free man, he hid out for weeks. On his return, it was visible that he had grieved deeply.

And that he finds some facet of his dead wife's personality in the personalities of his present leading ladies is just as visible. Anita reflects Carole's Hair for clothes, Virginia has her same type of slim, golden beauty; Joan has her intensity; Betty has her sense of sportsmanship.

But there were other things Carole had. She could hunt and ride as well as Clark. Carole was a star who almost equalled his magnitude. Carole loved the ranch as Clark did, but when he was in a big-city mood, she loved that too. She was a glamour girl who was a perfect housewife, a wife who was a siren, a rich woman who got a kick out of driving.

In reality, Carole was a healthy, vivid human being. As such, every once in a while, she quarrelled with her wonder man and he quarrelled back. But, as an exquisite ghost, she does not quarrel with him, nor he with her. She is a dream, climbing and climbing in his mind to a height which no living woman can touch. It's good to know that any man can be this loyal to memory—yet it is the cause of Clark Gable's restlessness, his loneliness, his insecurity. He says, "I'm not sure I want to go on in pictures. I think maybe I want to retire. I don't know where I'd retire to, though. Maybe Phoenix, maybe New York, maybe Hollywood."

No, he doesn't know—for where can he go with her ghost? When he travels, he takes her photograph and last letters with him. After the first two cocktails, when he dines—with Betty or Joan or Anita or Virginia—it is Carole he discusses. Maybe there exists somewhere a goddess who will be great enough to replace Carole's image in his mind. But until she appears, the chances are that Clark will go on making movies, for he loves his work more than he knows. Certainly he'll go on dating—for he's a woman's man almost as much as he's a man's man. And people will go on saying, "He ought to marry some- and-Some. They have such good times."

Because that is the way he will look. He's an actor and knows how to mask his feelings. Also kind, he lets every woman feel she has charmed him.

But until that goddess girl does come along, his heart will go on seeking and his loneliness will deepen.

So, Fate, let her come along soon. Men like Clark Gable are too rare to be allowed to remain so unhappy.

June Days

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 55) but it must be at the end of the lot, as far from the house as possible, because our Junie thinks she has the secret of smashing the atom.

Her interest in science coincided with a strange affliction which had its missing doors and walking into walls. "Water on the floor," our great-aunt called it. Barbara Stanyreck, similarly deranged, recommended a doctor who cured her. But before the demons were cast out of Junie she had visited four different physicians who couldn't think of nothing but to take X-ray pictures and prescribe pills. In mass demonstration of their devotion to Junie all friends, accomplices and Richard his pill makers stumped into the room dragging his ears beside him, responding intellectually to the name Heathcliff. Before you can cry "Wuthering Heights!" Heathcliff's fiancée comes flouncing into a literary prodigy by name Heidel. As the atmosphere thickens with classic references you recall that Junie graduated from Westchester High four years ago with certificate of merit and highest average—an awesome ninety-seven. "I had to," says the little highbrow. "We were poor."

THE way she says "poor" her lips bug out as for "kiss" and what with that yearning little voice and being littler and cuter than on screen it is practically impossible to keep her off her no matter how hard you try or how hard her husband looks at you. Good old Dick Powell always was the least Hollywood of stars and you couldn't blame him now if he got a bit heavy with Junie pouring "Richard" like a libation to a deity. It is good to report our Richard is the same sweet Dickie he has been since the day his colored mammy dropped him on his head and it could have been worse. "He's a hillbilly," says June with mountain pride, "from Arkansas."

"And you're a Westchester hillbilly—those rich bridled path hillbillies."

"Not rich," she corrected, "just hillbillies."

Now she's a Brentwood hillbilly—not poor—in sky-blue jeans rolled up to her knees, yellow sweater and cheeks of tan and that's not bad.

That wicked dressmaker who said Junie does not know how to dress should be made to wear his own creations; they probably would suit him better than they would Junie. Junie is the Peter Pan type, with better sweater development naturally and the femme allure that once came wrapped in slinky satcheted satin. Of all the times our screen has perpetrated, the most monstrous was the moment in "The Sailor Takes a Wife" when Bob Walker lounges derisively at Junie attired in what she called her "pyjamas." Every man in the audience is not a dressmaker wanted to bash Bob and reach for Junie. They knew the jeering laughter was not good old Bob's idea; it was just a scene practiced up by a hard-pressed scenarist who could not know that Junie in fluted pyjamas and Sis Hopkins braids would

Watch for him in September
It's a Joke, Son

Called Betty, "That birthday gag was a turkey on you," to the uproarious laughter of all who heard.

In addition to Betty and Dick, the mad gang consists of Producer Bill Perlberg, Director George Seaton, Dick's agent Benj. Burton, Betty's dancing-stand-in Angie Blue, assistant director Artie Jacobson, and dance director Hermes Pan, plus Harry James, when he's around.

No one is quite certain when the nonsense started; everyone is sure that a new high in prankishness had been reached by the time Betty and Dick were finishing "Diamond Horseshoe." Perhaps this was one of the opening incidents: One day in the commissary a waitress said to Dick, "What would you like for dessert, Mr. Haymes? We have some delicious cream pies today." She then turned away. Dick, who had been watching the waitress's departure, simply said, "My, my! What a fine array of throwing-pies.

It gave Bill Burton a beautiful idea. After luncheon he borrowed a paper pie plate from the commissary, filled it with whipped cream and whipped it blissfully to the stage sound. The next scene required Dick to burst through a door in a towering rage. Bill conferred with George Seaton, then turned the pie over to Artie Jacobson. All of which will explain why the camera wasn't turning when Mr. Seaton yelled, "Roll 'em," and why Dick—charging through the stage door—had an ad lib performance as Santa Claus—at least he donned beard and white wig rather abruptly.

This bit of japy gave Hermes Pan an idea. From time to time he and Angie Blue, who both work out Betty's dance routines, had kidded each other about producing numbers, so Mr. Pan decided to have some fun. He organized a firing squad consisting of Betty, Dick, George Seaton, Artie Jacobson and two others. From the prop department he borrowed some tricorned hats for his squad to wear, plus Sam Browne belts. For himself he secured scabbard and sword. He made arrangements for the prop department to prepare six very juicy (non-edible) pies.

On the last day of the picture, two reliable electricians caught Angie and tied her to a post in firing squad manner. Mr. Pan lined up his squad and made a little speech. He said that inasmuch as Angie had given him considerable trouble from time to time, had been late for rehearsals, and had been unavailable when light changes were made, etc., etc., etc., the entire company was set to discipline her.

Angie, yelling like mad, was blindfolded. "This has gone far enough," she shrieked. "Fun's fun, but who wants to laugh at the time . . . let me out of here. Come on, kids . . ."

Called Mr. Pan, lifting his sword in regal gesture, "Ready . . . Aim . . . Fire!"

The firing squad were expert marksmen. Not a pie missed its mark—not one. All six smote with deadly accuracy . . . the astounded face of Mr. Hermes Pan.

Interestingly, not only of the hijinks but of the serious production plan for the picture, were Peggy Ann Garner and Barbara Whiting. Both girls were set for "Junior Miss" opposite Burton-Seaton production. Both had noted the loveliness of the gowns worn by Betty. Both had come to the conclusion that, if they were ever to be taken seriously as adult actresses entitled to the full glamour.
precocious month-old boy.

To enjoy the next gag fully, an outsider must be equipped with three facts, well known in Hollywood: (a) Dick Haymes and Bill Burton are not only agent and client, but extremely close personal friends; (b) Dick's agency fee has always been paid about ten seconds after Dick had received his check, and the size of his check is partly attributable to Bill's work in Dick's behalf; (c) Dick is one of the most enthusiastic horsemen in the film colony. His love for Pappy, his Palomino, is intense.

Just before Christmas, Dick telephoned Bill one day to ask, "What do you want for Christmas?"

"I want a new suit," said Bill with simulated reluctance. "Well, kid, you might pay me my earned fees. A man can't exist on nothing, you know."

Dick's answer is censored on the ground that good friends may exchange comment that the Post Office Department might not pass.

"Oh well," sighed Bill, "if you're going to be mean about it, I'll think up some nice gift for you to give me."

"How about meeting me this morning so we can talk it over. Then we'll have luncheon. I want to finish my shopping this week," suggested Dick.

Bill agreed. When he arrived at the address specified, he discovered that it was a saddlery, leather goods and equestrian shop—one of the best and most expensive in town! Dick was inside, looking innocent.

"It's no use," stormed Bill. "If you think I'm going to buy anything for that horse of yours for Christmas, you're just out of your mind. I'm not even going to buy you anything you can use around a stable. Not me. It's too expensive a hobby."

"It was just a suggestion," grinned Dick. What Bill actually gave Dick was a Palomino colt.

What Dick gave Bill was a heavy gold ring set with a sumptuous pigeon's blood cabachon ruby.

EARLY in January, Bill Burton found it necessary to make a trip out of town. When he returned, he found the set for "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim"—a picture again teaming Betty and Dick—plastered with signs. Over Betty's dressing room there was a placard reading, "Quiet, Please. Gin Rummy Being Played Inside." Over Dick's dressing room was the legend, "A Bill Burton Client." But pasted diagonally over that statement was another, "Under New Management."

Bill knocked at Dick's dressing-room door and assumed a solemn, almost dismal, expression. "I feel bad about this, Dick," he said without preface of greeting, "but it's getting serious. This matter of owning horses is a very expensive business. There are forever accessories to buy... the cost mounts out of all sense. I want you to think very carefully about disposing of..."

He was interrupted by Dick's yelp of pain.

"Sorry," said Bill adamantly, "but the cost is terrific. I can't..." was his financial adviser—condone much more of this sort of thing. Tossing a statement of account on Dick's desk, Bill went out and closed the door, leaving Dick dismayed and angry.

Dick snatched up the bill. It covered a purchase of saddle soap and represented an expenditure of seventy-seven cents. Yelling, Dick emerged on the set, but Bill had prudently gone to the studio commissary.

The Betty Grable—Dick Haymes set should have padded walls. It's a madhouse, And that's not a joke, son!

BAD BASCOMB—M.G.M.: Wallace Beery and Margaret O'Brien are teamed up in this one, with Beery an outlaw of the old West who, to escape the Federal agents, takes to being an Indian and marries in order to escape. When unscrupulous regent Henry Daniell attempts to destroy the young king of old England, Anita Louise is the court lady who helps Wilde track down tyranny. Edgar Buchanan is Friar Tuck and Jill Esmond the queen mother. (May)

BANDIT OF SHERWOD FOREST, THE—Columbia: Cornel Wilde is an energetic and colorful hero as Robin Hood, who, when he takes up arms against the unscrupulous regent, Henry Daniell, makes sense out of this silly story, as Bar- bara loves him, and she and Robin's quarrels lead to a divorce over Diana Lynn, a Southern siren who tries to get Bob for herself. (June)

THE DARK CORNER, THE—20th Century-Fox: This doesn't make a lot of sense, but it's so filled with suspense and good acting that you really won't care much about the holes in the plot. Dark Stevens as the private eye makes a sure hit for stardom, Lucille Ball is so right as his secretary, Clifton Webb is sophisticated as the art dealer jealous of Kurt Kreuger and his wife, and Selden Rand is excellent as Webb's dumb gendarme. (July)

DECEPTION—Warners: This brings to the screen the touching story of the famous Bronzes, Charlotte and Matilde, whose play was "Jane Eyre," tragedy Emily (Ida Lupino) and "With- hing Heights", being the autobiography of old lady who wrote "Jane Eyre." The story is about their problems and how they are solved. (May)

DRAGONWYCK—20th Century-Fox: Strong melodrama, with Vincent Price as the aristocratic owner of Dragonwyck, a house on the lake. Innocent country girl Gene Tierney comes to the house as companion to the young, ill-used daughter and remains to fall in love with Price. When his wife dies, the two marry, and then sinister developments result. Glenn Langan is the doctor who also loves Gene. (May)

EASY TO WEED—M.G.M.: Van Johnson sings, dances, makes love and even shoots darts in this delightful comedy that begins when Van agrees to help Kenneth Wynn out of a bind by making love to Esther Williams, the beauty who's getting away. Lucille Ball is Kenneth's girl friend and Cecil Kel- away is Esther's father whom Van tries to impress by his shooting. (July)

Gilda—Columbia: Embittered gambler Glenn Ford goes to work for George Macready in his South American gambling casino and the two become fast friends. Then Macready returns from a trip with a new wife, Rita Hayworth, and Lucille Ball falls in love. The exciting melodrama then moves through a maze of German agents, scenes of police and jealous lovers. You'll be fascinated by it all. (May)

GREEN YEARS, THE—M.G.M.: A long and lavish dramatization of the A. J. Cronin novel about a middle-class family, who were forced to raise a young Irish grandson. Charles Coburn, as the great-grandfather, has the role of the year; Tom Drake is the Irish lad, and Dean Stockwell, Hume Cronyn and Beverly Tyler all contribute some fine acting. (July)

Believably one of the best-honed talents on the screen, Ginger Rogers is the ideal choice for this role. His performance, as well as that of the other leading players, is masterful. The supporting cast, particularly Young, June Allyson, and the rest, adds greatly to the overall effect. The story is well-paced and engaging, keeping the audience interested throughout. A highly recommended film.
SEVENTH VEIL, THE—Sydney Box-Ortus-Universal: An English psychological picture, this tells the story of Ann Todd who becomes a great pianist under the guidance of her crippled guardian, James Mason—Britain's No. 1. When Mason tries to break up her romances, the girl suffers an accident and then psychiatric enters to solve the riddle of which man she really loves. (May)

SHOCK—20th Century-Fox: A different who-do, based on this story of a girl who sees a doctor kill his wife and then is treated for shock by the killer. Vincent Price is excellent as the criminal psychiatrist who wants to destroy his patient; Lynn Bari is his nurse and partner in crime; Annabel Shaw the young victim and Frank Latimore her husband. (May)

SILENT AS SILK—Universal: Packed with surprises and suspense, this is one of the slickest, most convincing mystery yarn to hit the screen in many a minute. When actress Virginia Grey doubles-crosses criminal lawyer Kent Taylor, who loves her, she becomes engulfed in stage producer John Lied. Taylor murders him and his well-planned alibi throws suspicion on Virginia. (June)

SO GOES MY LOVE—Universal: Interesting and often tenderly illuminating little incidents in the marriage and invention of Don Ameche and Myrna Loy, who's frankly looking for a husband, with endearing ramifications. Richard Gaines is the savior Myrna becomes engaged to until she proposes to Ameche and procures him on to success. Women will love it. (June)

SOMEBODY IN THE NIGHT—20th Century-Fox: Another mystery thriller with John Hodiak as the amnesic victim whose only friend in the world seems to be a criminal. Newcomer Nancy Guild, as the girl, is a natural who looks at but still needs a lot more lessons in acting. Josephine Hutchinson, Fritz Kortner and Richard Conte are all so good, and so is Lloyd Nolan who's wasted as a detective. (July)

SPECTER OF THE ROSE—Republic: An organ-grinder love story, which will either move you deeply or leave you completely untouched. Despite the fact that Ivan Kirov is suspected of murdering his first wife, ballerina Viola, Essan marries him, and they dance to triumph in a new ballet. Both players are vivid new personalities, and you'll also see Judith Anderson and Michael Chekhov. (July)

SUSPENSE—Monogram: A lavish ice revue is the setting for murder in this excellent production. The revue is owned by Albert Dekker and stars his wife, Beata, and all goes well until Barry Sullivan becomes manager of the show and makes love to the star. Suspense mounts when Sullivan's former girl, Bonita Granville, threatens to expose his past. (June)

TAZARAN AND THE LEOPARD WOMAN—RKO: Tazar, played as usual by Johnny Weissmuller, and Brenda Joyce get involved with the Leopard Men, a strange people with a strange cult, and one thing happens after another with a fast pace. A monstrosity, it is the highest priestess of the Leopard Men and her machinations keep the plot developing. (May)

TO EACH HIS OWN—Paramount: A tear jerker all about frustrated motherhood, but women will love it. During World War I, Olivia de Havilland falls in love with John Lund, bears him an illegitimate child and faces the tragic necessity for the baby to be reared by her friend, Mary Anderson, who marries John's ex-wife, Terry. (July)

TWO SISTERS FROM BOSTON—A G M: When Kathryn Grayson heads for an operatic career via a New York burlesque house, her prim sister, June Allyson, follows her to the dirty world. Alice Faye, as a good girl, is attracted to the younger sister and forms an alliance with the socialite who falls for one of the sisters and Lauritz Melchior plays a grand opera star. It's sprightly and gay and you'll love it. (June)

WELL GROOMED, BRIEDE—Para mount: There are gags aplenty in this story re volving around the search for a magnific. cham pagne. Navy Lt. Ray Milland wants it for a carrier launching, but Olivia de Havilland has the last bottle in town and is determined to use it for her wedding to Army Lt. Sonny Tait. James Gleason and Constance Dowling add to the comedy. (May)

WIFE OF MONTE CRISTO, THE—PRC: Cops and robbers in satin breeches and flowing capes. When chief of police John Loder sets a trap for the person who's upsetting his racket of selling drugs, the Count of Monte Cristo, Martin Kosleck, is forced to get out of town, so his wife, Lenore Aubert, steps into his shoes and carries on as the Countess. (June)

WITHOUT RESERVATIONS—RKO: Claudette Colbert is the study of an heiress who experiences all sorts of emotional upheavals on her way to Hollywood, but her life is made easier when she decides to cast in the screen version of her book, and you'll be mad for both of them. You'll also see Edna Maye, who plays Cadpig in the principals in this light, easy, frothy comedy of romance. (July)

WYANK IN LONDON, THE—Corporation Ltd.—20th Century-Fox: This British picture does a good job in bringing about a better understanding between the English people and the American GI. Dean Jagger, the GI, starts off on his furlough with a chip on his shoulder and falls in love with Rex Harrison's girl, Anna Neagle. (May)

Let Arthur Murray Show You How to Dance Smartly!

"After 25 years of teaching dancing I made an astounding discovery which is revolutionizing the teaching of dancing. It is so simple a wonder that it was not discovered before! Believe it or not, 75% of all popular dance steps are merely variations of one very easy step. If you can do this simple step, you can become a good dancer in six hours."

This new method eliminates all non-essentials and difficult techniques. It reduces modern dancing to one simple step. Learn this step— and before you know it you'll enjoy the thrill of being a graceful, popular dancer.

To introduce you to this famous new method, Mr. Murray is offering you his brand new dance book. In this remarkable book, the author tells you his famous secret of leading and following. He gives you the very pointers that make a dancer gain the admiration of his partner. And if you are not quite sure of the many courtesies of the dance, you can dismiss your fears as soon as you get this book!

Where There's Smoke, There's Fire!

Where there's smoke, there's fire! Going on a picnic in the woods or planning a trip to the mountains? Then don't forget this...

Every year, over 200,000 fires burn and sear the forests of the United States. They leave desolation, ruin and death in their wake.

NINE out of every ten forest fires are man-caused. And most of these are due to plain everyday carelessness. So before you go on that picnic or hike in the woods remember these rules:

1. HOLD your match till it's cold—then pinch it to make sure
2. CRUSH out your cigarette, your cigar, your pipe ashes
3. DROWN your campfire, then stir and drown again. If no water is available, cover with clean earth
4. IF YOU MUST USE FIRE: Ask if the law requires a permit; burn only on still evenings, have help handy; kill every spark "Easy does it!"

Beauty Spot

A sunny beauty

Virginia Field, gray-eyed, golden-haired Paramount stunner, has a couple of tiny freckles on the end of her nose. "My husband says he loves them, because they make him smile," laughs Virginia, whose enthusiasm for life, love and the pursuit of happiness is infectious... As the sun is drying to her fair skin, she protects it with a creamy foundation. Other times she uses a thin foundation and a little cream rouge to avoid the "made up" look. She powders the studio way—rolling a powder-filled puff in a kneeling motion, then brushing most of the powder off for a smooth, mat finish... "The studios scream if we let our hair become sun streaked, dry and coarse looking. I protect mine with a head covering and keep the ends lubricated with brillantine or a hair pomade. I brush it lots, too," she adds... Because her fair hair has a natural wave tendency, Virginia often moistens the ends with cologne or toilet water when in a hurry, then pin curls them. For the initial set after a shampoo, however, a wave set lotion is best... She advises little make-up and powder in bright sunlight, when perspiration is likely to cake it.

He loves her

Virginia was as thrilled as you would have been, when Sherman Billingsley, of the Stork Club, presented perfume to her and her friends! She could hardly wait to tell her husband, Paul Douglas... After finishing "The Perfect Marriage," Virginia came to New York from Hollywood. Paul's lead in a hit play was separating them too long.

Something to cherish

Virginia aims to please Paul, who dislikes chipped nail polish. When hers starts to chip, off it comes, and on goes a fresh coat... Her Paul, she fondly believes, is like most "aware" men. If he disapproves of her appearance, he'll quickly say so. When he says, "Honey, you look nice," it's a compliment she cherishes.
Call to Colors

Colors make heads turn, but sometimes away! Find your code color in the chart below, then check the cues that follow for harmony in hue.

If you have:

- Blonde hair, fair skin
- Off-blond hair, fair to medium skin
- Dark hair, dark skin
- Brown or black hair, light skin
- Red hair with light medium or ruddy skin

Your Code Color is:

- BB (Bright Blonde)
- MB (Midway Blonde)
- VB (Vivid Brunette)
- FB (Fair Brunette)
- RR (Radiant Redhead)

Your Star Prototype:

- Betty Hutton
- Lizabeth Scott
- Dorothy Lamour
- Paulette Goddard
- Arleen Whelan

Now, having found your color code, check off and put into practice these cues:

Your Clothes Color:

- BB Black, eggshell, warm grey, beige, warm brown, dark green, honey and navy.
- MB Medium to dark green, medium blue to navy, black, light to medium grey, white, eggshell, warm brown and beige, gold.
- VB White, yellow, gold, true red, green and true blue and all vivid shades. Light grey, London tan, navy.
- FB White or gold, black, electric blue, cyclamen, warm grey, warm tans and browns, true blue and navy.
- RR White, all greens and blues, light gray, true oxford grey, beige or black. Depending on hair and skin tones, you can wear light and medium shades of red. If the hair is reddish gold with a fair skin, violet or purple are effective.

Your Make-Up:

- BB Match skin with a light natural foundation; if you go but one shade darker than the skin the contrast is too obvious. Lipstick and rouge should be light red with underlying shade of orange.
- MB Wear one shade darker than natural in the foundation. Strawberry lipstick and cheek rouge are effective—that is, a light true red with a slight blue tint.
- VB If the skin is true olive, wear a copper-tone foundation. With a light olive skin, wear peach buff foundation. Lipstick and rouge should be a garnet shade.
- FB Wear peach buff foundation. In lipstick and rouge, wear one shade deeper than medium with a slight blue cast.
- RR With a light skin, wear foundation one shade darker than natural with a slight rose tint; lipsticks and cheek rouge should be light true red. With a medium skin, wear peach buff foundation and a bright pepper-red lipstick and rouge. With a ruddy skin, use peach buff foundation and true red lipsticks and rouge with a slight blue tone.

Your Bugaboo:

- BB Pure white—makes you look anemic. Gold and yellow—detract from the beauty of hair and skin. True red and vivid off red—make you look hard. Pastels—make you look sickly.
- MB Yellow—does not give enough contrast. True red and vivid off-red shades—make you look like a lady who’s been staying up too late nights. Cyclamen and fuchsia—too bright for you. Shades with too much orange—orange is a component of yellow and deals your beauty a death blow.
- VB Black—unless your skin is very fair. Browns and brunts—deaden your coloring. Purples and maroons—give you a funereal air.
- FB Yellow—unless your skin is a true olive. Light grey—it gives you that mousey look. Dark tans and browns—give you an “I don’t matter” air.
- RR Orange—the effect is disastrous. Gold and yellow—very bad, unless your skin has not one whit of yellow in it. Dark red—a stop signal to others—i.e., stop looking!

Your Reviewer Says: A rarity long needed.

✓ The Stranger (International)

NOT for the kids who would find this psychological mystery film a bit too heavy for their tastes. It’s adult stuff and good, with Orson Welles doing a convincing job as a Nazi bigwig who, in the disguise of Professor Charles Rankin, is living in the little town of Harper, Connecticut, with the evident intention of starting another master race. Loretta Young is believable as the American girl who, as his bride, is slowly forced to realize that the man she loves is one of the breed that nurtured concentration camps. He is, in fact, on his way to prison when on his wedding day, kills the Nazi who has been allowed to escape from prison so that the authorities can trace him to Rankin. Edward G. Robinson handles his role of Allied War missions investigator expertly and the supporting cast is good—especially Billy House, Martha Wentworth and newcomer Richard Long. This boy, as Loretta Young’s brother, has tremendous appeal. All in all, a tense, dramatically picture, with Billy House supplying the laughs.

Your Reviewer Says: Good mellow-drama.

✓ Do You Love Me (20th Century-Fox)

THE answer to “Do You Love Me” may be yes if you belong to the swooner sect. Against a background of a hot trumpet played by Harry James, the picture wends its way innocuously from a dignified little school of classical music to the Big City. Along with it goes Maureen O’Hara, dean of the school, who starts out in horn-rimmed glasses and ends up in some Technicolor outfits that would make Schiaparelli swoon.

The point on which the plot pivots—and is a very fragile point—is the overnight metamorphosis of Miss O’Hara from a schoolma’am to a “titivator.” The credit for this must be charged up both to Harry James and Dick Haymes who, as a “groaner,” gives the lady someone to listen to besides her bespectacled fiancé.

Both Miss O’Hara and Dick Haymes do their best with what they have in hand; Harry James, as always, does the best with this type music; Reginald Gardiner gives a tough of finesse to lines that are the best in the picture.

The high-point—watch for Betty Grable in a surprise scene that is a “titivator.”

Your Reviewer Says: If you talk jitterbug, you’ll like it.

✓ O.S.S. (Paramount)

LAN Ladd’s legion of fans will love him in this heroic role of a civilian hero in the war; a member of the Office Of Strategic Service who does much to prepare the way for ultimate victory in Europe. Ladd and Geraldine Fitzgerald are part of a team, highly trained in America, sent to assist in the sabotage procedures before the Normandy Invasion.

There are plenty in their missions and tragedy and disappointments in their path. At best, the picture is only an average spy story but it gives Ladd a wide berth for the virile heroism which he is famous. Miss Fitzgerald does her usual accomplished job, and the cast is immensely enhanced with straightforward performance by Patric Knowles, John Hoyt, Harold Vermilye and Gloria Saunders.

Your Reviewer Says: Excitement on the highest degree.

✓ Avalanche (PRC)

IT’S murder in the snow drifts, this one with something new in mystery climax.

Bruce Cabot, a personalized sleuth from the Treasury Department, arrives at a ski lodge to discover the gaps in the in- come tax of a gambler. With him is Rosco Karns (and here the formula has not varied). No sooner do they arrive that snow slides lock in the paying guests of the lodge. Then the murder begins.

Somehow the procedures should have been more exciting, but even as is the add up to good entertainment, thanks to mother nature in white velvet and creditable cast. Cabot, despite some odd-poungage after his good war record in Italy, looks fine. Helen Mowery, Veda Ann Borg and Regina Wallace show to advantage. And you’ll love Joe the Raven.

Your Reviewer Says: Ski scare.

✓ The Searching Wind (Paramount)

THIS “Searching Wind” blows a mine gale down the corridors of prewar years rustling the history books of event in Europe that led to World War II an comes up with one fact we all knew any way—that those in power promised an end to the drives how Robert Young as an American diplomat shilly-shalled between diplomacy and truth, lost his love, Sylvia Sydney, because of it. The only lively moments are provided by Dudley Digges as the grand father. Douglas Dick plays the son with great sincerity but Ann Richards seems miscast as Young’s frivolous wife. The mounting is good the cowboys commendable and Young’s performance excellent.

Your Reviewer Says: There ought to be more here to cheer.

low your natural style sense can earn money for you

You admire clothes—good clothes. You have flair for style—attractive dresses and suits. You have ever seriously thought of using your natural style sense to make money for you? That opportunity is now offered to you. You are invited to become a well-paid Sales Representative for Fashion Frocks, Inc.

YOUR EARNING POWER DEPENDS ON YOU!

If you're looking for a "get-rich-quick" scheme, this message is not intended for you! We do promise to make you a millionaire in time. No sound business venture will do that. What we do promise is an opportunity for intelligent, ambitious women to build up a steady income through the sale of smartly designed clothes. Your work will consist of taking orders for Fashion Frocks and collecting cash commissions for being so.

The money you earn will be in direct proportion to the regularity with which you work. You need not work full time, but you could work regularly if you want to make good money. But can you think of any pleasanter way to earn money than showing and indulging lovely styles, with working hours that fit your personal schedule— and with our own stunning Fashion Frocks clothes as a bonus?

WHY YOU RECEIVE LOVELY DRESSES TO WEAR

"It's not till you see yourself in these exciting fashion Frocks styles! Then you know why a good business for us to offer you a personal wardrobe as a bonus. It's simple logic.

Other women can't resist asking a smartly dressed woman about her clothes. And you can be smartly dressed all year round—without cost to you—if you become a Fashion Frocks producer. Your friends and relatives will want to order Fashion Frocks through you, when they see your own handsome wardrobe.

Naturally, you will not want to limit your sales just to a close circle of friends—for that means limiting your earnings, too. So, every season, as new Fashion Frocks designs are released, you can take your style cards and rich-looking cloth samples to visit other prospective customers. Thus you will build a group of loyal buyers who will look to you to keep them informed on style news...and to keep them supplied with distinctive Fashion Frocks designs!

WHY WOMEN WILL WANT TO BUY THROUGH YOU

Another great advantage you have is in being able to offer your customers plenty of time in which to make their selections! You know how you hate to be "rushed" by an impatient sales person in the average crowded store! Your customers will make their choice in the comfort of their own homes, away from bustling crowds. (We do all delivering and collecting, so you need not waste time on irksome detail.) And you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you're giving your clients good quality at reasonable prices!

It won't take long, either, for your customers to realize that through you they can be smartly dressed—and still stay within their budgets! Fashion Frocks cover a wide range of fabrics, including beautiful rayon crepes, sleek spun rayons, soft woolens, color-fast cottons. Also, a wide choice of shades from luminous pastels and smart dark colors, to gay prints, polka dots and stripes. You will offer magnificent styles to every woman from a teen-age girl to a size 50 woman.

YOU CAN QUALIFY IF...

1. You are an ambitious woman—married or single—with or without experience.
2. You are willing to work regularly—either part time or full time.
3. You want to put your own "flair for style" on a paying basis.
4. You would like the chance to earn a steady profitable income...
5. You would like your own handsome wardrobe supplied FREE!

FASHION FROCKS, Inc., MAKES YOU AN OFFER!

If you can truthfully answer "Yes" to all five of the above qualifications...you are invited to act as Sales Representative in your community! Your working schedule can fit your own convenience, with the chance to earn up to $25.00 per week, like many other successful representatives.

If you accept this offer to become a Fashion Frocks representative, it will be almost like setting yourself up in a dress business of your own—without the headaches of carrying stock or "owning your own business"—and with an excellent chance of earning a steady income.

SUPERVISORY JOBS OPEN

We have future need for several County Supervisors and Branch Managers. Naturally, these positions pay even greater earnings. Please state your qualifications, if you are interested in this important work.

WE INVITE YOU TO SEND THE COUPON, but only if you're sincerely interested. If possible, attach a letter telling about yourself. You will then receive a Style Brochure, giving full details, without any obligation on your part. After careful consideration, you can decide whether or not to fill out your final application. If you so decide, you'll be well on the road to personal financial independence.

It's Like This To Be
MRS. CORNEL WILDE
Just One Cake of Camay and your Skin is Softer, Smoother!

Win hearts and hold romance — with a softer, smoother complexion. You can — with your very first cake of Camay — when you change from careless cleansing to the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested Camay's daring beauty promise on scores and scores of complexions. And these doctors reported that woman after woman — using just one cake of Camay — had a fresher, lovelier, actually younger-looking skin!

CONCERNING THE MARTINS

The sea-swept sands of Long Island often found Johnny and Sally together, and his admiration grew as he gazed at the smooth magic of her skin. She says: "The first cake of Camay left it softer, lovelier!"

Please—conserve your Camay. Precious materials still go into making soap!

The Martins love to parody their favorite songs. Johnny puts his heart in his songs as he looks at Sally's soft, smooth skin! Sally vows: "To keep him singing the praises of my complexion — I'll stay on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet." Why don't you try mild Camay care, too? Full directions on wrapper.
GIRL: Hold it, eh? Listen, you so-called Little God of Love, I made this statue of you specially. Just so I could do this to it! And this! And this!

CUPID: Wow!

CUPID: Help you? Easiest thing in the world, my angry little éclair. Sparkle. Smile at 'em!

GIRL: Smile? When all I see is a smile full of no gleam . . . even after I brush my teeth?

CUPID: Ah . . . and a little “pink” on your tooth brush too?

GIRL: What’s that got to do with anything?

CUPID: Nothing, Pigeon. It’s only an important warning to see your dentist right away! He may find today’s soft foods are robbing your gums of exercise. And he may suggest “the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage.”

GIRL: I might have known it! A tooth paste salesman!

CUPID: Sis, in my business, you sell anything that helps romance—smiles, for instance. And Ipana sure helps smiles! Because a sparkling smile depends largely on firm, healthy gums. Ipana not only cleans teeth. It's specially designed, with massage, to help your gums. Massage a little extra Ipana on your gums when you brush your teeth . . . and Sis, you'll be on your way to a smile that'll have you knocking over men instead of statues. Get started with Ipana today!

IPANA AND MASSAGE

Product of Bristol-Myers
We’re in a definite holiday mood today—a dreamy feeling with a touch of travel-fever. Palm trees and flower-filled lagoons float before our eyes. Our pulse has a rubbma beat.

But, high as our expectations were, “Holiday in Mexico” went skyrocketing past all previous hits of this hit-making team. It burst upon the screen with more dash and dazzlement than we believed possible.

In the exciting atmosphere of that gay, romantic land, suave and handsome Walter Pidgeon has a tropical love affair with beautiful Iona Massey.

Intoxicating Latin rhythms flow from Xavier Cugat and his orchestra.

The answer to everyone’s holiday problem: All aboard for a happy “Holiday in Mexico” with your good neighbor.

Favoriete of America’s “First Million” Movie Goers

Present for September
Dashing diplomat Walter Pidgeon makes love to sultry Ilona Massey.

Jane Powell (overnight star sensation) charms Roddy McDowall.

To keyboard magic from Jose Iturbi and rhythmic rhumbas by Xavier Cugat...

Amid Technicolor spectacle, with all the excitement of a Mexican fiesta!
Candidly the co-ed caught up with Robert Taylor, Gene Raymond and Clark Gable at Los Angeles City College at a meeting of American Vets of Aerial Combat.

Heart Beats: Let no one be fooled about the torch Clark Gable toted for the merry Mrs. Dolly O'Brien who preferred another man. "Clark's life in Hollywood is one I just couldn't lead," the fair Dolly told friends in Palm Beach and after her marriage Clark went into one of the bluest funks the town has ever seen . . . Bob Hutton strolled into the Mocambo one evening to glimpse four former sweethearts with other men. Cleatus Caldwell, looking more and more beautiful, was beaured by Jim Davis of M-G-M, June Haver by Bob Stack, Lana Turner by Howard Hughes and Bob's ex-wife Natalie Hutton by Bruce Cabot. Bob took one look around and made straight for Cleatus, the girl he jilted for Lana—and don't be surprised if the romance between Cleatus and Bob is resumed. At least he'd like it that way . . . The betting is ten to one that Diana Lynn will not marry Henry Willson because her heart, say those who know, belongs to Loren Tindall. But Henry is a mighty persistent man, let us tell you, so be surprised at nothing . . . Rita Hayworth looks dreamier and dreamier when dancing with Tony Martin these nights and Rory Calhoun is without question the local bobby-sox rave, but Rory seems to be concentrating on Beverly Tyler while a former M-G-M-er, Jimmy Stewart, continues to go alone while local belles look longingly in his direction.
Dress-up dinner date in the fun fashion for Judy Garland and husband Vincente Minnelli—at the Cinematographers’ party at the Cocoanut Grove

Fink and Smith

Tid Bits: Jane Wyman, who has labored for eight months in “The Yearling” in the best role she’s had in movies, has a big load on her heart. She’s afraid the children who see the picture and her own five-year-old daughter will feel far from kindly toward her for shooting the young deer. Even at parties and gatherings Jane goes about asking people what children may think of her.

On the “Gallant Journey” set, Cal went searching out his friend Glenn Ford to compliment him on the strongest comeback of any returned veteran. “You’ll find him over there,” the assistant director pointed and sure enough there was the actor on a cot under four blankets with a high fever. With only a week to go, Glenn refused to delay the picture which will give you an idea of the kid’s fortitude.

Betty Grable and Harry James wear plaid shirts exactly alike to the studio. And eat lunch together every day they’re working. Betty tells Cal she and the baby will make all those one-night stands with Harry when his band goes on tour. It must be love, Cal says, it certainly must be.

Delivery Boy: A young man was hurrying down the walk of the Bel-Air Hotel with an arm load of clothing on the way to the cleaners when Egypt’s newest importation, beautiful Tahia

"Oh, please, will you take my things, Mr. Cleaner?" she said.
"But—I—er—sure," the young man smiled. "File them on."
"Oh thank you," she said, "and may I ask your name?"
"It's Martin. Tony Martin," he grinned.
"And you know what?" Tony said.
"She didn't know me from Adam even when I returned her clothing."

The Great Dane: Dane Clark and his cute red-headed wife, Margo, came by Cal's house en route to a dinner date at Sydney Greenstreet's. The two actors had just completed their latest film, "A Very Rich Man," and were kind of celebrating.
"Now don't tell Sydney you had a late lunch," Cal cautioned Dane. "You just eat regardless and enjoy it, for Sydney likes his guests to have second and even third helpings."

Dane's latest picture, "Her Kind of Man," was being previewed that night so after coffee the four of us crowded into Dane's little car (and, with Sydney, we do mean crowded) and took off for the preview with Dane groaning and moaning at some of his bad moments in the picture, as he called them. Actors are quick to notice their own errors.

At Romanoff's afterwards Dane and Margo told how they had set out to remodel the small cottage on their property for temporary use and ended up by using all the money they'd intended to put into their new house.

"So here we were," Dane said, "with a swell three-room cottage with no kitchen and no dough left to start the new home."

But happy? Well, you never saw a couple as happy together as Margo (or "Red," as everyone calls her) and Dane.

For after-shampoo lustre ... trust Marchand's Make-Up Hair Rinse. Swiftly, effectively, this modern hair cosmetic rinses off dulling soap film and rinses on a lovely silken sheen, plus gleaming new color!

With its 12 shades ... Marchand's Rinse gives you a choice of a variety of color effects! No matter what color your hair may be, you can highlight and flatten its natural tone ... or, with a different Rinse shade, give it a coppery glow. Certain Marchand Rinse shades even blend little gray streaks in with the original hair color!

So easy to use ... after every shampoo. Simply dissolve a package of Marchand's Rinse in warm water and brush or pour it through your hair. Almost instantly, your hair glitters with new color! And it's easier to manage, too.

Absolutely harmless ... Marchand's Rinse is as safe to use as lemon or vinegar. And it does so much more for your hair! Not a bleach — not a permanent dye — this "make-up" hair rinse is made with Government-approved colors.

Lord Cornel: The closing of "Forever Amber" proved a boon to Cornel Wilde. Cornel has spent the free time on his Lord Byron story. With Robert Turney, who lives in the Wilde bath house, Cornel has already achieved 230 pages of script which is five pages longer than "The Robe" script. When the story is finished, Cornel will ask his studio to let him play the lead. Incidentally, when Turney moved in he brought along his two Siamese cats which, added to the Wilde pets, now makes seven Siamese cats roaming the estate.

Paragons: A chat with Turhan Bey's mother reveals the actor is not married to Susanna Foster as rumored. "They are very good friends," she says, which could mean anything. Turhan, stationed in Guam, is now a corporal.

June Allyson, who is so proud of gaining ten pounds, is now soloing in the air which makes husband Dick Powell proud of his mite of a wife.

Since Bob Walker has taken a beach house for the summer, his two boys have come to live with him. It's wonderful to see Bob and his lads out swimming in the mornings.

Mrs. Gary Cooper is the ideal after whom many of the younger set pattern their behavior, so much so several of them are copycat barometers of Mrs. Cooper's moods, clothes and conversation. And a day with Gary and his wife, is, to the younger set, the tops.

The Amber Price: Another actor left with time on his hands because of the closing of "Amber" is Vincent Price. When he gets bored he goes out and buys another load of fertilizer for the garden of his Benedict Canyon home. Mrs. Price complains the place is now a jungle of flowers and shrubs and if Vincent doesn't stop soon they'll have to chop their way out.

Gary Cooper in morning coat and striped trousers trying to keep a monocle in his eye and look dignified at the same time on the "Cloak and Dagger" set.

Gregory Peck trying to lug home two shopping bags full of groceries and attempting to sign autograph books.

The confused look of the diners at The Club when Betty Furness walked in with her husband Bud Ernst (whom she had just remarried after a Reno divorce) and Bob Walker who had courted her during the Reno episode.

Pete Lawford trying to return Gary Cooper's serve at tennis with one hand, while munching jelly beans held in the other. And the bewildered look on Gary's face at Pete's nonchalance.

The Taylor Lad: It strikes Cal that in all Hollywood the actor who has changed the least and remained the same approachable co-operative fellow is Bob Taylor—formerly Navy Lieut. Bob Taylor. A casual friend, a member of the press, or a studio publicist receives the same friendly and sincere greeting the moment he walks onto his set. "You want me for something?" he'll call to the publicist while rehearsing before a scene. "I'll be right there." "I'll wait until the scene is over," the publicist will answer. "And why should you wait?" Bob will ask. "We're both paid by the same company to work here." And that's a one-in-a-thousand attitude in Hollywood.

The Havers: June Haver's mother has turned agent and is determined to help other youngsters get into pictures. Mrs. Haver, whose home is her office, expects to specialize in undiscovered talent and so far has placed a boy she found waiting for a bus with Republic Studios and a pretty girl she saw behind a store counter with Paramount. With June's sister Evelyn singing with a band, the family is doing all right.

Movie Wins Court Verdict

San Francisco, May 18—(Associated Press) Howard Hughes' movie "The Outlaw," featuring Buxom Jane Russell, was cleared of indecency charges by a municipal jury yesterday.

(“The Outlaw” was closed by the San Francisco Police, April 28.)

In the instructions to the jury, Judge Twain Michelsen said as follows:

“We have seen Jane Russell. She is an attractive specimen of American womanhood. God made her what she is.

“There are some fanatical persons who object to Miss Russell in a low-necked blouse. The scene is in the desert — hardly a place for woolens or furs.

“Life is sordid and obscene to those who find it so,” the judge pointed out.

Some of the women in the courtroom hissed indignantly.
like it... but the Public does!

In its first week, "The Outlaw" has broken every attendance record ever established by any motion picture or theatrical production ever shown in any theatre in the history of San Francisco!

"The Outlaw" has exceeded all previous records by the astounding margin of 51,193 persons!

Joan Wells passes the popcorn to Bob Walker and Van Heflin on set of M-G-M's "Till the Clouds Roll By".

A Prediction: It's our job not only to report the current news but to look ahead a bit and prepare you for what's coming. Frenchman Louis Jourdan, brought to this country by David O. Selznick for a role in "The Paradise Case," is, by far the most exciting personality to hit the screen since Tyrone Power. And what's more, the handsome Louis looks not unlike Ty. His features are more regular, however, and his profile something out of this world.

We learned a lot about Louis the day a friend brought him to Cal's house. He's twenty-five and during the occupation hid from the Germans in various small towns of France carrying on dangerous secret work for the underground. He's quiet in manner and so anxious to pronounce every English word correctly he takes his language coach everywhere. A Selznick scout saw Louis in a French film in England and excitedly wired Selznick who had the lad brought over immediately.

Take our tip, fans, he'll be your favorite rave a few months from now and then you can say—Cal told us so.

The doctor makes his rounds

Wherever he goes, he is welcome...his life is dedicated to serving others. Not all his calls are associated with illness. He is often friend and counselor. His satisfactions in life are reflected in the smiling faces of youngsters like this one below, and of countless others whom he has long attended.

Yes, the doctor represents an honored profession...his professional reputation and his record of service are his most cherished possessions.

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

"What cigarette do you smoke, Doctor?"

That was the gist of the question put to 113,597 doctors from coast to coast in a recent survey by three independent research groups.

More doctors named Camels than any other cigarette.

If you're a Camel smoker, this definite preference for Camels among physicians will not surprise you. If not, then by all means try Camels. Try them for taste...for your throat (see right).

Your "T-Zone" Will Tell You...

The "T-Zone"—T for taste and T for throat—is your own proving ground for any cigarette. For only your taste and your throat can decide which cigarette tastes best to you...and how it affects your throat.

Marking twenty-five years of happy wedlock for Fay Bainter and Reginald Venable

Here comes the bride! Fay, of "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," and Reginald were married in New York. The dress she's wearing is in the wedding-gown motif.

Neighbors Norma Shearer and husband Marty Arrouge stayed to chat with Joan Crawford, their first meeting in years.

Romantically speaking—Bonita Granville and Jack Wrather toast each other. Decorations, even the table cloth, were in silver.

The handsome pair—Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Scott. It was a drop-in-and-out cocktail party at Fay's beautiful Ocean Park home.

A wonderful silverplate that stays lovelier longer, because the most used spoons and forks are inlaid with two blocks of sterling at backs of bowls and handles. Fifty-two piece set $68.50 including chest.

Which make good scents for summer?
- Atomic aromas
- Fragile fragrances
- Swoon-perfumes

Bewitched by nose-bait? IX may on heady or powerhouse varieties. You can find yummy "matched" scents in bubble bath, powder and cologne (matched to a teen's budget, too). Fragile fragrances are especially good for summer. That’s when you must stay particularly petal-fresh; bathe more often. On "certain" days, above all. Remember, Kotex contains a deodorant. Locked inside each Kotex napkin, this deodorant can’t shake out! See how sweet it can keep you.

How to rate on a first date?
- Sling a sharp line
- Be a listening-post
- Learn his interests

Being a dumb bunny, or too-too clever, can scare your new squire away! Learn his interests. Talk them over... and he'll soon be mighty interested in you. It's all a matter of forgetting about yourself; an art you can master on "problem days," as well. Just count on Kotex and the extra protection you get from that special safety center. An exclusive Kotex feature that gives you poise... protection plus. There's no fear of accidents to heckle you!

This fetching neckline's for you, if—
- You're the tomboy type
- You shun a suntan
- You watch your posture

Your shoulders are showing! Or will be, when you see the swoonsation this new neckline creates! It's for you, if you watch your posture. So bone up on workouts that square droopy shoulders, correct "hat-rack" shoulder blades. And you needn't let down on "those" days; for exercise—and Kotex—help you keep comfortable. You get lasting softness with Kotex, the napkin made to stay soft while wearing—put chafing trouble on the double!

What's smart strategy for "baby-sitting"?
- Pack junior off to bed
- Be a stand-in for his Mom
- Ask your gang over

Minding the neighbors' small fry can be good business. If you have "savvy"? Ask your librarian for leaflets on games, stories, play materials. In short, take a real interest in junior: be a stand-in for his Mom. You can get together with the gang some other time... and even at "trying" times you'll feel fluster-free, with Kotex. The special, flat tapered ends of Kotex don't show. They prevent revealing outlines, so forget those fears... choose Kotex!

Of Human Bondage (Warners)

YOU may have seen it before, you may be seeing it for the first time, but Somer set Maugham's novel still makes an attention-getting film. Done this time with Paul Henreid in Leslie Howard's role of the sensitive would-be artist with the club foot and the inferiority complex and Eleanor Parker in Bette Davis's famous star-making part of Mildred, the cockney vixen, it gets its accustomed audience reaction. The men will call Henreid a "jerk"; the women will pity him from the bottom of their susceptible hearts; while blushing for the fact that their sex can encompass such a sinning Eve as Mildred.

The story is now almost a literary legend: A young medical student who seeks after a unsuccessfully resigns himself to a realistic life, meets a head-tossing waitress, finds himself in inexplicable bondage to her and her ruthless exploitation. He realizes that what he feels for her can bring him only deterioration; yet he is ever ready at one calculating glance from his Circe to spring his own trap. His eventual freedom is doled out by a relenting fate.

Henreid gives a feeling portrayal, despite the distortion his Austrian accent imposes on the original plot. Eleanor Parker as the cockney aways her hips and smashes furniture with an ability that is noteworthy but yet cannot compare with Danielle Darrieux of a woman's smallness of soul. Alexis Smith is sincere and dignified in the thankless role of the good woman, Janis Paige gives Sally a sensitive touch; Edmund Gwenn does a final piece of acting as the philosopher-friend, Athelny.

Your Reviewer Says: A perennial pays off.

Centennial Summer (20th Century-Fox)

SET in Philadelphia in that progressive summer of 1876 when women were branching right out of their leg o'mutton sleeves and young doctors were daring to specialize in obstetrics, this music-filled Technicolor film will amuse you, delight you and surely make you forget that a strike is anything but a baseball term.

Walter Brennan and Lilian Gish are a conservative middle-class Philadelphia family intent on Papa's railroad business and keeping tabs on their two daughters—Linda Darnell, the doer, and Jeanne Crain, the dreamer. Into their Brussels-curtain household two bombshells are thrown. One arrives in the luscious form of Constance Bennett, Mama's sister straight from Paris who brings along her advanced ideas—and a gallant young Frenchman, Cornel Wilde. The second is the Centennial Ex position and the combination of the two puts the family right on a dashing merry-go-round. After lots of gay confusion set to the tune of Jerome Kern's music and Oscar Hammerstein's lyrics, everyone gets the gold ring, including the appreciative audience.

Cornel Wilde is completely at home in the role of the Frenchman, right down to accent and gestures; he is a Celt to the tricolor born. The rest of the cast is admirable. The music works in rather more easily than in most films of this sort; the costumes are sugar-plum visions; the finished whole is a round of light-hearted fun.

Your Reviewer Says: Oh, for the gay old days!

Courage of Lassie (M-G-M)

A FILM that takes its place among the blue-ribbon winners in Hollywood's dog stories is this Technicolor account of Bill, a golden collie, played by Lassie, who starts his life in the wilderness and grows up to find his god in a little girl.

The plot has all the pathos that usually marks Hollywood animal sagas, but in addition it presents two new angles. The first is the dog's first climax—a series of wildlife shots that are so incredibly natural the animals seem like Disney characters. The second is a too-brief description of the training and handling of dogs for war, a fascinating bit of film intelligence that puts the picture in an unusual class.

Bill's adventures are many and hectic; the audience is tense with his mistress Elizabeth Taylor when he disappears; apprehensive with his handler when he is caught in the Aleutians; relieved with his good friend, Frank Morgan, when he finally comes into his own as a first-class war hero.

Elizabeth Taylor performs with a natural versatility; Morgan with artful casualness. Fans of Tom Drake will wish that he had more to do but what he does do is most acceptable. It is a picture children will love, dog-lovers will applaud.

Your Reviewer Says: A best-of-breed.

Don't Ignore These Symptoms!

IT'S the simplest little precaution imaginable—yet so effective! Every time you wash your hair, just use Listerine Antiseptic. Massage it well in, on hair and scalp. That's all!

Thousands of fastidious women use this pleasant little treatment as a precaution against infectious dandruff, which bothers so many people. Women know that flakes and scales can ruin the smartest hair-do...utterly destroy the charm of beautiful hair.

A causative agent of infectious dandruff, according to many noted dermatologists, is a stubborn germ called the "bottle bacillus" (Pityrosporum ovale). Listerine Antiseptic kills this germ by the million! And does it in such a cool, refreshing way! You'll find the treatment easy, quick and wonderfully clean-feeling.

If Infectious Dandruff Starts

If those telltale flakes and scales persist... if you're pestered by intolerable itching—it's no time to delay. These things may be symptoms of infectious dandruff—a warning that the infection is already at work. Don't experiment with so-called "overnight" cures or greasy lotions. Don't wait till shampoo-time. Get going—at once—with Listerine Antiseptic—two treatments a day and keep it up. How wonderful to see flakes and scales start to disappear! What a comfort to alleviate that itching.

This twice-a-day Listerine Antiseptic treatment for hair and scalp has been tested clinically. Tested for a full month, it actually removed, or markedly improved dandruff symptoms for 76% of the sufferers from this embarrassing disease.

So help guard your lovely hair with Listerine Antiseptic treatments with every shampoo. Or, if infectious dandruff has gotten a start, give two treatments a day for quick, comforting aid. Lambert Pharmacal Co.

✓ Three Wise Fools (M-G-M)

YOU already know what Margaret O'Brien can do to the American public; you are also aware of the deft touches of Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone, Edward Arnold and Thomas Mitchell in any film they grace. Put these elements together, add a touch of an Irish brogue, some leprechauns and fairies and you have “Three Wise Fools.”

Playing the Irish granddaughter of the long-lost love of Stone, Barrymore and Arnold, Margaret comes from Ireland with her faithful servitor, Mitchell, to upset completely the selfish lives of the three old men. She prattles touchingly about the “little people” who live in a tree on her grandmother’s American estate; the three venerables prattle foolishly about a deed they would like to have her hand over to the local university. Since to do this, Margaret would have to evict her fairies, she takes a firm stand as a landlord.

Brush up on your Irish brogue, get on speaking terms with your own private leprechauns and go and enjoy an enchanting bit of movie-making.

Your Reviewer Says: The “little people” take you over.

✓ My Pal Trigger (Republic)

LIKE all the films of this series, this is a very good Roy Rogers and a very excellent Trigger up to all sorts of tricks to insure you a fine western. The picture is tight-knit, has a genuine sincerity, is filled with well-worked suspense.

Rogers is accused of killing the great Golden Sovereign; after being bailed out of jail, he clears town in a hurry. In the midst of his wanderings his mare Lady presents him with a foal, Trigger, the image of the Golden Sovereign. From then on in Roy and Trigger fight their way back over a rough western road to handshakes for Roy from his old enemy and laurel wreaths for Trigger.

Familiar faces grace the struggle—George “Gabby” Hayes, Dale Evans and Bob Nolan and the Sons of the Pioneers. If you’re in the mind to go west for a ✓ Lover Come Back (Universal)

THIS is a nice little piece of summer dessert on the film menu, a bit of romantic fluff that will lighten the heart of long-suffering females—and males. It takes the double standard, ties it up in a roguish bowknot and then unties it to leave the wife-husband situation at status quo—i.e., love and kisses spiced up by the promise of a few inevitable quarrels.

Lucille Ball is the wife who dreams about her soldier husband for two long years, meanwhile tending strictly to her stylish business. George Brent is the spouse who also dreams of his wife but does some "not a thing to it" work on the side in his date book. Their reunion is punctuated by a meeting of George and some of his overseas blonde friends; complicated by Lucille's conniving to make her red-faced husband jealous; climaxed by a trip to Nevada for the well-worn reason.

The cast is just what it should be—Miss Ball and Mr. Brent carry things off pleasantly; Vera Zorina gives just the right touch as the "other woman"—innocent, of course; and Charles Winninger and Elizabeth Risdon make a Pa-Ma team that greatly increases the amusement value of the film.

Your Reviewer Says: Breezy business for a summer night.

✓ Smoky (20th Century-Fox)

WHETHER or not you'll like "Smoky" is an "if" proposition. You'll rub appreciative hands at this film—magnificent so far as Technicolor goes—if you're a fireside cowboy who dreams of the wide open spaces; or if you're a horse lover who can think of no better treat than watching herds of splendid horses running wild over the glorious mesas of Utah. For this is primarily a horse-cowboy saga, the life story of Smoky, a wild horse who is trained by Fred MacMurray, and his adventures among an odd assortment of the so-called human race.

Slow-moving at first, it picks up pace toward the middle with the entrance of Bruce Cabot as the renegade who does no one any good, least of all Smoky. MacMurray rides his outdoor role most comfortably, can be just his deadpan, tight-lipped self. Anne Baxter plays "The Girl," does as much with her scenes as a cowboy female lead permits. Burl Ives makes a hefty bow to films singing cowboy ballads and does such a good job he is sure to be humming his way through a lot of Fox westerns.

The scenery looks like a painted backdrop, but isn't; you'll look and like the fact that this is America.

Your Reviewer Says: "Aye" for cowboy fanatics.

Colorado Serenade (PRC)

THis Western, all wrapped up in Technicolor, has a gun at the hip ready to go off at any minute. Although it fails to knock the adult customers dead, "Colorado Serenade" will undoubtedly shoot to kill so far as its cowboy-rooter audience is concerned. About twenty minutes too long, it offers all the essentials of a Western—he stagecoach holdup, the crimelined lady, the honest "Jedge" who, with the help of a couple of handsome heroes, is to bring law and order to the wide-open frontier town. The shootin' matches are interspersed with cowboy songs.

Law and Order put up a good fight and emerge victorious over the bad men and Eddie Dean as the hero does his share to keep the action moving. It's a good try that comes out just a bit overdone.

Your Reviewer Says: Not-so-good, not-so-bad Western.

Boys Ranch (M-G-M)

This picture, concerning boys who are juvenile delinquents, had an odd effect on the members of the preview audience. All the lads in this group were well-behaved people and went out swearing to commit mayhem on the perpetrators of this movie. Take little Skippy Homeier, for instance, who scored so notably in "Tomorrow the World." Skippy is permitted to go about behaving like the village idiot on the ranch provided for boy delinquents by James Cagney's baseball player with a reforming bug. Skippy simply makes no sense. Darryl Hickman is the eager beaver of the outfit and Butch Jenkins the lad who talks like Farmer Brown at a Grange meeting. Dorothy Patrick plays Craig's wife and little Sharon McManus, who danced so beautifully with Gene Kelly in "Anchors Aweigh," plays his daughter.

Your Reviewer Says: See this and you'll feel like a bad boy.

Doll Face (20th Century-Fox)

Strictly from the wrong side of the tracks is Doll Face, the burlesque queen played by Vivian Blaine. Strictly from the wrong side of the production tracks, too, is this little film that has Dennis O'Keefe as her publicity manager. To remedy the former condition, he has a book written about her life, a la Gypsy Rose Lee. The ghost writer, Michael Dunne, horns in on their romance, Carmen Miranda makes some valuable comments about the business and in the end everyone gets bored with the whole mix-up, including Doll Face who, of course, discovers that true love always makes a plot come out right in the end.

There are lots of shots of chorus girls in tights, lots of songs by Perry Como, lots of meaningless meanderings on the part of the whole cast. One has the feeling that if Carmen Miranda had been given a little more to do there might have been a lot more laughs.

Your Reviewer Says: Nothing much doing.

Badman's Territory (RKO)

It's a comedy-spy story set in the badman's territory in the old west. This time he's away in Badman's Territory, in the town of Quinto which is a law unto itself. A law unto herself, too, is Ann Richards as Henryette, the pioneer newspaper woman who is trying to get Quinto under Federal control as part of the projected territory of Oklahoma.

The James boys, the Daltons and Belle Starr are present, mighty suspicious of Randy and his lawful activities and making up to his brother who unfortunately finally succumbs to the lure of the bad men and joins the gang in their famous Coffeyville raid. There is enough shooting to satisfy a hearty male audience, enough romance between Randy and Henryette to please any Western-minded ladies.

A crooked U. S. Marshal and George "Gabby" Hayes as Coopie have itchy trigger fingers, too.

Your Reviewer Says: They aim to please.

John beat her at cards. Anne got angry—and the courtship was on!

BY KENNETH RHODES

For anyone interested in how marriages are made in Hollywood, for the records of the Institute of Family Relations, for a honeymoon scrapbook or any similar sentimental purposes, here are some direct quotes:

John: "Anne, will you marry me?"
Anne: "Yes, John, I will."

It's an odd thing that so few persons seem to recall how they happened to get engaged, let alone the exact words of a proposal. The modern legend is that proposals are old fashioned, that understandings are reached without words, and all that. Not so Anne Baxter and John Hodiak.

They were sitting on the couch in Anne's comfortable living room, with the smart French water colors on the wall, and they had been silent for a long time. John took Anne's hand and he asked the question and she answered it. It was a scene that wouldn't play well on the screen, audiences being used to what they're used to, but that's how it was.

John's a truthful man. "I didn't know what to expect," he confesses. "I was a little surprised when she said 'Yes.'" Anne is honest, too. She knew exactly what to expect, and had an answer all ready.

Here are a pair of young moderns, just married, ardently in love, of course, (Continued on page 115)
A late summer sum-up of the stars and pictures out in front in the race for Photoplay's Gold Medal Awards

WHO WILL BE YOUR

T HE other night when you were coming out of the movies you said: "That picture should win a prize as the best of the year!" And all around in the lobby you heard others saying the same thing. Perhaps it was "The Bells of St. Mary's."

That same night, in the next town, many in the audience were responding to "The Spiral Staircase" with equal enthusiasm. While in still another town, "The Lost Weekend" was convincing movie-goers that it and no other should be adjudged the best picture of the year.

With 1946 yet to run its full course no one of us can tell which picture will prove most popular with American movie-goers. However, a nation-wide poll, representing a true cross-section of the country is, for the third consecutive year, in the process of being taken. All over the land, in rural areas, suburbs and cities, Audience Research, Inc. has skilled interviewers in the field consulting men and women, young and old, rich and poor, frequent and infrequent movie-goers, about the films and the stars they have enjoyed most.

It may be that one of these interviewers has talked to you. It may be that he stopped you on the street or at the market or introduced himself when you were sitting on your front porch or when you went to the door in answer to his ring by saying: "We're taking a poll to determine the most popular movie and the most popular stars for Photoplay's 1946 Gold Medal Awards. Would you please answer a few questions?"

One place you have not been stopped by an ARI interviewer is outside of your motion-picture theater.
For we have discovered respondents, still under the spell of a movie they have just seen, sometimes are unable properly to evaluate the enjoyment other pictures offered. And it is essential that every vote cast in an ARI poll be completely unbiased. In fact, every ARI interviewer carries a list of the pictures released during the year so you cannot forget any picture that you have seen.

At our research offices the thousands of votes you, the movie-goers of America, cast are turned over to our tabulating room where special machines, performing the complicated job of assorting cards and recording four hundred votes a minute, go into action. After which our statisticians, supplied with the multiple machine counts, undertake the final calculations.

The Photoplay Gold Medals, as you know, are the one award in the land based upon Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public’s choice both of the best-liked picture and the best-liked stars. And what could be more fitting than that Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public act as the final judge of movies and stars, since it is for the public that stars act and that movies are made. There are other yearly motion-picture awards, of course, but they are decided by the vote of critics, editors, exhibitors or, as in the case of the Oscars of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, by the motion-picture industry itself.

As we go to press, little more than halfway through this year, the eight most popular pictures so far in general release in 1946, arranged alphabetically, are:
Making the greatest stride in popularity, Cornel Wilde... also Gregory Peck, who was in last year's winning picture...

If your favorite picture is not listed here it probably is because it has not yet been seen by one-third of those interviewed, a criterion for the eligibility of any picture. "Saratoga Trunk," for instance, had not been seen by enough people to be eligible at this time. However, the enthusiasm recorded by those who have seen this picture indicates it may very well be a top contender in the final polling.

Last year, "The Valley of Decision," not listed at this halfway mark, won Photoplay's Gold Medal as the best-liked film of all.

"The Bells of St. Mary's" with Bing Crosby and Ingrid Bergman, in leading ten pictures
Now for the stars chosen as favorites thus far. Listed alphabetically, the five most popular women are: Ingrid Bergman, Bette Davis, Judy Garland, Greer Garson, Betty Grable.

While not far behind are: Claudette Colbert, Betty Hutton, Margaret O'Brien, Ginger Rogers, Lana Turner.

Interestingly enough, the same five women were first in the hearts of American movie-goers not only at this point in last year's race but also at the end of the year when the race was completely run. And at the great Photoplay dinner at the Beverly Hills Hotel, at which three hundred and sixty-eight top flight Hollywood stars, producers, directors, writers and executives gathered to hear the final announcements, it was Greer Garson to whom the Gold Medal was awarded as the most popular woman star for the second year in succession.

THE CASE Against
THE OUTLAW

Stricter censorship will mean less entertaining motion pictures for you. At this moment a nation-wide fight is being waged involving that vital issue. We feel it is important for you to know about it

BY FRED R. SAMMIS

For five years a motion picture has been the spinning storm center of a bitter controversy involving in its cast of characters all the major movie studios in Hollywood, hundreds of censors, attorneys, theater owners and a confused public.

Finished in 1941, it is only now being shown in scattered sections of the country to movie-goers. Though few have yet seen this film, it has been so widely publicized that almost everyone believes it to be some extraordinary motion picture spiced with daring scenes.

The truth is, "The Outlaw" is a heavily budgeted Western, somewhat amateurishly acted by its young leads, with the usual quota of gun fights, Indian chases and romance. As it is being shown in theaters it is not a film deserving of its notoriety nor worthy of the acute attention of the public.

Had this picture been released in the usual manner, it would have run its course long before this and been quietly forgotten by those who saw it. That it is today the most widely discussed film of the year is the result of ballyhoo and exploitation. It is the manner in which "The Outlaw" has been sold to movie-goers that has created the storm and the unhappy results of the storm.

The pivotal character in this drama has been the picture's producer, Howard Hughes, a lean, towering forty-four-year-old Texan. As owner of the Hughes Tool Company, whose plants boomed with war contracts, and director of an international airline, his personal fortune is reported to be between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. He has broken world records in aviation and designed the now-famed Constellation. Recently while testing his latest fast experimental plane for the Army he suffered a tragic crack-up, the full results of which are not yet known as we go to press.

Hughes was no stranger to Hollywood and its rules. He made six pictures before he was thirty, the best known of which are "Hell's Angels," "The Front Page" and "Scarface." After the release of "Scarface" in 1932, he was inactive as a film producer until 1940 when he began his film based on the life of Billy the Kid, a baby-faced killer who flourished briefly in the early history of the Southwest.

BEHIND Hollywood the hills seem to be flung against the sky. More and more, as Hollywood becomes home to me, I love those hills—so green after the rains, turning brown with summer. Beyond those hills you come to little ranches and farms and orchards and good simple people who know about Hollywood only because they read about it.

On one of these ranches Jane Russell, center of the storm about "The Outlaw," lives. With her live her husband, Bob Waterfield, star player with the Cleveland Rams, and his mother, Frances. Hollywood to Jane is simply a place where she works; no more important in her life than an office would be to a secretary or a shop to a salesgirl.

"I don't see," she says in her young direct way, with little trace of the professional in her diction, "why people go off their stick because they're in movies. So they're in movies! Other people have other jobs . . ."

"I admit if I like a story I think about it day and night. Interviews aren't bad, really. You don't mind talking about yourself. I don't care who you are. But fittings and that junk—oh-h-h . . . And when I have to get out and have pictures taken—well, I want to blow my brains out."

She threw her extraordinarily long legs over the arms of the wing chair in which she sat, tucking in the skirt of her black suit with casual circumspection. She ran long fingers, (Continued on page 130)

BY PATRICIA KNIGHT

I SUPPOSE every wife has her own album of mental snapshots of her husband—little intimate, funny or tender glimpses that, through the years, make up her private knowledge of the man she knows better than anyone else in the world.
Yet, strangely enough, the pictures that flash through my mind when someone asks me what Cornel Wilde is like are of moments that weren't strictly mine, at all. I just happened to be there at the time . . .

I remember, for instance, standing on a city sidewalk soon after I met him, and watching Cornel come up the street. It was one of those undecided winter days when the snow came down beautifully white, changed its mind, and filled the gutters with slush and water. A half-block away a drab little woman was standing on the curb holding a small girl by the hand, afraid to step into the muddy river which must have been a good six inches deep. I saw Cornel stop, pick the child up in his arms, take the woman by the elbow and half lift her over the swirling water and across to the other sidewalk.

A little bit boy scout, when you set it down on paper, but it was the unselfconscious way he did it that kept the scene in my mind. He didn't even know I was anywhere in sight. I stood there thinking of how the boys I'd known at school —or I, myself, with the thoughtlessness of youth—would have gone right past the woman without noticing her. To Cornel, it was something done as a matter of course.

For variety, I remember a scene—and I do mean scene—we once shared with a taxi driver. It was back in that early era when our temperaments were like the woodman's twigs—rub them against each other and presto, a blazing quarrel. The cab picked us up in heavy traffic—I hopped hurriedly in and landed on the seat with my dress slightly above my knees. "Pull your skirt down!" commanded Cornel —and my hand stopped half-way to the hem. "I don't think I will, I think I'll keep it this short—" I said snippily. "Not with me, you won't—" he said, so mad he was white. "I won't"—"You will"—between us, we ripped the hem entirely out of the skirt . . .

A half hour later we were howling at remembrance of the cab driver's scared face—poor fellow didn't know whether the young man was going to toss the young lady into the street, or vice versa. A small incident, but as much a part of the private life of Mr. and Mrs. Wilde as any other. In the (Continued on page 112)

Kay Kyser's not only Alan Ladd's best friend, he manages generally to get the last laugh.

He's still laughing over Alan and the hen. He had gone with Alan to the new Valley ranch, which is Alan's current obsession, just after Laddie had bought it. Rancher Ladd showed Kay around proudly, taking on all the airs of an experienced hand. Out by the hen-yard Alan insisted that Kay must have one of the bantam hen's crop of miniature eggs. The hen was sitting belligerently on her nest, eyeing them with the glittering, cold eye of hate. Alan hesitated.

"Make her get off," Kay said.
Alan made motions with his hands. "Shoo," he told the hen.
She put up the feathers on her neck, sat tight.
"Go on, scram," Alan said, circling the nest unhappily.

Very gently, Kay stepped up and, slipping a practiced hand under the hen's posterior, lifted her an inch or two. She took off, squawking balefully. "That's how much Alan knew about ranches then," Kay tells you. "That was then—you should see him now. The boy learns fast."

What Alan hasn't learned is some magic formula for beating Kay at gin rummy. But he's still trying—and Kay is still winning.

As a matter of fact, their friendship started with gin rummy when they played a few games at the Racquet Club in Palm (Continued on page 134)

LIKE the atom bomb, practically nobody's got the formula for it, but everybody knows when a girl's got it. And, whether she's Hollywood or Kansas, star or stenographer, every girl yearns for it.

In movieland, like everywhere else, there are certain women who've cornered the market on man appeal. While some glitter stars sit home with their Oscars—the gold kind in statuette form—for a few chosen belles the line of masculine admirers once more forms on the right.

Who are these leading ladies in the social sweepstakes and how do they get that way? Draw up a datebook and listen:

A world-famous reader of hands writes her own story of what she sees in Van Johnson's palms—and makes a startling prediction for his future

BY MME. MARGARET MAMLOK

VAN JOHNSON extended his broad, strong hands to me over my desk.

"Do you mean," he asked, flashing his quick, honest, boyish smile, "that you can see my life in my hands?"

For a moment I studied the hands of my young visitor—hands that were warm to the touch, fine textured, modeled generously, but well shaped.

What would I find in these famous hands? What insight would they give me into his childhood and into the forces which had molded him?

Smiling at his wonderment, I explained the science of chirolgy or, as it is more popularly known, hand analysis. Chirolgy, I told him, is based on definite laws, strict observations and logical conclusions. From the study of the hand one may acquire a fundamental knowledge of human instincts and motivations.

Van's intense, brown eyes watched my pencil move exploringly over his palm.

"No single feature of the hand gives a complete picture," I said. "The hand must be considered as a whole. The length and shape of your fingers, your nails, the color of your hands and your skin texture, the various protuberances called mounts, and the network of lines in your palms—all these will tell me things about you which even you may not know."

As I took the imprints of (Continued on page 105)

Beautiful duet, Anita Colby and Jennifer, starred in Selznick's "Duel in the Sun"

A best-friend insight, as rare and zestful as Jennifer—who inspired it

BY ANITA COLBY

TALKING about Jennifer Jones is, for me, like talking about one's own family. You know that you're prejudiced and therefore you dare not enthuse too much. Yet to underestimate would not be fair, either. So I shall try to tell you about Jennifer as I see her—from the outside looking in.

You are all familiar with her ability. You know that she won the Academy Award for "The Song of Bernadette" and has had the remarkable distinction of being nominated for an "Oscar" for every performance she's given since. Her fiery interpretation of the little half-breed, Pearl Chavez, in David O. Selznick's forthcoming "Duel in the Sun" will speak for itself.

So I'll confine myself to the Jennifer Jones behind the scenes.

She's really a dream girl, that Jones. Her zest is so refreshing that just being with her is like taking a cold shower in the summertime. The little things in life never escape Jennifer. They're most important to her and through her own enthusiastic eyes they become important to you, too.

Friendship is a sacred trust with Jennifer. She's one of the most loyal and devoted friends I've ever had. One (Continued on page 74)
Cluny Brown comes to town: Jennifer Jones, star of "Cluny Brown"
He's Mark Stevens, hailed the discovery of the year. How he beat the rap is Hollywood's most dramatic story.

"There's a reason why I must make good in Hollywood," Mark Stevens said grimly. "I've got to become a star. I know people are going to misunderstand me. I'll probably make a lot of enemies along the way. But I don't care. I've got to become a star!"

Nearly four years ago he sat there talking—disillusioned—embittered—jaw set like steel. Occasionally his voice broke. Quickly he'd cup a shaking hand to his eyes, pretending the light was too bright.

Today, after two terrific performances, Mark Stevens is a star. As the sensitive, romantic soldier in "From This Day Forward," he's reminiscent of the early-day Lew Ayres. In compelling contrast, as the bitter detective in "The Dark Corner," he's vitally remindful of Alan Ladd. As Mark Stevens, individualist and realist, he's hailed by fans and critics as the most definite discovery of the year.

I don't think Mark actually planned on telling his story. Looking back on that memorable night, I do think he always hoped to unburden himself to someone—someone who would understand, or at least respect his confidence. Not even his own
Mark, of "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," and Annelle, who knows

Expectant father—he's gambling with the stork for Friday, the 13th family knew this incredible story. And now, with Mark’s permission, the story can be told. To tell it, we must go back to the beginning and—Errol Flynn!

On the Warners lot a new boy (who was destined to become Mark Stevens) was being cussed and discussed. His name was Steve Richards (legally, it’s Richard William Stevens). He wasn't very happy with his lot in life. He didn't try to fake his feelings. When he was cast as a “voice” in “Between Two Worlds,” he had plenty to say long after the scene was finished. In “Doughgirls” he had nothing to say. He said plenty. Six lines cut down to four pacified him momentarily in “Pride of the Marines.” In “Objective Burma” he fared a bit better.

For the balance of the eighteen months before they released him, Steve (to his close friends) was generally unpopular. He beefed too much. He was rebellious, indignant, sarcastic.

“Relax, kid,” Dane Clark tried to tell him. “It took me three years to meet the boss.” Dennis Morgan, others, tried to encourage him too. Steve was adamant.

In a few sentences after he walked into my office, Steve revealed himself as a young man who had been hurt. His eyes were friendly, though sad. He spoke like a gentleman. He behaved like a gentleman. He was eager, ambitious, full of defenses, for example, behaving like a dead-end kid to attract attention. On this particular day, he was concerned about Errol Flynn.

“Errol is giving a party,” Steve said. “Nora just called. They want the men to wear dinner jackets. Mine’s too small for me. It’s the first big Hollywood party I’ve ever been invited to. I can’t go.”

He looked wistful as he said it, then quickly he changed his attitude. The corners of his mouth tightened. His chin shot out.

Olivia
HITS HER STRIDE

The Major and his miss—Joe McKeon, in captain days, explains the controls to Olivia, of "To Each His Own"
A blissful de Havilland who searched through unrest to find

YOU'D never know Olivia de Havilland these days. She's so relaxed and happy.

Olivia used to be the most restless girl in town. You couldn't tell what mood you'd find her in. She'd either be way up in the rosiest clouds, or she'd be sunk to the depths. She was forever going somewhere—New York or San Francisco or merely down to Palm Springs.

But not now. Now she glows. She's put on a shade more weight—just enough. Her enormous, beautiful eyes are very bright, her lovely skin has a wonderful color. She does all but sing aloud. Her contract fight with Warner Brothers which kept her off screen for eighteen months is behind her. The deal she's got with Paramount both in terms of money and opportunities makes her blissful and she's definitely got her finest job of acting recorded for Paramount in "To Each His Own."

What's more, she's given up the house she owned in the Los Feliz Hills section of Hollywood, and after a dozen moves—to a small but very swank house in Bel-Air, then to smaller but equally swank rooms in every hotel in town—she is settled down in the dwelling which Mitchell Leisen, the director, owns. Mitch was a refuge from a house. He sold his home, found a barn of a place, just off the Sunset Strip, bought it, named it the Shoreham Apartments, did the decor inside and out, took his own, very precious furniture and fixed up eight apartments and a dream-like garden. He moved into one apartment, allowed seven close friends to lease the others. Only two of these friends were actresses, Olivia and Paulette Goddard. For sheer elegance, combined with complete comfort and exclusiveness, you've never seen anything to surpass the Shoreham.

Not that Olivia goes about the Shoreham always clad in velvets and satins to match its luxury. Sometimes she does. Other times she bats around in old slacks and a faded sweater. Sometimes she has her make-up on and looks ravishing. Other times she has her hair braided on top of her head, has forgotten her lipstick and looks about ten years old.

In other words, she's become a girl who's found herself.

Which means there's a man mixed up in it. There is always a man mixed up in it when a woman is contentedly and unaffectedly happy.

Olivia's young man is the very nicest kind. He's sincere, he's thoughtful, he's full of integrity. His name is Major Joseph McKeon and he's in the U. S. Army Air Corps and likely to stay there. (Continued on page 118)

TAKE 1: In the chill Hollywood night, a burglar pried open a door to an RKO sound stage. As stealthily as a villain in a silent movie, he approached Franchot Tone's dressing room, opened it up quickly, ransacked it, stuffing his pockets with cufflinks, a cigarette lighter, a fine watch and a billfold.

In Lena Romay's dressing room, next door, he found a good haul of trinkets, jewelry and bills. His flashlight pencilled toward the door of the next dressing room. It was ajar. On a small placard was the name of the owner: Shirley Temple.

He grinned, shrugged, closed the door carefully and went away.

TAKE 2: "We have orange juice, cornflakes, toast and coffee," said Mrs. Agar.

"How about eggs?" said Mr. Agar. "And bacon?"

"Eggs? You mean, eggs?" said Mrs. Agar.

"Sure, four eggs," said Mr. Agar firmly.

"Men certainly are amazing," said Mrs. Agar as she burned her fingers. "Especially husbands."

"Ridiculous," said Mrs. Temple. "Nobody could live on that for a month."

"Mostly for steak," said Shirley. "Steak and potatoes."

"No milk?" said Mrs. Temple.

"I'm not counting milk and butter and eggs," said Shirley.

"Anyway," said Mrs. Temple, "did you pay the butcher for the calves liver?"

"I didn't order calves liver," said Shirley. "That was your order. It was sixteen dollars and thirty-seven cents."

"How about the ham?" said Mrs. Temple.

"I hope I never see a ham again. They last too long," said Shirley. "Baked ham, fried ham, ham croquettes, ham and eggs, ham for breakfast, ham for dinner, and now somebody has given us another ham. We'll have steak tonight." (Continued on page 121)
"William, stop being mean to Mary!"

Time after time the teacher used to call me down for dipping Mary's pigtails in the ink or throwing rocks at her. She was the ugliest little girl I had ever laid eyes on and she sat directly in front of me.

One rainy day after school when the teacher had gone, we decided to play a combination of hide-and-seek and "post office." Any two youngsters caught hiding at the same time were to kiss each other.

Little Miss Homely hid in the cloakroom. You can imagine how the other children, remembering my past persecution of her, hooted when I was caught hiding there too and had to kiss her.

What they didn't know was that I had hidden near her on purpose, that I had such a crush on her that her looks didn't matter. Throwing rocks and dipping her pigtails in ink had been the only way I knew of expressing my affection. That rainy day game taught me another method of expression.

"Yah! yah! yah! braces on his teeth! What a little sissy!" one boy howled.

The others joined the refrain.

It was after a school outing and we youngsters were all riding home on the top of a double-deck bus laden down with picnic baskets, butterfly nets, tennis rackets and so on. I was sharing a seat with the very nice boy with braces on his teeth whom the other boys were gazing.

"He doesn't even have a girl, he's such a baby!" they jeered.

My Irish was up and I yelled back, "He does too. I'm it." Then I leaned over and kissed him.

He was as much surprised as I, but we became fast friends from then on. I sincerely hope that he got so he could dispense with the braces. I'll admit they were a strain on romance.

"Quick! Prompt her, somebody! Virginia's forgotten her lines!"

Loud whispers from the wings, but still I stood speechless on the stage, holding up the high-school performance of "The Taming of the Shrew." Earlier I had been letter-perfect in my lines, yet now—for a few moments—I couldn't utter a word.

What had happened? It's simple. I'd been kissed, for the first time. By the leading man, of course, and at the proper moment in the play as decreed by Mr. Shakespeare, but still it was a surprise. For you see, all during rehearsals the boy who played opposite me had faked the embrace. That night his kiss was the real thing.

Love, they say, is what makes the world go 'round. One kiss, my first, certainly made my head spin that eventful evening.
I believe her name was Yvonne, but I'll call her Eve because she certainly slipped me the apple.

She was eight and I was ten. She wore a big blue bow in her long blonde curls and her dress was very blue and starched. We were walking through an apple orchard when I got the urge to kiss her.

"Get me that apple first," she pouted, pointing to a topmost branch.

Dopey that I was, I shinnied up the tree, tore my clothes, scratched my legs and got the apple as directed. When I demanded a kiss as reward she bet me I couldn't eat the apple in four bites. Dopey me, I did it. Then she wanted another apple.

We went through this procedure over and over and still no kiss. Finally, after five apples and a belly ache, I was allowed to kiss her. Did I enjoy it? I had such pains in my stomach I was miserable.

But I remember the kiss, so I must have loved it too.

The first boy who ever kissed me was an eagle scout so loaded down with merit badges he practically clanked when he walked. He lived in the next block and he rode a magnificent bicycle, pedaling grandly by our house about four times a day, using the "no hands" technique. He was, indeed, a heart-stopper.

One day there was a boy scout jamboree and his mother invited my mother and me. It was wonderful. My hero untied knots and tied them back up, made fire from two sticks, identified the bark from twenty kinds of trees—and generally distinguished himself, being awarded the ultimate medal which made him all-time super-scout or something. He came over to us, kissed his mother and then kissed me. I guess it was just a little extra effusiveness after winning so many prizes, for it never happened again.

He still rode by our house, but that was the beginning and end of our romance.

"Tonight's the night!" The prettiest girl in my class was giving me a date. I was fourteen, she was twelve and we were going to a movie. Above all things, I wanted to be a dashing swain.

"Dan!" my mother called, "don't forget you've got to pick up that watermelon at the fruit store for me."

"Mo-the-e-e!" I wailed, "Not tonight!" But Mother was adamant. Dressed in my best suit, I had to buy the watermelon, lug it along on the streetcar to my best girl's house and take her—and it—to the movie! Talk about romantic appeal, I felt more like a tired horse than a perfect escort. When we got back to my girl's house after the movie, I rested the heavy watermelon on the step. The minute it was out of my arms I knew what I wanted—and kissed the girl.

P.S. I walked away in such a daze that I forgot the watermelon.

IT WAS the preview of "Easy to Wed" in the Westwood Village Theater and excitement crackled in the air like lightning in a Mississippi Valley storm. Police reserves were on hand early to control the crowd. The junior misses on the sidewalk were practicing swoons and the wolf cubs were woo-wooing in close harmony. Van arrived in style and ten seconds later was barely intact.
Esther's crossing of the lobby could only be compared to Little Eva's crossing the ice floes, but this time there were wolves in pursuit, not bloodhounds.
Lucille Ball's reception was all right, too. After all, no one knew for certain then that she was going to be The Other Woman.

Now, playing The Other Woman in a Johnson-Williams picture is a composite of Daniel walking into the lion's den and a girl with a sprained ankle bucking a department store sale of nylons. If she's lucky, the venturesome actress will be hissed on the screen and mobbed off it. (Continued on page 94)
Man of action: A note came from a GI he met in France, so Bing phoned to tell him to "come on over" to the set.
Clothes make some men, but the guy who drapes der Bingle will tell you—pheasant feathers are an added attraction

BY MICKEY COHEN

IN more soignee circles I'd be known as Crosby's "couturier." Around the studio they refer to me more simply as a wardrobe man. No matter what they call me... in all modesty there's nobody better suited to get the measure of a man. After fifteen years of working around the clock with him, listening to his constant crooning, spending weary hours in consultation on sketches, scripts, or who's rated the best in the sixth at Santa Anita, Bing's measurements are well inked in my books to stay. His girth may vary, but his head and chest measure ever the same.

By way of teeing off on this... let's "flash back"...

Our association started out more or less on a pari-mutual basis. Winner take all. Nothing formal or fancy. Just one of those casual kind of get-togethers where you can go or stay... or raise if you have four of a kind.

That was in San Diego in 1928 when he was singing with the Rhythm Boys in the Paul Whiteman band, long before he Bingoed into his number one post position on the Hollywood Hit Parade. The band was doing a three-a-day at a theater in "Dago," and I dropped backstage for a visit.

After the last show, the boys began whooping it up over in their salon at the U. S. Grant Hotel with the lady who's known as luck. Bing is... often winner . . . a very seldom loser. But on this occasion his bland look hid an equally bland hand.

"Ah well . . . he who is caught bluffing must pay," he said philosophically, as he saw the last of his chips disappearing into our stacks.

"Just pencil this one in lightly, boys," he said. "No doubt we'll meet again anon, and we'll really ink it then."

If I'd known then what I know now . . . I still wouldn't have quit when I was ahead.

Three years later I ran into Bing again. He was getting ready to make his first Paramount picture, "The Big Broadcast of 1932," and I was working in the wardrobe department there. I'd been assigned to his picture and went over to the dressing room to discuss clothes with him. He did a delayed take. Then slowly it all came back to him. And so eventually did everything else. All he'd lost in those poker sessions—and more.

I showed him sketches and asked which he preferred. "Whatever you think I should wear is okay by me," he said.

It's always been that way with us. He never questions my judgment. Trusts me completely. Has the utmost faith. Also . . . it saves him bothering with them.

That was fifteen years ago—and I've worked on every Crosby picture since. You'll usually see most of the same faces in his crew anyway. Guys Bing's gotten used to working with, feels he can count on.

We all enjoy working with him too. There are a lot of laughs. Besides, he's the nearest we have to a buddy who can talk with horses, and there's still the scant chance that maybe someday one of them will talk back.

Though I don't want to get maudlin or sticky about this, as Crosby’s clothing consultant our association is even more closely cemented than the others. For one thing, both of us are color blind. It doesn’t startle me to see Bing arrive early in the mornings wearing a wild red shirt and a Panama hat with a breast-of-pheasant-feathers hat band. He really goes for those feathered hat bands that he orders from Hawaii in all color combinations, each of them carefully feathered by hand. He gave me one and I’m quite proud of it. I’ve never been sure exactly what to wear with it, but I take it out of the closet at intervals and brush the feathers to keep the pheasants in trim.

It would be unfair for me to take any credit for Crosby creations off screen. Certainly, they display a certain freshness, dash and some ad libbed color combinations that are original, to say the least. (Continued on page 127)
DEAR MISS COLBERT:

My parents died when I was three, so I was raised in a convent, then went to a college for women. The year I was graduated, I married a man I adored. During the five years we were married we lost three children. Aside from that we were the happiest people in the world. Last August, after a short, terrifying illness, my husband died.

After his death I was constantly ill. From the small town in which we had lived, I moved to a city and took an office job in a manufacturing company.

When my physical condition did not improve, I went to a doctor and learned that I was pregnant. Because of financial need, I worked until a month before my confinement. My twin daughters were born seven months after their father’s death.

As soon as I was well, I returned to work, leaving the children in the care of the wonderful woman I live with. I noticed almost immediately that the attitude toward me, within the organization, had changed. The girls were standoffish and aloof, whereas the men made it a point to chat with me on the slightest excuse. Finally I mentioned the strained situation to one of the girls and she told me that no one believes the story about my husband dying; the rumor is that my children are illegitimate!

I have my marriage certificate, of course, but it seems absurd to make a project of showing it to people. Can you think of a dignified way in which to combat this hideous thing?

Evelyn van S.

I marvel at a fact that may have slipped your attention because you are so close to your own situation. Do you realize that you have endured heartbreak, the burden of going through pregnancy alone and bereaved, have become the lucky mother of two children, and are now disturbed by nothing more than petty malice? Considering the burdens that you have endured with apparent fortitude, this minor problem should have slipped away from you like rain from a duck’s back.

In this organization you must have made at least one woman friend whom you trust. Why don’t you invite this girl to have dinner with you some night, have her meet your two daughters and the woman who is taking care of them and show her your guest some of your keepsakes? In the process it could be entirely possible for you to show her your marriage certificate. If it is possible, don’t discuss the fact that you feel that your status has been misunderstood.

Once you have taken this girl into your confidence, ignore all further gossip. This girl will undoubtedly discuss your evening together with other employees and gradually

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a man thirty-three years old. At present I am in a hospital with a respiratory condition, but I shall be released at an early date, able to return to active life.

I am in a dilemma. Please believe me when I say with deepest conviction that I am in love with a lady patient in this hospital. She is thirty-seven years of age, has been married but is now a widow, has three children, and is financially able to support herself and her children. This woman has confessed her love for me and her eagerness to marry me as soon as she, too, is discharged.

My question is: Should I marry her, considering that my financial standing is in the red? Is it true, as I have heard, that a woman resents a man who, even for a short time, must be dependent upon her financially? I would be able to assume full responsibility for the family within a year’s time.

George R.

It seems to me that there is great misunderstanding among men about the attitude of a woman in regard to financial responsibility. Where there is a good reason for a man’s being temporarily unable to assume the cost of his and his wife’s maintenance, such a situation is not resented. Bitterness develops only if a man fails to make an attempt to assume his obligations.

She's Engaged!

She's Lovely!

She uses Pond's!

The New "Blush-Cleansing" "Sandy" Morse uses for her complexion will give your skin, too

--- an instant sweet-clean look
--- an instant softer, smoother feel
--- and bring up a rose-blush of color

THIS IS HOW TO "BLUSH-CLEANSE" your face the same way "Sandy" does:

You rouse your skin by pressing a face cloth drenched in warm water against your face.

You "cream-cleanse" while your skin is receptively moist and warm. Spin your fingers full of snowy Pond's Cold Cream upward in circles, as if drawing engagement rings over your face and throat. Pond's demulcent action gently loosens dirt and make-up as your fingers swirl. Tissue off.

You "cream-rinse" with a second thick Pond's creaming. Spin 25 little Pond's Cold Cream engagement rings up over your face. Tissue off.

You tingle your clean, clean face with a good splash of cold water. Blot dry.

THAT'S ALL! "It's so extra nice," "Sandy" says, "and makes my face feel glowy clean and ever so soft."

Every night—give your face the complete, "Pond's Blush-Cleansing." Every morning—give it a once-over "Blush-Cleansing": a warm splash, quick rings with Pond's Cold Cream, tissue off, then a cold splash.

Dip your fingers deep into a big jar of Pond's tonight and morning—every day. Ask for a lovely 6-oz. size!

I do think that you should put aside your pride long enough to have a frank talk with the boy you hope to marry. You might draw up a personal financial statement and explain each detail to her. Tell her candidly that you are, as you have said in your letter, “in the red,” and give her a full explanation. Tell her that in a year’s time you will be solvent and try to perfect a budget for the interim that will represent the amount of money she will provide for your partnership.

It seems to me that if a marriage such as you contemplate could be entered upon as a partnership, the emotional equation set aside for a moment and a full financial agreement made with the partners, many possible causes for future conflicts would have been eliminated.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am fourteen and a sophomore in high school. We have a very nice sophomore class and I am lucky in belonging to a little group of twelve girls. I have wonderful parents and a pleasant home.

I’ve gone out with all the nice boys in the sophomore class and everything was wonderful until lately. There is a boy in the junior class who has given me that buzzy feeling ever since I first saw him. All the girls felt the same way, and we had lots of fun “swooning”—in the silly way girls have—over our dream dish.

You can imagine how I felt when he telephoned me one night and asked to talk to my mother. He said that he wanted to invite me to the school party Saturday night, but he wanted her permission first. She was sweet and said yes. That night I told him that, as long as I kept my graces up, I was allowed two dates a week, if Mother approved: Wednesday and Saturday. For three weeks I had two dates a week with him. Mother said that she thought I should accept other dates, but I couldn’t see it that way.

Then, one Saturday, he didn’t ask me, and I sat at home. Monday morning, my girl friends told me that my ex-boy friend was now rushing my best friend. You can imagine how I felt.

Could you give me some advice about how to manage these first romances that go away and hurt us?

Patti Lou T.

First of all, I am impelled to repeat to you the greatest of all true clichés, “Men are seldom right.” In your case, when your mother suggested that you accept other dates instead of devoting yourself—at fourteen—to one boy, she spoke from deep wisdom.

However, I understand your saying that you couldn’t see it her way.

I know that you are hurt, but I also know that the hurt will pass quickly. Frankly, I think it is good for a girl to learn early that there are some boys and men in the world who are unable to be interested in a girl for more than a few weeks. It is likely that he left some other girl flat when he started to rush you and dropped your successor with similar speed when he sees a new set of dimples across the auditorium.

Incidentally, if you are wise you won’t let the opinion spoilt your association with your girl friend. You should treat her exactly as you did before she began to date this boy, and after he leaves her for the next enticement, you should refrain from mentioning it to her or discussing it with the rest of your group.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

For five months I went with a fellow. We believed that we were in love and we got along together joyously—for one thing.

I refused to enter into an improper “affair” with him. I explained that, since I was deeply in love, I wanted to be decent and do the right thing, saving the marriage relationship for marriage.

Our arguments on this point were frequent and finally we quarreled bitterly. He said he could not understand me, that I was silly, and that I didn’t love him. Now he is about to marry the first girl he met (after we broke up).

Did someone say something about virtue’s reward? My clinging to the right, and knowing that I was right, isn’t any consolation at all. What can I think to stop myself from being so bitter over this ironic ending? Are there really exceptions to principles and standards? Was I being too idealistic?

I do need someone who can give me a sound, intelligent perspective with which to view the situation.

Madeleine C.

There are no exceptions to principles and standards. There are only people who make exceptions. If you could read the letters I receive each day, you would thank your parents from the bottom of your heart for having taught you to be rigidly realistic and steadfast in your ideals for marriage.

You describe yourself as “bitter.” How would you feel if you were to hear a child, the person you love, say, “the father denied?” That has happened to many girls who have written to me. A man who will try to persuade a girl to abandon her convictions isn’t worth a tear on a day. If this man had loved you, he would have been fiercely proud of your standards.

Continue to adhere to those standards, my dear, until a man who will appreciate them—and there are plenty who do—comes along.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Mother and I would like to know whether you think we should accept my brother’s wife. While he was away in service, she was rotten in every respect. She started stepping out before he left and had a child that wasn’t his. She is also on probation for some legal difficulty and has to write a letter once a month to a probation officer. She was about five hundred dollars in debt when my brother came back from overseas.

She told my brother all about her debts and about the child, but he is so much in love with her that he took her back, regardless. They now have a child of their own, so that may be one reason he is so wrapped up in her.

I can’t begin to tell you everything about this girl. She is too, too terrible. This is not a case of selfishness, as there is nothing I’d like better than to have my brother married to a decent girl.

Should we forbid her to come to our home? Should we explain to my brother how we feel and ask him to stay away, too, even though we love him dearly? Or must we simply pocket our pride and accept both of them?

Orna W. R.

The goodness and integrity of your sister-in-law are not the prime points for consideration in this domestic dilemma. Your brother’s decision is:

His wife is his choice. He has suffered

As long as he has decided to keep her as his wife, you should be making a serious mistake to close your home to her. He may be able to change her, but whether he is or not, your responsibility is to be loyal to him and to behave as if nothing had happened. Surely, if you must choose between “pride” and your brother’s happiness, the choice will not be difficult.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a boy of fourteen. My mother and father are always finding fault with everything I do. They fuss and they nag and they hound and they correct. Honestly, sometimes I feel like running away to my grandmother’s and staying there for a few days just to scare them into treating me like a human being.

I really try to please them, but nothing works. Please suggest some way to make my parents appreciate me.

Eldon B.

Fourteen is a difficult age, during which a human being is neither child nor adult. You will have to be patient with your parents . . . and with yourself.

First of all, there is no doubt that your parents love you dearly. In the second place, you might examine your own conduct. If I were there, and if I pointed out some of the things you do of which I don’t approve, you and I would probably laugh about it. Most boys of fourteen need a lot of correction.

It isn’t the intentionally disobedient acts that cause the most trouble around the house, I imagine, because most boys and girls of fourteen don’t mean to offend. It’s the absent-minded, careless behavior that brings a series of parental reproofs. Then, when you try to make up for your mistakes by doing something to please the family, they are probably in such a bad humor that your overtures go unrewarded.

If you ran away to your grandmother, you would find that—after two or three days—she would find as much fault as your parents did, so you might as well save yourself the trouble. And, just as a novelty, why not try to do everything your parents ask, even if the shock turns them white-haired!

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am forty-two, married, and the mother of three children ranging in age from twelve down to six. My husband is one of the professors at a nearby college.

Since our home is large and the housing problem has been critical, we took a paying guest, a veteran of twenty-three.

My husband is very active in faculty organizations, has written several books and takes an interest in the affairs of a nearby town, so he is away much of the time. In addition to this he is an austere man, far too busy for sentiment, and far too cool of blood to be devoted.

Bradley, our veteran, has spent a great deal of time with me. Since he saw bitter fighting and much anguish, he is aged beyond his years. At first he dated some of the college girls, bringing them to the house for hot chocolate and cookies, on occasion, but finally he gave this up. He said that these girls are too immature and superficial for his taste.

We have fallen in love with one another. Bradley has asked me to divorce my husband, marry him and move to the southwest where Bradley can continue his courses. There would be no question of finances as I have a little income from my parents’ estate and he, too, has additional income to his G1 Bill of Rights subsistence.

From your knowledge of human relations, do you think such a union, considering the attendant problems, would have any possibility of success?

(Mrs.) Ann M. M.

In considering your problem, I am immediately setting aside all comment on the fact that in doing what you suggest would have broken your husband’s heart and created great emotional problems for your three children. Those are things about which you must have thought gravely before writing to me.

I am not censuring you in any way. These things happen sometimes without a woman’s being conscious of their development and certainly without her volition.

Since you have three children and since you are probably a highly maternal person, one of the explanations of your affection for this veteran of twenty-three is your superbi instinct of motherhood. And, conversely, one of your attractions for him is that you supply his yearning for a mother. He has been through a difficult experience. In recovering, which he is now doing, it is only natural for him to turn to someone who gives him the sense of security and care given by a mother.

Were you to give in to this attraction and try to make a marriage of it, you would be ruining your own life. In my own profession I have seen examples of a mature woman marrying a much younger man. An actress has every artifice at her disposal; it is a professional necessity for her to retain her youth and vitality; so that it is easy for her to look ten or fifteen years younger than her age. Yet, almost without exception, such marriages end in misery.

The solution lies in his suggestion that he go to the southwest to finish his educ-

Who Will Be Your Favorites for 1946?

The five top men, listed alphabetically, are: Gary Cooper, Bing Crosby, Clark Gable, Van Johnson, Spencer Tracy. And, again, not far behind are: Humphrey Bogart, Cary Grant, Bob Hope, Alan Ladd, Walter Pidgeon.

Bing Crosby, two-time winner, is high again this year. However, the current list of five top men differs from last year's list with Bob Hope and Cary Grant giving way to Clark Gable and Van Johnson. That Clark Gable should be up there is surprising. For he has made only one film, "Adventure," since his return to civilian life.

Van Johnson's standing, however, is completely understandable. It corroborates the findings of the two previous ARI polls taken for Photoplay. In 1944 we reported that Van had made greater gains in popularity than any other male star. In 1945 his name just missed being included among the top five.

In the second group of men we come to Alan Ladd and Walter Pidgeon, neither of whom was in the running last year. Alan, of course, had been back on the screen only a short time from the Army. Now, with several pictures behind him, he has re-established the strength he showed before he left to serve for Uncle Sam. Walter Pidgeon, however, has been building steadily and this year, "Weekend at the Waldorf" has done a great deal for him.

The stars who have made the greatest gains in popularity during the last six months are: June Allyson, Jennifer Jones, Gregory Peck, Cornelia Wilde.

June Allyson has had the advantage of many releases such as "The Sailor Takes a Wife" and "Two Sisters from Boston" following in quick succession.

Jennifer Jones actually shows this great gain in popularity for a second time. She qualified for this honor, too, in 1944. Her new pictures, however, were many months in production, so for some time she was without new releases. It took only "Love Letters" and "Chu Y Brown," however, to find her moving ahead rapidly again.

Gregory Peck, a star of last year's winning picture, "The Valley of Decision," and the male star showing top gains in popularity last year, now rates higher than ever as a result of "Spellbound."

Cornelia Wilde began making strides when she played Chopin in "A Song to Remember," the picture which ranked fourth in last year's poll. Since then, "Leave Her to Heaven" and "The Bandit of Sherwood Forest" have accelerated her popular appeal.

During months of polling that lie ahead, the movie-goers of America again will decide the favorite picture and stars of 1946. It may be that the final sum-up will present stars and pictures, that are not even contenders at this time, as the winners.

In the meantime, we of the Audience Research, the editors of Photoplay and all Hollywood are awaiting your final choice.

The END.

That Dream Girl Jones

(Continued from page 46) who never disappoints you though you sometimes have to work overtime not to disappoint her. For Jennifer puts those whom she likes on pedestals. And perches can be uncomfortable when that of the wide margin she leaves you for error.

I've never heard her make a derogatory remark about anyone. And I've heard her say about any defending people she doesn't even know against remarks others have made. Gossip is a dead language with her.

She has an insatiable curiosity about any subject she's interested in and wants to learn about it. For Jennifer she is quite willing for you to learn everything about it. "It's more fun that way," she says.

When Jennifer was eager to improve her French. She talked about it for days. "All right," I agreed, "I'll go with you, but I really don't need them. I've had eight years of French, All I'll need will be a refresher course."

She said casually that she'd had a "little"
French in school.

Then when we go to the studio of Gossip, Jennifer improved her French in one day. For our first lesson, she was parlez-vous-ouring all over the place, while I just sat there dazedly trying to catch a familiar word or two. My eight years of le frangais were as nothing, but when the lessons were over, she'd lived all her life on the Rue de la Paix.

"Never mind," she said, "you must need a refresher course."

And another subject that has challenged her interest. Though her complexion needs no improvement, she's always experimenting with beauty preparations, and when she loaned me her apartment while I was touring the states exploiting "Duel in the Sun."

I came home to beauty creams, cologne, perfumes, bath salts and a new kind of facial worde, not to mention a huge shiny contraption which looked like a school playground slide, and which I still haven't figured out how to use.

"When's the next show," I asked her one night in Texas where her boys, Bobby and Michael, had gone on a visit with their grandmother.

She phoned me. "I loved living in your apartment!"

"You did," I answered. "You must have packed a hurry. Did you take anything with you? You left quite a few things.

"I don't want any of it. You can keep everything," she laughed.

"They won't do any good without the combination. What do you do with the cornflakes?"

"Put them on your face. They're wonderful!"

"And the mechanical contraption overflowing the guest room . . . that looks slightly like a roller coaster. What do you do with that?"

"Oh—that I got it at the May Company," she went on.

"But what is it?" I asked.

"I put one of those exercise boards . . . only I don't use it that way. I rest my head at the bottom and catch my feet up in the strap at the top. You know . . . the way we do with an ironing board. Only this one is reversible."

She was referring to a beauty routine we'd tried out—the "model" stance: i.e. propping the ironing board up against the living-room divan and stretching out on it with your head on the rug, letting the blood rush to the foot of the ironing board . . . or something. Jennifer had improved on it while I was gone.

"Of course, your circulation!" she said, still selling me.

"You mean it takes the place of Lady Mendel's theory of standing on your head?"

"Something like that," she laughed.

"Shall I send you a blueprint?"

"No thanks," I said. "If there's anything I don't understand for standing on my head. I've been doing that for a long time now."

Regardless of her own fame, she still has a touch of the mechanical about her. She genuinely likes people—all people—and would far rather talk about them than about herself. As Jay Carmody, dramatic critic for the Washington Star, discovered when he was at Carnegie Hall, D. C., on a bond tour and he was interviewing Jennifer—he thought.

"I read your column this morning and I was highly interested in your criticism of the picture," she said. "Especially your analysis of the characterizations. You must have had some experience in the theater."

He remarked that he'd "experienced" her last fall and thought she'd done a very analytical job.

"Have you made a study of psychology?"

"I went on. That would be good for new work, wouldn't it?"

He said he guessed so. What about her next role?

"I portray a half-breed Indian," she said.

"Do you know anything about them?"

"I did a bit of reading about them. She'd lived all her life on the Rue de la Paix.

"I think newspaper work must be very interesting," she went on, genuinely impressed. "How long have you been doing it?"

"What are the pressures?"

"Would you like to take a look around?"

She said resignedly.

"Oh yes! Could we?"

"When we'd completed a Cook's Tour of the set, Jennifer thanked her for being so kind. "Thank you, Miss Jones," he laughed, "for the best interview I've never had."

A N Y trip with Jennifer turns out to be fun—no matter how hectic the travel conditions may be. And "hectic" is a gentle word for one return trip we made, after Jennifer returned from her trip to Hollywood that night I think newspaper work must be very interesting," she went on, genuinely impressed. We were coming back in my car and I was driving, a combination that has great suicidal possibilities. Mine is one of those photicgenic jobs that often doesn't run.

Our car had run out of gas, and as we came to the Los Angeles city limits I was doing, a combination that has great suicidal possibilities. Mine is one of those photogenic jobs that often doesn't run.

On the way back to Hollywood, Jennifer was talking about her trip. We had discovered that we were going to Hollywood on the same trip, and she invited us to her home to get some cheese. She said, "Aren't you hungry?"

"I am," she replied.

"Which was no particular surprise. Jennifer is always hungry. When she's working at the studio you'll find her eating an early morning snack of apples and bananas at 9:00 and snacking on hamburgers again at 11:30. Then she'll have a turkey sandwich near the hospital. A beaten-up structure . . . too far gone for DDT."

"We'll better watch what we order," I remarked.

"They're only thirty-four people," she replied.

We studied the menu carefully. There was only one item we could afford. We couldn't even have the Hamburger Deluxe. We had to settle for the Hamburger Deluxe. They're ten cents cheaper," I said.

While we ate them we kept torturing ourselves remembering money we'd spent in the past. "Remember the time you spent several dollars for a fancy hamburger?"

"They're ten cents cheaper," I said.

A Setting for Compliments

Company coming? No, just the family! That lustrous, lintless napery is for them, and they'll love it! And you'll love their praise, for making the family table so pretty and inviting. There's no trick at all to it—if you use Limit, That's the smooth, penetrating starch that works magic. Actually makes cotton look and feel luxurious as linen. You're not letting yourself in for fuss, either! Quite the contrary. By restoring the original finish, Limit actually resists mousing and soiling. Try it, too, for starching dresses, shirts, curtains, sheets and dozens of things around the house.

Sunny says: Your iron flies—with Limit! Follow the simple package directions—and watch all cotton things take on the look and feel of real linen.

... adds the "finishing touch".
Whatever you do ... be chic!

OLIVIA deHAVILLAND She's 5' 4" tall, weighs 107 pounds and has brown eyes and hair. She's partial to cross-word puzzles, chrysanthemums, the color blue and cold French lamb chops dipped in salt. She dislikes snakes, parsnips, cooking, cigarette smoke and elevators. She looks charmingly Victorian. But she is as modern as tomorrow.

Perfect for fun all year 'round—this three-piece outfit by Koret of California. All color combinations. Jacket $15.00. Blouse $5.00. Pants $6.95. Sizes 12-18 at Sanger Bros., Dallas, Tex., The Hub, Baltimore, Md.
Wonderful news—a broad-shouldered jumper that can be worn without a blouse too! Of Berlinger rayon. By Peggy Paige, in sizes 9-15. About $6.00 at Lansburgh’s, Washington, D. C., and Gimbels, New York, N. Y.

PAULETTE GODDARD, born in a New York suburb, spent her early life as plain, everyday Pauline. Then, as now, however, there was nothing plain or everydayish about her! Paulette, currently appearing in United Artists' "The Diary of a Chambermaid," has just signed a seven-year contract with Paramount. Also, next spring she will make a picture in England for Alexander Korda.

In the past few weeks we've seen Joan Crawford in at least six divine outfits. At the cocktail party she gave for Viveca Lindfors she wore the new ballet-skirt-length dress, black with a tight bodice and low neck and tiny sleeves. The skirt was the fullest and most dramatic one we've seen in years; reams of black net over a black taffeta underskirt. Caught on the underskirt, here and there, were enormous dark red roses. This dark red, peeping through the net, was the only color in the costume. Joan wore her hair down, medium-length, and full around the face. High-heeled black patent leather sandals with wide ankle straps accentuated her famous dancing feet.

And you should have seen Joan at the Mike Todd party! In a room full of glamour—passes she was outstanding in a very decollete gown of chartreuse crepe. Bare over one shoulder, the bodice had almost no back. It was draped up the front with one side of the dress crossing over to her right shoulder where it ended—or rather almost never ended—by falling into a long scarf which hung almost to the floor. The skirt was cut circular and enormously full. On the scarf, just below the shoulder line in back and again at the bottom, were dead white blossoms. Add to this matching chartreuse sandals—a terrific sunburn—a soft hair-do—and you have Crawford.

At Joan's party for Viveca Lindfors Claudette Colbert wore a very chic black silk faille suit with a tailored short coat and a pencil-slim skirt with a tiny slit in front. Lots of white frilly organdy billowed out from the neck of her coat which buttoned high. She wore a huge stiff-brimmed black straw sailor hat on the back of her head. White gauntlet length cotton gloves, black patent pumps and an enormous black patent pouch bag.

Betty Hutton wore a wonderful dress the other summer evening. It was of white pique with an off-the-shoulder neckline. The lower part of the very full gathered skirt was hand-painted with chartreuse and yellow tiger lilies. And around the hemline were narrow bands of chartreuse and yellow pique to match the flowers. With this dress Betty wore white, thonged sandals and a stole of the flowered pique. This dress could be copied in many variations by having the flowers appliqued.

Joan Bennett has a high-necked, tiny-sleeved black silk jersey sheath, over which she ties skirts of multicolored prints. When she wants to be really dressy she ties on a full overskirt of black net that has been stiffened. This stands away from the sheath and makes a lovely silhouette. Another overskirt is of palest pink silk splattered with huge black cabbage roses...Joan wears tiny black straw bonnet-type hats with the several outfits this one dress achieves and sometimes puts flowers on a bonnet to match the print of the overskirt.

Gene Tierney, lunching at La Rue, wore a stunning rich cream-colored silk shantung suit with big disc buttons down the front then across the shoulder seams. And under the long-sleeved, softly-tailored jacket was a bright gold silk gilet. Her big kid shoulder-strap bag was gold kid. Her gloves and shoes were dark brown. And she wore no hat.

When leaves come tumbling down Luna—in a suit of warm honey beige, with sable and jewels—illustrates the perfect way to look as you step into fall.

cutest little trick is VICK-I LYNN

Vicki Lynn

Evenings at home" make a knee-length striped satin coat, tightly belted, and with your slacks under-neath you'll look as tempting as any barem dish.

To turn last year's evening dress into this year's, snip it to ten inches off the floor in front and graduate the line until the hem is floor length in back. With this wear your prettiest newest slippers, please.

Team your black short-sleeved sweater with a cocktail length black satin skirt and a big crushed satin belt of a bright color. This is strictly for dress up but you can wear such a sweater with plaid skirts and leather belts, slacks, suits, and just about anything else you can think of. Your sweater, in fact, can be the most used item in your wardrobe.

Braid felt flowers in your pigtails when you plait your hair; then wind the braids around your ear. And to be doubly effective, match the flowers in your hair with those on the toes of your dancing slippers.

When you make a full easy-swinging woolen skirt this fall be sure you get enough material for a matching stole. Wear the stole "hood effect" for outdoors and around your shoulders at other times of the day.

This will look so new and exciting on a plain felt bowler hat. — Buy a yard of light-weight silk (either patterned or plain) and cut the length in half. Sew the ends together, drape it around the crown of the hat, and let the ends hang down in back.

COMMUNITY GIVING IS COMMUNITY LIVING

USO and the Community Chests of America appeal to you for funds

To help the citizen at home—
The citizen away from home

The USO discharges your community responsibilities to the citizen away from home—your men and women who are still in the armed forces. With your help, vitally needed clubs for new inductees, men awaiting discharge and their families, the convalescent war wounded, can be continued. USO-Camp Shows are still important entertainment for wounded men in hospitals.

For the citizen at home money is needed by Community Chest Red Feather services for hospital, clinic and nursing aid for the sick, care of dependent and neglected children, home for the aged, etc.

When citizens of all classes, all races, all religions unite in giving, either to the USO or the Community Chests of America, the whole community benefits in the interests of everybody's health, welfare and happiness.

LET US BE GENEROUS to the men and women who must continue in uniform—to the citizens here at home who need our help. Support the USO and your local Community Chests.
DRESS FOR THE MEN IN YOUR LIFE

"CAMPUS DEB"... Carole King takes a vibrant plaid of Wool and Rayon Trepaca, hugs your wee waist with a magnetic midriff and saucily binds, then bows, the hi round neck with Wool and Rayon Kasha Weave. Junior sizes 7 to 13. About $11. Exclusively at one fine store in your city.
THIS IS, INDEED.

NYLON HOsiERY "AS YOU LIKE IT"! A day-time delight, a date-time necessity, these lovely stockings lead a double life! They're gossamer sheer and amazingly serviceable, with a knit that makes for perfect fit. Hosiery
"As You Like It" is full-fashioned, of course, and delightfully clear-textured.
You'll be wise to ask for it by name at your favorite hosiery counter.

Put a large velvet collar on a simple bright wool dress for extra special occasions. Black shortie gloves and black suede shoes will complete the picture.

Watch for the smart-looking barrel skirts in dresses and suits. You might think these will do nothing for slimming but the full look they afford around the hips tends to whittle inches off your waistline.

Crocheted wool gloves, usually seen in the shortie length, can now be had in the nine inch length—and in the brightest colors! Match these gloves with colored wool stockings for the first fall days in the country.

Put lace bows on your quilted satin slippers. And even if you're not a bride you'll feel and look like one!!

If you are changing the buttons on a suit or dress, make a wide belt of grosgrain ribbon and sew matching buttons on the belt—about three inches apart if they're big important ones. Fasten the belt with another button and a regular buttonhole.

If you like off-the-shoulder fashions (and who doesn't) there is a wonderful strapless bra you can buy that actually stays in place, regardless of activity. This bra can be worn under anything strapless—be it bathing suit or evening dress.

... And it is especially good for low-necked peasant blouses.

The Miracle Girdle with the Magic Inset

Here is one of the greatest girdle miracles of the century—an amazing—revolutionary construction that every woman has dreamed of, yet has never enjoyed until now—but at last "Perma-lift"* accomplishes the almost unbelievable.

"Perma-lift" has created a new—thrilling—youthful—lightweight girdle with all the advantages of boning—but With No Bones—all the restraint and control of boning—but With No Bones. A "Perma-lift" Girdle won't wrinkle, won't roll over, absolutely banishes the annoying discomfort that boning, even in the lightest garment, has caused you— withstands countless washings and wear.

Jane Wyman, next to be seen in "Night and Day"

A prisoner's hidden plea...

A star's way of granting it

NO matter how many stars glitter across the screens, Jane Wyman will always be the favorite of Ethan Campbell, civilian ... and he'll remember back to that time when he was Ethan Campbell, Ser-gate—one of the few survivors of the infamous death march of Batan.

He was taken with the rest of his buddies to a prison camp. Time stretched ahead, an endless nightmare that might mean death rather than freedom. He was starving, alone, longing for his mother and his sweetheart, Mary Kathryn Mc-Campbell, longing for word from them.

For eighteen months he filled out the permitted monthly form postal card home.

There was no response. Finally he and his fellow prisoners were convinced the Japs weren't sending their cards through.

He could almost see his mother going to the mailbox—and disappointment. He could see tears well up in Mary Kathryn's eyes—and there was nothing he could do.

Nothing, that is, until one of the boys thought of addressing their cards to movie stars and giving, in the few words they were allowed, the names and addresses of their families.

Ethan chose Jane Wyman because she was his favorite and because she came from his home town, St. Joseph, Missouri.

He knew the Japs pretty well, how they were familiar with famous names, with the magie word, Hollywood. He knew it was a slim chance, but he was desperate.

He thought a long time, then wrote:
"Give my regards to my mother, Mrs.
Goldie Campbell, 1719 Calhoun Street, St.
Joseph, Missouri." If only Jane would catch on—that was his urgent prayer.

And then he waited... It was a great day for Sergeant Campbell, that day in October, 1944—a great day because of the letter camp. He read it over and over. It was his first letter since the hell of imprisonment. Simply, his mother told him about Jane Wyman, about the note she had written enclosing his card, about Jane's message: "Don't lose courage, as he will need you when he is free again. And remember, God is with him wherever he is."

And so a soldier, sick with worry, almost without hope, gained courage to hold on until victory—and his release.

Back home he went—to his mother and to Mary Kathryn—to the long months of gaining back his strength, of putting on weight, of getting a new grasp on life.

Now that he's well, Ethan, his bride and his mother would like to meet Jane Wyman, would like to shake her hand and say from their hearts, "Thank you, Janet!

Platter Patter

Melody collection of the songs you want to play back—from your favorite motion pictures

TO EACH HIS OWN: The heart-tugging pathos so warmly portrayed by Olivia de Havilland in this fine Paramount drama is beautifully expressed in the film's theme song just recorded by Eddy Howard, a top-notch tenor (Majestic).

BORDERTOWN TRAILS: Once again it's a western that, surprisingly enough, possesses an infectious melody, "It's My Lazy Day." Hear the virile-voiced Vaughn Monroe make merry with this Republic film tune (Victor).

THREE LITTLE GIRLS IN BLUE: Another 20th Century-Fox musical that will be well represented on the bandstands and juke boxes. Victor's top distaff side discovery, Betty Rhoads, a movie performer herself, spins "This Is Always" and "Somewhere in the Night."

EARL CARROLL'S SKETCH BOOK: Republic has come through with another screen glorification of one of Hollywood's cavernous cafes and commissioned that prolific pair, Styne and Cahn, to write a hit song. Their latest handiwork is "I've Never Forgotten" and Jo Stafford (Capitol) and Jack Smith (Majestic) are among the first to record it.

FAITHFUL IN MY FASHION: Nostalgia is one of Hollywood's surest formulas. M-G-M prescribed it in a musical dose for their latest, and resurrected a time-worn but still beautiful ballad, "I Don't Know Why." Here's a partial list of recording artists who have just grooved it: Tommy Dorsey (Victor), Hoagy Carmichael (ARA), George Auld (Musicalraft), Larry Clinton (Cosmo), Tony Martin (Mercury), Frank Sinatra (Columbia), and King Cole Trio (Capitol).

HOLIDAY IN MEXICO: "You, So It's You" is the repetitive melody from this south-of-the-border cinema spectacle and the lovely, heroic Jane Froman selects it for her first recording in a long time (Majestic).

FROM THIS DAY FORWARD: Frank Sinatra adds to his distinguished disk repertory with a sensitive interpretation of the title song from this RKO love story. Axel Stordahl's orchestra (Columbia) provides a creditable background.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: Bach's majestic Brandenburg Concertos, No. 3 in G, No. 4 in G, as performed by the Boston Symphony under the authoritative baton of Serge Koussevitzky (Victor) is a musical treasure ... An album of exotic music, pairing "Poinciana," "Flamingo," "Lotus Land" and "Song of India" is Andre Kostelanetz's Columbia candidate, bringing its listeners a desire for far away romantic places ... In the same vein is Ibert's Escales or Ports of Call, inspired by a Mediterranean cruise. The expert New York Philharmonic, conducted by Artur Rodzinski, make it all shipshape (Columbia) ... Bucolic Americana is the pattern for Elie Siegmaster's spirited "Ozark Set" and Dmitri Mitropoulos's Minneapolis Symphony (Columbia) catch the flavor ... The Mozart Concerto No. 5 in A Major is exquisitely played by violinist Adolf Busch and his Chamber Players for another Columbia Masterworks album. All of these albums reach new heights in true reproductions.
The Bouncing Ball

(Continued from page 61) And well aware of it on that night was Lucille's bodyguard—which included husband Desi Arnaz. Mechanically they noted the nearest exit and mapped a line of retreat as the house lights dimmed and the picture began. Lucille nervously ran a hand through her hair as the flamboyant Gladys Borton came on the screen. Mr. Arnaz and the other members of her bodyguard exchanged understanding glances; they felt the tension, too. And then a giggle ran through the theater, chased by a chuckle and followed by a guffaw. Gladys was doing fine—with everyone except Lucille. She kept running her hand through her hair, pushing it back, and back, and back.

"Take it easy," Desi whispered once or twice, extending a restraining arm. "They like our." He was brushed off, literally. Lucille kept biting her lips, tugging at her hair.

There was no vengeful mob waiting to get at her in the lobby when the picture had raced to its howling climax. The kids were grinning, and a bit respectful. Lucille had been the other woman, but she was a good sport and a good loser—and funny as the dickens. They asked for autographs and grinned at her hair-do.

"It was that darned hairdresser!" she explained. "I had no idea when we were making the picture that my bangs were so low. So all through the preview, I just naturally kept pushing my bangs back. And out there in the lobby they were so far back it looked like an off-the-face hat!"

The Bouncing Ball was probably exaggerating. No one could possibly mistake that pink-gold thatch of hers for a hat. But it's no exaggeration to say that "Easy to Wed" is her best picture to date and a shiny red apple for a girl who has been handed more than her share of lemons in her twelve years in Hollywood.

IFE started bouncing Little Lulu against its brick walls from the time she was a red-headed fifteen-year-old in Celoron, New York, a tiny resort town on the shores of Lake Chautaqua. Stage struck from the start, Lucille had prevailed on her widowed mother to enroll her in John Murray Anderson's dramatic school in New York.

"Previous experience?" asked the admission director.

"School plays and summer stock," said Lucille, fingers crossed behind her back.

"Say 'horses and water'" ordered the diction coach.

"Horr-ses and watt-er," said Lucille in the flat accents of upstate New York. The coach shuddered and for the next six months her nickname was "Miss Horr-ses and Watt-er."

They tried her on comedy, ("I had no animation.") They tried her on tragedy, ("I was completely stunned.") They tried her on love scenes, ("I was very shy.") They sent her to a class in ballet, ("I couldn't stand on two feet, no less one toe.") They bit their nails and started her on eccentric dancing, ("I thought I was pretty good until they put me in a room lined with mirrors. I got one look at those big feet and skinny legs, ran out of the room and cried my eyes out.")

After three terms of this all parties agreed to call it quits. There followed troubled times when Lucille tried to be a chorus girl, failed, and turned to modeling, winding up as Hattie Carnegie's pride and joy. Then came the skidding car in Central Park, the smash-up, the blanket of oblivion from which she slowly emerged a paralytic.

So the Bouncing Ball began practicing the mannequin's glide with a cane in each hand to steady her. Lucille never has forgotten her debt to Hattie, still marvels at the modiste's kindness to her. "I guess it was because I was always the dumbest of her girls, knew least, had to be helped more," she says.

And then there came that hot July day in Manhattan, soon after she had gone back to work, when a friend told her they were looking for one more Goldwyn Girl to round out the dozen they were sending to Hollywood for the Eddie Cantor musical, "Roman Scandals."

"But I'm no show girl!" Lucille said.

"You could use some sunshine," the friend countered. "Besides, Hollywood won't know the difference!"

And Hollywood didn't, nor does it yet. Give the average producer a script with a part in it for a show-girl type and he automatically begins thinking of Lucille Ball. You can't blame him either, for on screen or off the Bouncing Ball is a show girl to the life—except that she may be a little whackier.

Like ninety-nine out of a hundred show girls, she looks dumb—and isn't. She tries to be hard-boiled, yet gurgles over babies, puppies and kittens. She knows all the angles and is a push-over for anyone with a hard-luck story. She can stand at the top of a night-club stairway and rivet every masculine eye in the place (and pretend not to know it), but she has more fun next morning wearing a pair of blue jeans trowelling fertilizer around a rose bush.

Show girls, when they're not dreaming of Park Avenue penthouses, like to picture themselves in the doorway of a rose-covered cottage tossing popcorn (or whatever it is) at a herd of chickens. Lucille has her five-acre ranch in Chatsworth with a rose-papered living room, fluffy white curtains and a small flock of chickens who die of old age. Or because a weasel gets into the coop. Lucille refers to the weasel as "a dirty old thing" but, since she hasn't the heart to kill off any of her flock, it probably is just as well that the weasel is around to keep the population down.

She had a cow for a while, had raised it from a calf and couldn't understand why it suddenly began acting so strangely. Her handy man sheepishly informed her that the Duchess had reached the age when—well, when it ought to be introduced to the nice, gentlemanly bull who was living a mile down the road.

"But she's just a baby!" wailed Lucille and later, with trembling lips, stood leaning over the fence rail as the Duchess philosophically—or was it eagerly?—waddled down the lane to keep her date with destiny. Lucille went to visit the Duchess some time later, but she didn't like the change that had come over her. Something about the gleam in her eye. The Duchess never was invited back.

Show girls have a sense of humor, too. Captain Ken Morgan, husband of Lucille's kid sister, Clio (she's a cousin, actually, but the two were raised together and consider themselves sisters), became one of the most popular men in his outfit overseas because he would read aloud Lucille's twelve-page letters retelling all the Hollywood gossip and family news with footnotes that not even the chuckling censors had the heart to delete. She also sent him a pin-up to end all pin-ups: A shot of herself at her swimming pool wearing a 1988-model bathing suit with black cotton stockings and (Continued on page 98)

Then—still in keeping with successful show-girl tradition—there's her maid, Harriet, a small-scale Hattie McDaniel who has been part of the Ball menage for the last eight years. When Lucille and Desi were married, Harriet went along on the honeymoon and referred to him as "our husband." The porter had warned Mr. and Mrs. Desiderio Alberto Arnaz de Acha III to have their shoes outside their drawing-room door by midnight if they expected to find them shined the next morning. It is quite possible—honeymoons being what they are—that the couple might have forgotten all about it had there not come a loud knocking on the door and a hearty voice crying:

"Cinderella, get out of those shoes! It's gettin' near to midnight!"

Harriet remembers everything.

Perhaps it is only in her marriage that the Bouncing Ball doesn't suggest the show girl. And this is a laugh on Hollywood which winked knowingly when the zany redhead ran off with the volatile Cuban. "Boy!" said the town. "Will those temperaments clash?" Strangely enough, they seem to have meshed. Lucille's best friends remark enviously that she's simply "maa-aad" about Desi, and Desi's best friends repeat that he's just as "maa-aad" about Luci.

It must be love when a gal exchanges a swimming pool, a comfortable house and California's climate for a small apartment in a New York hotel during the hottest months of the summer. That is exactly what Lucille did when she elected to be with Desi this summer when his band was booked into the Copacabana and the Paramount. Of course, she won't exactly be roughing it. That would be too much to expect of Hollywood's foremost show girl.

She spent the week before she left on a shopping tour. Let's see now. There were three fox stoles, one white, one platina and one dyed periwinkle blue. There were twenty-five (count 'em—twenty-five) John Frederics hats, minimum price $49 apiece. There were six basic outfits, three black and three in colors. There were the gowns Travis Banton had designed for her in "Lover Come Back" and which she managed to buy from Universal after the picture was made. (Report was that the Banton wardrobe had been budgeted at $75,000, but she didn't have to pay that, naturally.) Anyway, these—plus some old rags she happened to have at home—required one trunk, five bags and seventeen hat boxes. And, in case she ran short, there was Hattie Carnegie's—a sure stop on the Ball shopping itinerary.

Lucille was happily describing her New York wardrobe to some palpating pals at the studio when a bystander cruelly suggested that she seemed to have overlooked the most important item, the one item without which no show girl can be happy.

"What," he asked, "about a mink coat?"

Little Lulu batted her blue eyes and looked demurely at the carpet.

"Oh I couldn't wear a mink," she said.

"Not unless my husband bought it for me. I made up my mind about that long ago. And, naturally, with Desi in the Army for three years—well, you can't buy mink coats on a sergeant's pay."

They agreed that was unfortunately true.

"But now," she resumed confidentially, "with Desi back in pictures and doing so well with his band, well ..." and she smiled serenely at her smiling friends.

Careful, Desi! The Ball is getting ready to put the bite on you!

THOUGH this is the kind of success that thins your hair, raises your ego, loses your friends and often changes your wife, it is unlikely to do any of the advertised things to the Yorkshire boy who has become Britain’s No. 1 pin-up boy.

Mason’s wife puts a finger on his great appeal. “It’s because he is a sadist. Women like sadists, especially after a war. I think it’s because they want to fight and then, after the revolting conditions of war, the food and so on. And he’s no sissy.”

And it is no coincidence that he goes for brutal parts. There’s something in his nature that makes him troubled and sadistic. “I know I’m bloody-minded and people think I’m peculiar.” He honestly thinks he dislikes the people he works with and he’s never satisfied with a film. He only does it to get paid. Mason is an artist. “It’s for their own good,” he says. “I am cruel to be kind.”

Yet Pamela shows no signs of having been beaten either actually or verbally. She wields great weight in the Mason menage. It was she who saw to it, in 1940, that he get over the heart trouble which is an occupational disease with artists who find the world frozen by cold and blinding heat.

Once one week’s salary, it was over. Pamela used to go to the savoy Hotel and write him letters to make him smile. Then she would return to Mason. Mason was a good sport and always paid when he would get his contract. Pamela then went on to work on the stage.

Pamela’s ambition was to become a star. She had been working as a two-year-old in a small town and was determined to make it big in Hollywood. She started with small parts in silent films and soon became a regular in the pictures. She was married to Mason in 1928.

One of the things Pamela did was to have a picture taken of the Masons, which she later used as a publicity shot. She also used it to promote the Masons’ new movie, “The Seventh Veil.”

They have collected a vast stock of things that clutter up a marriage and the personal record of the Mason’s life is in two large scrapbooks—picture postcards of Grete Green, colored pictures of cats, the more exciting of his fan letters, recipes for drinks, advertisements—cut out from magazines and anything else that happens to take his fancy.

An example of Pamela’s acting the gouverness—but a sophisticated one—was the affair of the fish poisoning.

The Masons had played hookey from the studio after being kept waiting a couple of days hanging about doing nothing and then had an impression made of their faces, and put in a box with the theme song: “Where’s Mason?” Pamela quickly replied, “He’s ill. I think he’s got the measles.”

Well, what’s an actor for? Mason looked uncomfortable as he got into bed. Pamela gave him a drink to raise his temperature and beat over his body with a hairbrush to produce a convulsing effect of the juices. Mason’s doctor arrived: he looked at the Masons and gave his verdict: “You’re right about the measles. It’s fish poisoning.”

And the Masons, laughing uproariously, had a strictly-kept holiday! It’s the way they like it, listening to the radio, reading scripts, talking. As James says, “We come to London only when we have to. Pamela doesn’t seem to like to go dancing with other girls.” In other words, they don’t like a flock of people.

Mason is always himself and he has his own idea of things. It was he who chose the character in “The Seventh Veil.”

Ann Todd was going to run past her lovers and into a close-up with the man who had crippled her hands. Mason said no; so we were given the one of him running away to where he limped into the background. His feeling about clothes—his own—is disinterested. A typical Mason ensemble is a brown suit, a white shirt with stiff cuffs, a floppy collar, a pair of glasses that almost fall over cheap shoes and cuff-links as large as half-crowns. “I looted them in Germany,” he explains.

The artist in Mason makes him a perfectionist. He will not produce with his wife and there will be a lot of intelligence in the finished product. “I have not forgotten the days when the dog road company was in town and the producer could see through that inefficiency,” he says. “And I will never forget that day when there was to be a lot of shooting in the play and the prop man ran out of blank carbide. We all shouted ‘Bang!’”

He is now making “Odd Man Out” and when it is finished he and Pamela will head Hollywood way for the business of Masons and artistic slugs at American screen beauties! Which will really be something, for already Hollywood is talking excitedly about him and already Americans are looking wistfully his way—waiting this one-man invasion from Britain.

From Lana’s shoulders hung a long, white fox cape with clusters of tremendous white orchids spilling down one shoulder. Her white, white hair was swirled and swept up off the shoulders, and twisted through her tresses were the tiniest white reindeer. Underneath the coat she was incased in a sensational white satin dress. It draping heavily across the front, forming a puffy bustle in the back, and the very low neckline was encrusted with seed pearls and sequins.

Of course, the ejaculations went some thing like this ... even from the girls. "Whew!" ... "Oh, boy!" ... "Terrific!" and around these were spotted varied whistles.

Added to her looks, Lana is a magnificent operator when it comes to handling the male of the species for she makes each one believe he is the very best as he thinks he is! So how can she miss?

Betty Grable: Judging from the comments, La Grable has more than a pair of legs, though they aren’t exactly a handicap. No matter who speaks up on the subject of Betty they do so with a special lift in their voices.

Harry James, the famous band leader, Betty married several years ago, occasionally plays at the Astor Roof. This tremendous room atop the Astor is the Mt. Olympus for the jitterbug enthusiasts of the world. They crowd in by the hundreds with their five-foot and hip cat minds.

One night I happened to be sitting next to Betty’s table where she waited for her husband between numbers. Jitterbugs are rabid movie fans so Betty was constantly being mobbed for autographs.

One of the men at her table turned to her, after the hundredth time she had been bothered and asked, "Betty, why don’t you speak to the waiters and keep these kids from pestering you?"

Betty looked at him for a minute and at the next bunch of kids approaching and laughingly said, "Oh, what difference does it make? If they want my autograph, the least I can do is be agreeable about it. It doesn’t bother me."

Before her marriage I had the opportunity to observe Betty under slightly different circumstances, and she still showed a good-natured, fun-loving, easy-going manner. It was at a cocktail party in New York to which she was escorted by the young millionaire, Alexis Thompson. All the Beaux Brummels of the town were gathered together for the party, and they proceeded to try to charm her away from her date. Not once did Betty wander. She laughed with them all, smiled and was as lively as could be, but she left with the man she came with. That’s quite a novelty in some circles!

Esther Williams: I met her at a gay party Jinx Falkenburg and her mother gave to show all the curious they collected on their Mexican junket.

I ate my fill of rich, hot Mexican food. wandered over to a quiet corner and watched the guests.

The girl in the shocking pink dress was Esther Williams. Though I wanted to talk to her I hadn’t a chance unless I could make a flying tackle at those ten men. So I watched her.

My, her face was mobile. I never saw such an alive, vibrant girl. She seems to glow allover, but I guess it’s because she knows how to enjoy herself. She was very self-confident. For some reason, people who are sure of themselves have the time to make others feel at ease because they aren’t worrying about themselves.

It was really fun to watch someone who was as lively and had such a healthy appetite for life. But I think you’d find it’s because she is relaxed inside. It’s a great secret to discover, the same one in fact that Ponce de Leon never found.

Claudette Colbert: Never have I had the pleasure of meeting a more charming and gracious woman than France’s contribution to Hollywood fame so long ago.

About mid-afternoon we wandered onto a sound stage where Miss Colbert and Don Ameche were working. It had been a particularly difficult sequence so tension ran high around me. Later, when I asked the publicity man suggested we meet Claudette, I was loath to do so for I knew she was tired. However, no sooner was the scene shot than she came smiling over to us.

I murmured something about not wanting to be a nuisance, but she said, "Why, I always enjoy talking to people between shots."

When we had settled down in her dressing room she turned to me and said, "I love the suit and hat you are wearing. Where in the world did you find them?"

I explained they were made in New York and that this was my initial trip to California.

She then asked, "How do you like our country out here? Have you been having fun going around to the studios?"

I replied in the affirmative and Miss Colbert then turned to the gentleman of the press. She asked intelligent and interested questions about his work, his mission in Hollywood and his opinions of the town. The extraordinary thing was that she actually listened to his answers.

As I watched the manner in which she centered the conversation around us, I marveled at her friendliness and straightforward manner. Fame had obviously not led her into egocentric clouds, for with a kind and gentle look about her face it made us feel at ease. As a result, Miss Colbert made two strangers feel as if they were the "stars" in her dressing room.

When I left the man with me said, "There is one of the most delightful women I have ever met."

Anita Colby: Remembered fun was another night I went to the supper and swim at Ruth and Hoagy Carmichael’s. What a wonderful meal, for Ruth runs one of the best tables and houses in Hollywood.

After paying my respects to our clever hostess, I wandered through the bar and out by the pool. I met Jimmy Stewart, Johnny McClain and Eddie Duchin were looking highly entertained. The pretty girl responsible was "The Face."

Here is a beauty who contradicts the old expression. Anita is smart and so very witty and entertaining that the men were afraid they’d miss something. So they stayed right where they were!

Diana Lynn: Here is the young girl every boy chases about. As fresh and sparkling as a newly-budded rose, but with just the right amount of sophistication, Diana is one of the most sought-after girls in the younger set. She can dance until dawn and rise at seven the next morning looking as fresh as a daisy.

One night I saw her dancing with Bob Walker in Mocambo, the next making up a foursome with Guy Madison, Gail Patrick and Henry Willson at Romanoff’s, and on another night in Mocambo with Loren Tindall. The night Desi Arnaz opened at Ciro’s Diana was with Henry Willson and David Selznick and when she got up to dance with Henry, she followed her including Henry’s openly adoring ones and why not? Diana has said yes, she’ll marry him–in the fall or perhaps January.

Being curious, I queried her several years later on her ex-swains one day. "Why did you like Diana better than the other girls here?"

One boy thought a minute and answered, "Because she is a darn nice girl. She didn’t lead guys on, but was always completely honest and natural."

"What did she talk about when you were out with her?" I asked.

Another youth replied, "Oh, just about everything. You know she is very bright and talented. Her conversation can run the gamut from entertaining chit-chat to intelligent discussions of music, literature, or most anything. She never talks about other girls in a catty way."

"Was she always the same?" I asked a laughing boy who squired her occasionally.

"No, she suited herself to your mood but she was never bored. Diana always acted as if she was having a wonderful time which makes you feel good," he answered.

Lucille Ball: During my Hollywood sojourn I went with friends to see Lucille Ball who lives out in the San Fernando Valley.

A crowd of people were already there. Van Johnson was over by the barbecue and Peter Lawford was helping him, the man who helped us park the car was Francis Lederer and Desi Arnaz led us into the playroom by the pool. Our red-headed hostess rushed over to us.

What a personality! It’s like a torrent of fireworks, just as forceful, just as vivid and just as brilliant to the eye. Talking to her for a minute is almost like getting a shot in the arm. I could tell she was a real dynamo.

She tore around from the playhouse to the pool to the main house to get us bathing suits, to see that Marion and Francis Lederer had enough pepper and to see that Susan Peters, the guest of honor, was well taken care of. What energy and selfless thinking this girl is gifted with, all with a benefit to the many people she puts herself out for in a day.

Susan Peters: Speaking of Susan, this brave and courageous girl has won the respect of women and men both, particularly men. She has presented women with a smile, rising above physical pain and loss and still be gay, laughing and interested in the world. There isn’t a man in Hollywood who didn’t worship this girl at Ciro’s opening. There she sat as pretty as a puzzle in her wheel chair on her favorite jett out seat. She faces good and bad breaks with a grin and an intestinal fortitude that is admirable. Laughter has been her shining armor and all have been touched by its glow.

Ann Sheridan: One night in the famous Cub Room of the Stork I noticed an outstanding table. It was up in a corner in full view of the room, but all you could see was a tight circle of men. They pressed forward eagerly with alert and alive expressions on their faces and then would throw their heads back and roar with laughter.

It was quite a group to keep amused, for it consisted of the Stork Club "regulars," Steve Hannagan, Damon Runyon, Walter Winchell and host Sherman Billingsley. I peeked a little farther into the charmed circle and saw the girl responsible.

The deep rollicking laughter, the delighted, animated expression on her face, the regular gay attitude she bears so gracefully, the firm handshake belong to Annie Sheridan.

When she disappeared to powder her nose, one of the men turned to the others and said, "You know the thing I like about that girl is, she lets men relax. Dames you have to string along with false flattery, sweet talk and innuendos get tiresome. Annie is more like a man in her mental approach to life, so she's good company."

Irene Dunne: It was at the very large and fashionable wedding of Gen Travers and Sam Moors in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, that I met Irene Dunne.

The church looked beautiful. The tall columns were all hidden by a forest of white silver birch trees, the altar completely covered with white gardenias. Irene came down the aisle and everyone was watching her. There were many whispered comments.

"Gee, Mommy, who is the pretty lady?" in the falsely deep voice of a seventeen-year-old. "Why she is as attractive looking as any of the debutantes!"

And in the still more adult voice of a fifty-year-old. "I can't recall when I have seen a more poised, gracious and lovely-looking woman."

You see, whether they be five or fifty, men will always adore the woman who remains as youthful and delighted with living as a young girl. Irene Dunne is a perfect example of this fact for she never fails to stimulate those around her. It might be her native integrity combined with a gracious and feminine manner, but whatever it is, it's ageless.

These may only be a few of the stars playing leads both on and off screen, but these are the ones who win hands down. They are the group spoken of as the "belles of the ball" for they have discovered the secret of eternal success with men—how to be loved and liked both.

THE END
Van Hands Down

(Continued from page 44) his hands, he furrowed his brow and admitted that this was a new experience for him. When I had finished, he marveled over the countless small, delicate, crisis-crossing lines of his hand and listened intently as I spoke of the complexity of the human hand. With some twenty-four hundred nerve fibres threading over every square inch of the palm, these imprints, I pointed out, were the chart to his whole personality.

I worked and as we talked, Van relaxed. Suddenly there was established between us the heart-warming relationship which I have known in my work with people all over the world—people like Albert Einstein, Hendrick Willem Van Loon, Gertrude Lawrence, Elsa Maxwell, Raymond Massey, Susan Peters, Raymond Swing.

Van’s hands spoke to me of the amazing will and energy which have carried him to stardom. I saw clearly the tragic accident which almost ended his bright career and the almost unbelievable physical resources upon which he had drawn to save that career.

Two other interesting facts were there in his hand, also—and I shall speak of them at the outset.

In five years there will be a marked change in the type of roles which he will play and a temporary excursion into another medium of drama.

Emotion has not yet touched deeply this handsome, good natured idol of the American screen. But it will come to him in about five years.

These, I realize, are surprising statements. But they are important ones—important to Van as a human being and as an actor.

It is the Apollo line, that fascinating line which runs upwards under the third or ring finger, which indicates a significant alteration in Van’s career as an actor. The line runs strongly and surely to a point measuring five years hence; a fresh, new line, far deeper than that which is at present running its course, then takes command.

Although the human hand with all its complexity and mystery yields up many secrets, no chiropodist can always name the precise nature of career changes. One has to go over the hand minutely, relating one line to another, then put the findings together to arrive at a conclusion.

It is my belief that Van will break with the youthful, boyish parts which he enacts so capably and begin a distinguished career as a serious, dramatic actor. In all likelihood the change will come through a great, challenging role. And from that point onward, Van will bring the full measure of his rich resources as an actor to his screen work and for a time at least to another dramatic medium.

Although I have seen it in hundreds of hands, it has never failed to draw a murmur of pleasure from me that the deepening of the artist’s art so often comes simultaneously with the deepening of his emotional being. A great, new influence will come into Van’s life about the same time as the change in him as an actor occurs. This influence will be wholly romantic, and while I can not say what type of woman she will be, Van will find his first real happiness through her. Until now, his true emotional nature has been sealed. I do not think that he will marry, although he will be attracted to many women and seek in them the qualities which can release his emotional reserve, until the woman who holds the true key will come into the orbit of his life five years from now. Van’s discovery of love will be of vital importance to him. That it will help to mature him as an actor goes without saying. But from it will come something more valuable. The scars of his childhood will heal over and he will know for the first time the altogether ennobling emotion of deep love—love that strengthens the whole personality and enriches it beyond belief.

"Van," I said, holding his hand up to the clear sunlight, "so much in you comes from the shocks of your early life—so much that is truly admirable in you and so much that is undeveloped in you."

He regarded me with the look of a man who has been taught to value truth and who does not flinch from the darker regions of his memory.

I took his right hand, which is Van's inheritance hand, in my own and searched for the parental influence etched there.
From one of his parents, as may be seen in the fine formation of his first finger, Van has been given a priceless legacy of honesty and integrity; from the other—and this is apparent in the curving of the little finger—he has inherited a tendency, which he must fight down, to avoid facing things with complete realism. Love of music has been bequeathed by one of his parents, and besides, a strong religious feeling. I was pleased to see that in Van's left hand, in which his personal life is reflected, religion and spiritual depth are thoroughly evident. Van told me that these qualities came from his father. His parents gave him quickness of perception, too, but Van has developed that quality to an even greater degree, for the little finger of his left hand is longer than its equivalent on the right.

WITH a sense of sympathy, I came to Van's fate line. It is a joy to see a clear, unhalting course in the early, formative years. It is equally disturbing to see a sudden break of that line in childhood.

"What happened to you at the age of five?" I asked.

"My father and mother separated," he said quietly.

I looked at the line again. One does not always recognize shock and disturbance in children, but it is there, nevertheless, in the subconscious mind of the child, and in the hand of the adult who was that child.

Even today, the effects of the separation throw a troubling shadow on a career brightly illuminated by success.

Fortunately another influence was recorded by his fate line which showed regularity until Van was eight.
"My grandmother," Van volunteered. I looked at the second sharp break in his early fate line and the past formed its outlines for me. As I am confident, it must have for Van himself at the moment. There was a quick, sharp picture of a young blond boy seeking, through his grandmother's sweetness and gentility, to fill the emptiness in a household that was not complete, searching through her for the vital factor in child life of security. And gradually, with her, confidence returns and he can play with joyous abandon once more, ready afresh to explore the intriguing outside world around him.

Then the second blow falls. His grandmother dies. Again the lad withdraws into himself, numbed past all comfort by this second loss, inarticulate, puzzled.

A great gap follows his grandmother's passing in Van's fate line. In confirmation there is the life line, which runs downward from under the first finger to the wrist, and which forms an island signifying distress. At the age of ten, in both the fate and life lines, regularity is established once more and the lines progress clearly and uninterruptedly.

It is here that the influence of Van's father is manifested, as a definite, constructive force. A man of simplicity and honesty, the father became a comrade to him. He awakened the love of music that was dormant in his son and he gave him renewed faith in a world that twice before had darkened.

In Van's hand today, his father's influence is still strong. No other firm influence appears.

As Van grew older, the desire to escape from the bleak New England way of life, to fill his boyhood existence with fanciful pictures, increased and began to shape him as an actor. His imagination flowered in crude, back-yard plays and in boyhood sports, enlivened by his own ideas. The triangular form of his thumb at the base reveals that from his boyhood fantasy came a well-developed sense of rhythm. It is from this rhythm that his sense of timing as an actor flows.

Thus his childhood and a stern New England tradition together became great teachers to Van Johnson.

I tried, as I progressed in my study of Van's hands, to separate the actor and the man.

Ten years from now it may be possible to follow the maze of lines which have the index to his inner being and say, "Here is that part of him which belongs to the theater. And here he is as a free individual in his private life."

But it is difficult to trace that division today.

The truth is that Van's existence as an actor has over-shadowed his free, natural growth as a thinking, feeling man.

There is so much in his nature, albeit dormant, which is fine and rare—his sense of social responsibility and his deep love of humanity as are shown by the combinations of the Mount of Venus and the Mount of Jupiter, both well developed.

But over all of this, there is drawn tightly, like an inflexible iron band, his dominant urge for accomplishment in his career.

I have spoken before of the insecurity which resulted from events in his early childhood. This lack of security, so strange in a man of his kind, has blocked his capacity to enjoy life fully.

Van's insecurity fires his ambition. It is ambition and relentless drive which he has chosen to ride in his search for security. And no man can so dedicate himself without leaving a blank page or two in his personal life.

Because he did not protest, I spoke to him naturally and frankly of his reserve.

It is not a shyness, this reserve, nor a reluctance to live completely, but rather a kind of withdrawal which enables him to give undivided attention to his career. "I never had time to play," he said solemnly.

"But you must," I counseled him. "You must not deprive yourself of the full measure of light-hearted living. You need it as a human being."

My fox terrier, Tommy, who has little or no curiosity about two-legged creatures, trotted into the room and to my astonishment mutely implored Van to play with him. Van answered him with an affectionate pat on the head.

"You have no dogs!" I asked.

"No, but I love them." I shook my head reproachfully as if I had when he had told me that he lives at a hotel in spite of his yearning for a house and a garden. His self-denial, I pointed out, was contradictory to his true nature and entirely a part of his subconscious urge to subordinate everything which might bring him satisfaction to his career.

There were other contradictions which I found. His New England thrift, for instance. For days he will budget himself, deprive himself of small, necessary luxuries. Then suddenly he will follow the dictates of his real self and shower his friends with generosity.

I CAME finally to the signposts of the hand which reflect health. In the hand line and life line at the age of twenty-nine there appeared with absolute clarity the break indicating a fracture of the skull.

"There," I said, tracing the break with my pencil so that he might see for himself what an astounding mirror the hand is of all that happens in a lifetime.

We discussed the terrible accident which missed tragedy by the smallest margin. It was my turn to marvel as he told me how against doctor's orders, he had returned to the studio to complete the picture on which he was working.

Few men could have mustered such strength! But then few men have Van's determination.

I am convinced—and his hand confirms it—that no obstacle, natural or self-imposed, will ever halt Van's progress. The bone structure of his friendly hand, which yields only slightly when the hand is pressed from the knuckle of the first finger to the little finger, asserts his drive and energy and strength. Ambition resides in the Jupite's mount. His fine-textured skin is the clue to sensitivity. He has long, patient nails—a guarantee that he can work tirelessly. The fine line of intuition, which runs deeply from his life line to his little finger, bespeaks his ability to perceive quickly and to exercise sound judgment with trigger-like rapidity.

As for natural creative ability, the spatulate tip of his Apollo finger, the ring finger, indicates originality and creative ability throughout his lifetime.

When I had finished my reading, I was glad to be able to say to him:

"There is much that you must develop within yourself. But that is true of most people today. Time seems to move too quickly for all of us and we have discarded many of the hallowed formulas for complete living. You, Van, will discover all or most of the riches within yourself. You are lucky, for most people never do."

And as he left, waving goodbye from his car, I thought to myself that rarely had I met anyone better equipped to cope with sudden fame or better gifted to hold tenaciously to it and still grow as a human being than Van Johnson.
The Case Against
Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which he was a member, and ran into his first trouble.
It was not real trouble. He was told that there were certain things in his script that would be offensive to audiences. He was advised to cut them out before he started shooting—since local censor boards all over the country would insist that he cut them out of his finished picture, anyway, before they would allow it to be shown.
With this advice in mind, Hughes made his picture and, early in 1941, submitted it to the Association for their official Seal.
He was told that certain scenes and treatments were still sure to make trouble for him, that he would be given the Production Code Seal as soon as he changed or eliminated them. He argued hotly, and even took an appeal to the Board of Directors, but finally gave in, made the corrections the Board required and was given the Seal in May, 1941.
In order to know why "The Outlaw" later became the storm center of so much trouble, it is important to know how Hollywood's Production Code works and what the acceptance of the Seal involves.
The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America wrote the Production Code in 1930 after there had been some public protest over films with sensational themes or scenes. All of the maajor producers got together and devised a set of rules which all voluntarily agreed to follow. The rules were simple, based on the common decencies of speech, morals and conduct. These rules are called the Production Code, and it has no other purpose than to make sure that no mem-er, either deliberately or through igno-norance or oversight, puts on the screen material that would be offensive. The fact that only six states maintain censor boards today is proof of how thorough a job of self-regulation Hollywood has done. The Production Code was long administered by what was popularly known as "The Hays Office" because the producers retained the distinguished ex-Postmaster General, Will Hays, to run things for them. This office is now headed by Eric Johnston, and the parent organization is now known as The Motion Picture Association of America.
It is to be remembered that the MPA is not, essentially, a censor board. It is a banning together of the men who make and distribute the biggest and best of films in an effort to serve the best interests of Hollywood by serving the best interests of the nation. Any producer, member or not, is welcome to submit his product, get advice and, if his film meets requirements, get the Production Code Seal. The MPA cannot prevent the making or the showing or the exploitation of a film. Its strength lies in the honor of the men who voluntarily decided what rules they wanted to play by and, in cases of disagreement, allowed the organization they themselves have set up to make the final decision.
"The Outlaw" was now ready to go.
Hughes had retained the resourceful Russell Birdwell to handle the publicity and the build-up started. Then on February 5, 1943, Hughes himself with great fanfare gave "The Outlaw" a world premiere at the Geary Theatre in San Francisco.
Here the real trouble started. As a member who had accepted the Seal, Hughes obligated himself to observe MPA rules concerning advertising—simple rules based on good taste. Ads were used that were not approved by the MPA. Nor did San Francisco citizens approve the posters displaying on a haystack the ripe young figure of Jane Russell with very little on above the waist except an expression of sultry threat; or newspaper ads calling attention to her physical charms by the line, "Sex has not been rationed." People started calling up the post office department, complaining about the advertising and the dirty words that volunteer copywriters scribbled on the billboards. It was a crisis for Golden Glint. The Legion of Decency laid down a protest on the Golden Glint ad; it was not powerful enough to prevent the national showing of the film, and we can find record of no other action against "The Outlaw" then.

For whatever reason "The Outlaw" held up, the fact remained that it was not shown anywhere for three years. But it was not forgotten. A steady stream of letters to the MPA came through the press. Her face and figure became famous. The girl is beautiful. The poses were effective. The press agent was on the job. By Hughes and De Mille, who dealt with United Artists to release "The Outlaw" curiosity about the film and the lady were at fever pitch.

Once again, an advertising campaign was mounted. But instead of putting into action, some of which did not carry the MPA approval and which quickly proved to be offensive. The campaign, like its San Francisco predecessor which had created such a national furore, once more was based partly on the anatomical charms of Miss Russell. One ad asked blandly, "What are the two great reasons for Russell's success?"

A further ad imputed a basis under a picture of our heroine on the now-famous haystack, "How would you like to tussle with Russell?" Many national magazines, among them Photoplay, refused to publish this advertisement. A second one was prepared, the copy slightly revised, which found acceptance among a number of magazines but which Photoplay again rejected. Following the refusal, a new advertisement was prepared and offered to those magazines which had rejected the previous ads. This was also refused by Photoplay. Subsequently, still another ad was offered by Photoplay's publisher the idea was in no way objectionable and it therefore was finally accepted.

Out in Los Angeles, according to the report of conservative Newsweek magazine, "here the publicity men achieved a literal new high in vulgarity. Over Pasadena, a sky-writing plane traced 'The Outlaw' and then drew two huge circles side by side and placed a dot in the center of each."

Undoubtedly more through this advertising than through any other factor, the picture began to run into serious censorship troubles. Wilmington, Bridgeport and Providence the picture was banned in its entirety. In Galveston, the Most Reverend C. E. Byrne, Bishop, sent a letter to all of the churches urging his jurisdiction requesting Catholics to boycott any theater where "The Outlaw" played, not only during the engagement, but for a year afterward.

In Memphis the film was banned and in San Francisco was closed after a day's run. Hughes took the latter case to court and the right of the theater to show the film was upheld.

Such censorship did not interfere with the cash collections for Mr. Hughes' cot ters. It is reported that the groom got back his original investment of $1,200,000 in just two cities where his film was shown, so the rentals on the film in later showings were all profit.

Though financially censorship actions did not impose any hardship on Mr. Hughes, the entire affair did not do the MPA much good, for in a broader sense, for the film industry as a whole. One producer of one film had managed to stir up such outrages against Hollywood as hadn't been heard for sixteen years from the firing of the MPA Production Code.

Something had to be done. Hughes was asked to appear before the Board of Directors and explain the facts of the action of agreement as a member. Hughes never appeared, for the day before the hearing was scheduled, he resigned from the MPA and filed suit charging restraint of trade under antitrust laws. Here the MPA must have asked itself, "How can we be in restraint of trade when we are a completely voluntary group?"

The House of Representatives District Court in New York seems to have asked much the same question since the judge denied Hughes's motion for a temporary injunction to prevent the MPA from withdrawing its Production Code. "The Outlaw"

Although Hughes had lost his suit for the time being, by bringing the matter to court action he managed in still another way to strike the burning oil of censorship restrictions.

Photoplay believes that as the producer of "The Outlaw" and as the man responsible for the advertising campaign on his motion picture, Mr. Hughes has it is doing the film industry a disservice.

In our capitalistic democracy, Hollywood has been blessed with comparative freedom in its censorship statutes to contend with and few state censor groups to lay restraining hands on Hollywood. That films should have such freedom is largely because of the efforts of many conscientious groups. By voluntary censorship they have saved the industry from more severe and stifling outside political censorship.

"The Outlaw" has provoked a feeling throughout America that perhaps, after all, Hollywood does need some sort of policing. But where to look. On the MPA does not help. There are too many groups to be considered and a further reason for cause for alarm. It may well be that in so doing they will refuse to approve some great drama of inherent honesty because it is too controversial.

If "The Outlaw" prevents one honest, adult motion picture from being made, it has done more harm than it ever could do. If "The Outlaw" provokes one new censorship law, it will have inexcusably injured Hollywood. Had "The Outlaw" dealt with a great social wrong or the abuse of some human right, the fight against censorship would have won Photoplay's immediate support.

The fact remains, after the shouting dies down, "The Outlaw" is just a semi-fictional story of an outlaw and a girl who put on the capitalistic blouse ever worn in a chilly desert night.

It's Like This to Be
(Continued from page 39) beginning, there was hardly a day that I didn't spend a part of it blazing at each other, and the rest of it laughing over how mad we were. It helped, we realize now, to liven the monotony of old breaks and being poor for so long.

The story of how Cornel and I passed each other on a New York street and fell spang into love has already been told. This, too, was an entirely public moment, occurring on 7th Avenue, parade ground of agents, actors—and all kinds of theater folk.

It would be nice if I could say this first and most important glimpse of my future husband was one that will never fade from my brain, but I can't. I can't even tell you whether he was dressed in blue, gray or brown. But I did receive a lightning impression of brown eyes, curly hair and dark handsomeness.

I had on a new black suit, which I considered very sophisticated and glamorous, and just right for touring the booking agencies. The kind of suit you put on and set out to make something happen—and, after I'd passed Cornel, I knew it had happened. The event itself is rather hard to define, because it was a very strange thing. Just two pairs of eyes, meeting each other in a crowd, and refusing to turn away....

He was talking to another man on the edge of the sidewalk—and I had to walk by them. I kept walking, mechanically, until I reached a drugstore, and collapsed on a soda stool. It's been told, too, how Cornel made a phony telephone call, while I drank a coke I didn't want—and both left the store without getting up nerve enough to speak to each other. My feelings were a wild mixture of wanting to eat my throat for not having said something, and of wondering just what a girl raised in Boston does say on such occasions.

PATE took care of the whole thing nicely, two days later, when I came out of the RKO Building and saw Cornel talking with some other actors. I walked by—but slowly, this time and if he hadn't followed me maybe I would have gone back. But he did follow me—and it resulted in a date for two nights later. It was conventional enough to please the movie scripters—a romantic little Hungarian restaurant, a bottle of Tokay, hours and hours of talking, and a Gypsy fiddler playing for us alone.

That Gypsy music, if I had been able to analyze it, was a sort of condensed version of the man I was going to marry. Moody as Cornel's own Hungarian self—gay, angry, tender, wild, subdued, inspired, in turn. Quick to change, but always very, very sweet.

Our current Hollywood home is called "Country House"—which is a pretty good description. It has five acres—and its master is personally acquainted with every tree, bush, flower and stretch of grass on the place. The house was built by Norma Talmadge, and decorated by ex-movie star William Haines. The day we first saw it, we felt they must have had blueprints of our dreams. Lots of color and comfort—sunlight and a view for every room—twelve rooms in English cottage style.

Cornel is like a kid, putting around the ground the whole weekend and evenings until dark. When we first moved in, we decided to have a group of eucalyptus trees taken out, and called a nursery to do it. We watched them pull up four trees, then Cornel decided they were having all the fun. So he and a friend of his took out thirty-two trees in three days! His favorite room in the house is the bleached ash panelled study, because of the Oriental prints which cover one end of the room—bold-colored warriors and horsemen, each picture fitting exactly into the square panelling of the wood. The collection brightens the wall from floor to ceiling.

I share my husband’s pride in what we fondly call our “estate.” Both of us are still too close in mind and spirit to those New York days when we couldn’t have kept even a boarding-house roof over our heads if the hotel manager hadn’t believed in us enough to carry us, week after week, on the cuff. It was a broken-down place but home to us, because all the other occupants were poor but hopeful actors too... We used to dream then of a place like “Country House”—and now we’re living in it!

Cornel has never been quite as impulsive as I am, or at least he picks better times for it. It took him quite a while to get used to my crazy insistence on celebrating the bad breaks instead of the good ones, but it gradually grew to be an old family custom. When luck was the hardest and prospects the gloomiest, we’d take our last ten-dollar bill and splurge on a show or a bottle of champagne. It was a great morale builder, just saying “To blazes with it,” and usually something good happened right afterwards.

When we were “rich” we’d carefully look for a fifteen-cent movie. It gave us that fine feeling of influence you get when you can really afford something better. Currently, we like to sit and plan on a trip to Mexico, to be made as soon as we get a sizable vacation between pictures. We want to travel leisurely and in style, “do it up brown, for once—just to see how it feels.”

He LOVES to look back on our years in the theater—and so do I—especially the plays we did together. There was Tallulah Bankhead’s “Antony and Cleopatra,” in which we were both rehearsing when we got married. Immediately afterwards the company went on tour for three-and-a-half months of one-night stands.

stands, a schedule we promptly rejected as being a heck of a honeymoon. It was a brave gesture, because it was many weary weeks before we got new jobs. We played in "French without Tears," together, and enjoyed a wonderful dual engagement at the Spring Festival in Ann Arbor. Always, however, there was "Moon over Mulberry Street!" "Mulberry Street" was no gem but whenever we got broke we could always take it on the road and we did have fun with it. It was a triangle affair—me playing a Park Avenue deb, Cornel a poor Italian boy from the slums, and my society fiancé played by our dear friend, cherubic-cheeked actor, Jimmy Metcalfe. That baby face of Jimmy's, coupled with the seriousness of his role could break Cornel up on the slightest provocation.

Once, in the final scene, when Jimmy had worked himself up to a very dramatic farewell, he tried to don his collapsible evening hat and it wouldn't un-collapse. Cornel promptly went into hysteric. I might say that laughter is my husband's most violent mood—when he starts, he just can't stop. He stood there with his shaking back toward the audience, unable to say a word. Jimmy finally made his exit. Then the curtain stuck and wouldn't fall on our final kiss... That sent us both sky-high. We had to get offstage somehow so Cornel took me by the hand and gasping, "Come darling," led me into what had been established as the bedroom Cornel has a wonderful sense of humor and he loves to play little jokes. His specialty is fake phone calls—he's a great mimic of other people's voices, plus various dialects and accents. Not long ago, when we decided to dispose of a few pieces of furniture we no longer needed, he got caught in his own joke. All afternoon I was pestered with calls from people "answering our ad," asking me a series of perfectly mad questions. It took me a long time to catch on that it was the Wilde boy. When the next caller announced in guttural Russian accent that he was very anxious to buy all the pieces, I told him a very sad tale about having used it all for firewood. You guessed it—the Russian was a real prospect...

A gift from Cornel is always one of the finest gifts ever given, because he puts so much of himself into it. The first present he ever gave me was a medal he won for a saber championship in '36. If he'd been able to afford a diamond tiara for me at the time, I think he still would have been prouder to give me the medal. Our wedding rings were dime-store ones and they soon turned green. Recently we bought each other gold wedding rings. Inside are two lines from the marriage ceremony, one line in his and one in mine.

I now have my second "decoration," too. A St. Christopher's medal made into a locket, with a sapphire on top. It opens up into four sections and each has a picture glazed on the gold—one of himself, one of us together, one of Wendy and one of Punch. It has a poem engraved on the back—four lines that he composed himself, every word so precious to me that I never have repeated them to anyone else.

Wendy, now three, has her Daddy's coloring—his dark eyes, and I believe her hair will eventually be as dark as his, too. He's a very reasonable father, delighted with his off-spring and content to have her grow up to be whatever she wants to be. That's going to suit me, too, so long as she can manage to be herself at all times—in the same way he does. Punch, for the uninformed, is our French poodle.

Someday, perhaps, I will get a chance to play opposite my favorite leading man on the screen, and it will be a proud moment. We also hope to act together again on the stage. Acting is so much a part of our lives, a business but also a pleasure, that we rehearse and work together at home. Better than that, however, we are very good critics for each other.

Oh, I wouldn't pretend that we never have any quarrels anymore—we still try once in a while, just to keep our hand in Cornel's so darned absent-minded sometimes he drives me crazy. I know that I am a better person, however, since I became Mrs. Cornel Wilde. I used to be very impatient with people and things—he's taught me reason and tolerance and kindness. He's taught me, too, that whenever I sit down to write anything like this, my husband is always going to be my favorite subject.

"He was high hat," says Anne.

"She was cold," says John.

"I was working hard," says Anne.

"So was I," says John.

"You paid no attention to me," says Anne.

"I asked you to play gin rummy," says John.

"That did it," says Anne.

"I blitzed her," said John. "I thought she'd been pretty cool and all, but one afternoon when there was nothing to do I did suggest a game and was a little surprised when she said she'd play. I took her three straight games. A blitz! Wow! You never clapped eyes on a madder young woman. She blazed. Her eyes were like a conflagration."

"I was never so furious in my life," said Anne. "I took those cards and made a comeback. I blitzed that man three straight times."

"I had a sickly smile on my face, too," said John. "We haven't played gin rummy since. But you ought to see her when she's mad. Brother, that did it."

(Notice to future generation of Hodliaks: That did it. That's how your great-grandpaw John and your great-grandmaw Anne fell in love.)

The proposal came months later after many dates, which is quite as it should be. Also, as it must inevitably be according to the rule of true love, there was the customary rift; time off for taking stock, a period during which nobody was particularly happy. That was the proof of the pudding. So they had a meeting of minds on all scores, including music, art and what a house to live in should be like. Anne, who is expertly informed in the realm of good music, was introduced, gradually, to the facts of life in regard to hot jazz. John is expert on that. So is Anne, now. They disagreed and compromised about politics and agreed that night clubs were stupid places unless you dressed to kill and went in a spirit of complete celebration and foolishness, not too often.

They agreed about wedding plans.

"Everything simple," said Anne, which is the way it was. "Everything very conventional. The bride in white, and all, and a wedding trip. If Niagara Falls had been within reach, we would have gone there."

But before you get to a wedding, there comes that inevitable time when the news has to be broken to the bride's parents.

Anne's grandfather is the celebrated architect, Frank Lloyd Wright. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Stuart Baxter, are conservative Easterners who have a home at Burlingame, California. Anne and John drove up to spend Easter weekend with them and while there asked them to announce the engagement. The announcement as the four planned it set the key to the whole marriage and they all felt wonderful about the conventional way the engagement was announced, which is a difficult thing to do when you're a movie star. As far as this is concerned, Anne and John feel they are not cheating their public but that it would be refreshing to the public for a change to see a holy show made of a wedding in film town.

"And there we were, all officially engaged."

They were married on July seventh at four o'clock in the garden of Mr. and Mrs. Baxter's home in Burlingame, and it was a quiet wedding and as pretty a wedding as you please.

"We owe an obligation there," said John, "because we're in pictures. So we cooperated with the photographers. But otherwise, this might have been any couple getting married, and why not?"

They had it all, rice, old shoes, the bride tossing her bouquet, which was in three parts so that three friends might share the luck—and Mr. and Mrs. Hodik made a flustered getaway to the airport where they took a plane to Colorado Springs for their honeymoon.

Anne's engagement ring is an emerald-cut diamond with hand-wrought diamond and platinum leaf designs. It was something they designed and shopped for together and which took so long to decide on and to design that Anne was able to wear it for the first time only a few weeks before the wedding.

Sitting on their couch where they got engaged, Anne and John face their problems and their plans forthrightly.

They think it's all right for people in the same profession to marry. Much better that way than for an actress to marry a business man who'll find it difficult to understand how a day's work in an important part, such as Anne's Sophie in "The Razor's Edge," can exhaust a girl and put her out of sorts.

They point out reasonably enough that they have known each other for two years, that they understand each other's problems, that they make allowances—and that there are just as many divorces among the non-pros as among the actors and actresses, if the truth be known.

They have another advantage. Both are trouper's of long standing, in spite of their youth, and both are stars, stars of equal magnitude, and on the way up. There's no room for professional jealousy.

They are serious. After their honeymoon, they returned to Anne's house in Beverly Hills because there aren't any other houses available. They immediately began to start plans for the home they'll build when such miracles are possible. They hope it will be a series of plans of Anne's grandfather and his son Lloyd.
The Care and Feeding of Fine Furniture

1. Fine woods are like people—they need nourishment to keep them from cracking and drying out. Best diet is a daily dusting with a few drops of O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish on your dust cloth. It's the famous polish with the triple-action. Cleans, polishes and protects—all at the same time.

2. Is your furniture streaked? Or gummed? Don't choke the poor thing with too much polish—or a heavy, sticky polish. Wash off old, cracked streaks. Then switch to your mother's old favorite—O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish—for proper care. It leaves furniture with a clean, gleaming finish that's perfect.

3. Spot-and-scratch ailments. Try O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish on a dampened cloth. It's a wonder-worker for watermarks and minor scratches. (If the mar goes deep, use O-Cedar Touch-up Polish, according to directions on the bottle.) O-Cedar Polishes are used by more homemakers than any other brand.

4. Hint for ashes. Wide, flat-ashtrays help a lot. Afterwards, "damp dust" with a cloth moistened with O-Cedar Polish. It wipes up dirt and ashes in jiffy-time, without scattering them into the cracks and crannies. Use it on your dust mop, too. Remember, it's O-Cedar—the greatest help in housekeeping.

Olivia Hits Her Stride

(Continued from page 53) That very fact may well write the ending to the story of a girl who formerly was very wretched and a fellow who was very lonely, both of whom are too happy together, currently, to think quite clearly about the future.

They met at the Beverly Hills Officers’ Club on January 16, 1944, the girl who was a movie star and the handsome captain just back from a long stretch in New Guinea. Temporarily at that time Joe McKeeon was stationed at the Santa Maria, California, air base. He’d come into the Beverly Hills Officers’ Club with Sigrid Gurie, a friend of a New Guinea buddy.

OLIVIA was very mixed up at that time in a highly turbulent romance. It was that trite but tragic situation of a man, long separated from his wife, but not legally free. Miss de Havilland was brought up as a lady, with very high ideals. Combined with that, she has a fine, appraising mind and a dreaming, affectionate nature.

Trying to find her way out, Olivia showed the sensible goodness of her nature by the method she chose: She wasn’t happy herself but she’d try to help others find happiness. So she went entertaining the troops, went not to the comfortable spots, but to the most uncomfortable ones: To the Aleutians, then to the South Seas.

She was in between those trips when she met Joe McKeeon. She still had a crack in her heart but she found she and Joe had much to talk about immediately. Not that she’d have had enough to talk about, anyhow. All the de Havillands are natural talkers and intellectuals—Olivia, her pretty mother, and her will-o’-the-wisp sister, Joan Fontaine. Before that first evening was over at the Officers’ Club, Olivia and Joe had made a date to go ice skating.

Something the South Pacific had made the Captain yearn for.

Although she spent most of the time on that first two-some date sitting down, very hard, on the ice, Olivia did manage to find out a lot about Joe.

He came of a pure Irish family, though his father had been born in England and had been in the British Army during the first World War. Joe, himself, though born in America, had spent much of his little boyhood in Ireland. He had always gone to Catholic schools, both here and abroad, and he never had any doubt as to what he wanted to do. He wanted to be a soldier, wearing the wings of a flyer.

He was in Hawaii on December 7, 1941. He had seen twenty-seven months of action in the Pacific before he met Olivia. He got a four-months interval in this country, training pilots, before he was sent to England. In the whole war, those months were all Captain McKeeon had in America.

During those four months Joe acted like any other very nice normal young airman. Having found himself a beautiful girl, he tried to make time. He wasn’t demanding, he hardly let her out of his sight. Every moment he had free from his field, he made date plans with Olivia.

“A couple of times we went night-clubbing,” Olivia says, “but mostly we had quiet dinners and talked and talked. I heard about Joe’s childhood. He heard about mine. He was a dear. That’s an awfully girlish word, but it is the word that most fits Joe. He is so dear. You get accustomed to too-smooth men around Hollywood. It was so refreshing for me to encounter somebody who wasn’t being slick, but was being sincere. Joe was—he is—all faith and idealism and service. Everybody who meets him warms to him immediately, to the visible goodness that’s in him. That was one of the nicest things.

“No!”—claim medical authorities, who ought to know! Nature has a way of playing cruel tricks on womankind—on even the most beautiful and talented women.

And Nature has so constructed and physically endowed woman that in many cases she’s apt to suffer distressing symptoms during her life. For instance, when she enters womanhood—or during the menopause, the period when fertility ebbs away.

Now if on certain days of the month—female functional monthly disturbances are causing you to suffer pain, nervous distress and feel so tired, cranky, you pick on your children and snap at your husband—then de try Lydia E. Pinkham’s Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. It’s famous for this purpose!

Made Especially For Girls and Women

Pinkham’s Compound—made especially for girls and women—DOES MORE than relieve such monthly pain. IT ALSO relieves accompanying nervous tension, irritability and week, high-strung feelings—when due to this cause. Taken regularly throughout the month—this great medicine helps build up resistance against such distress. A thing any sensible woman should want to do!

Lydia Pinkham’s Compound is also very effective to relieve hot flashes and those funny, embarrassing nervous feelings during the years 38 to 52—when due to the functional ‘middle-age’ period peculiar to women.

Thousands upon thousands of women have reported truly remarkable benefits by taking Pinkham’s Compound. It is also an excellent stomachic tonic. Certainly worth trying!

past that had been hanging over her disappeared entirely.

On top of that, the unanimous decision of the three judges of the Court of Appeals was handed down and she was free to sign a new contract. So Olivia came home to Beverly Hills, signed with Paramount, and waited for three weeks, and her heart was whole again and she was out in the sunshine. That cablegram could be some kind of a trick and there was no way, war being war, for anyone to guarantee they could be from England to California in twenty-one days, but still, she knew that Joe would be.

And he was.

He was very thin and very tired. The scar around his left eye looked grim and he still limped a little from walking for miles to the nearest town jail on his broken ankle after he had parachuted to earth in Germany. What had made it worse was that after having been forced by the Germans to walk on the broken ankle to the jail, then to the hospital, when he finally arrived at the prison camp he had been forced to stand and for several days in a compartment crammed with other prisoners. His legs swelled to three times their size and he thought he would surely lose them. Several of our fliers captured at about the same time did lose theirs and a couple of the others lost their lives, but Joe survived. It was the Russians who liberated him.

AND then came peace. Men were getting their honorable discharge papers but not Captain McKeon. He wanted to stick. It was his life. He became Major McKeon and was stationed at Riverside which is only fifty miles outside of Hollywood—in actual distance.

In every other way, however, Riverside is as far away as the moon from Hollywood and of this, the new, lovely, sincere Olivia is very aware.

"Joe loves his work and is ambitious concerning it," she says, "and of course that is the way it should be with any man. Yet for that, I feel he needs the best kind of home and domestic wife. But here I am, one of those awful women who loves her own work. Except for Hollywood, I can only carry it on in one or two other places—New York, perhaps, or even possibly London.

"Whether or not I could ever give it up, I don't know. The reason I haven't married up to now is because I am very, very, very serious about marriage. I should want my marriage to be founded on love and respect, above every other factor, but I should also want to feel it would be the only marriage possible to me. I know that attitude is Joe's attitude, too, and with his religion, it would have to be—end all. Joe eventually will have to do some more overseas duty. That will always be coming up, in the years ahead. So I don't know what lies in the future." Olivia smiled.

"You know the old, old adage about time telling," she said.

"Yes, we know that old adage about time telling and we know the one about love will find a way too and that character will out. The kind of boy who survives first a war and then a prison camp, and rushes back to his girl is not too easily stopped.

But, no matter how this story ends, you can be sure of this much: You're going to see a much finer, more sensitive actress in this girl de Havilland from now on—and that means real acting greatness, for she's always been excellent, right from the start. But her greater status will come because she's a girl with courage and honesty and generosity, who's definitely found herself.
Big Girl

"Soon as I get my hair fixed."

"How's your tooth?" the assistant director asked.

"Fine," said Shirley, and giggled.

"I guess it was the dentist, coming here and all, with his little black satchel, that started those rumors," said Mrs. Temple.

The preceding three scenes aren't exactly three of a kind, but they are relevant to the life and times of a young woman who has been one of the half-dozen best known persons in the entire world since she was six years old. To those fortunate enough to be close by, the experience of watching the ex-baby doll with the six extravagant curls grow up, get married, and become a full-fledged star all over again is both fetching and alarming.

She is now old enough to have her own home, to try to live on a budget, to be astonished by the voracious appetite of a young man who gobbles four eggs for breakfast and gets hungry again before noon, old enough to be a world-famous motion picture star—but not old enough for everyone to have forgotten that she was only recently a chirping, dancing, golden-headed mopペット. That irks her.

Shirley says little about it, but she realizes acutely that she has no greater competitor than that child. She can't live up to her and she can't live down her. She speaks fondly of the ex-Shirley, but she speaks objectively, almost as if she were speaking of another person. The phenomenal babe of the 'Thirties, who is said to have banked a tidy three million dollars in one day at the box office, had the head of the two thousand dolls in the fabulous playroom of Shirley's house.

So far as anybody knows, no young thing ever tried harder to get grown up in a hurry. None ever came through the twirling teens with more graceful colors. Possibly only one other girl in all history ever confronted the world at her age with so much savoir-faire. The other girl was a kid named Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt at seventeen; she knew a thing or two about acting and a lot about men, but she probably couldn't fry eggs.

Although she will tease you into mumbling incoherence and make you feel as inept as a broken crutch if she really likes you, Shirley faces facts forthrightly. She denied, as indignantly as if she'd been accused of stealing chickens, a rumor in April that she was going to have a baby. It just wasn't so, it hadn't been planned that way, and things are going to work out as planned, says Shirley.

But now that we're on the subject, what about babies, Shirley?

"Three," says Shirley. "By all means, three. But not too soon. I hope they won't arrive for a little while. If we could pick the time, we'd say sometime after May, 1947."

The significance of that date is that not until then will Shirley have completed her heavy schedule of pictures David O. Selznick has set for her, including "Honeymoon" and "Little Women." Time enough then to think about posterity.

"Want to be starlaced?" asked Shirley.

"Well, I could be a grandmother—by 1965. Now will you believe I'm grown up?"

Since April 23, her eighteenth birthday, Shirley has been free of the benevolent state welfare department. It was an oddity, at that, this last year, for Shirley, although married and graduated from high school, was still an infant under the law. Always, there was a welfare worker on the scene whenever Shirley was present. And Shirley had to quit work daily at five P.M., an embarrassment in front of older players like being sent to bed early.

Actually, her eighteenth birthday meant no new freedoms for Shirley, since she already has everything any adult could want in that respect, but psychologically the date was important. Shirley regarded it as a young man regards the great age of twenty-one.

"I'm a free woman now, you can't boss me any more," she teased her mother, who hasn't bossed her in several years. At her parents' insistence Shirley began taking charge of her own affairs even before her sixteenth birthday, the year she told the truth about her age, to the confusion of the world-wide clique of Temple admirers who thought she was fifteen. She had complete say about roles, clothes, spending money, and dates since becoming the

But since the wedding, make no mistake about it, the boss in the Agar home has been Mr. Jack Agar.

"I'm Mrs. Jack Agar and darn proud of it," she says. The other day she crossed out the "Temple" on her dressing-room door and substituted "Agar."

"Shirley Agar"—now, that's something, isn't it? To Shirley Agar it is the sweetest music in the world.

In "Honeymoon," with both Franchot Tone and Guy Madison as leading men, Shirley will dance and sing for the first time since she's been old enough to wear nylons. This will be a screen event of wide interest and Shirley has been nervous about it. The little girl with the curls was a celebrated diva and dancer. For the past two years, Shirley has been a dramatic actress, a schoolgirl, and now, glory be, a housewife. She'll do all right. Shirley always does all right, but she feels that she wishes "Uncle Billy" Robinson was here to coach her. "Uncle Billy," incidentally, never forgets a birthday or an anniversary. He was on the long distance telephone promptly on the morning of April 23, singing "Happy Birthday."

The staggering fan mail continues. Marriage and graduation into adult roles has made no difference there. One of the phenomenal sights on the Selznick lot is brawny messengers lugging sacks and boxes of letters, mostly addressed to "Miss Shirley Temple," but more and more these days addressed to "Mrs. John Agar." They arrive at a constant rate of 40,000 a month.

Shirley and her mother labor over this mail, do their best to reply personally whenever possible. But some requests have to be ignored, even when they're romantic and make special appeal to Shirley.

The English girl who said she wouldn't marry the American GI unless he provided Shirley Temple's wedding gown for the ceremony got a quick but polite turn-down. "A wedding dress is pretty personal, isn't it?" Shirley said. "And anyway, do you really think a marriage based on a whimsicality like that is a good idea? If she loves him, she ought to marry him anyway."

Shirley is now receiving scores of requests to act as godmother, and although she likes the new status this gives her, she is compelled to say no.

Some close investigation and careful inquiry around the Selznick studio reveals that Shirley had nothing whatever to do with Jack's recent decision to become a motion-picture actor himself. That was the doing of astute Henry Willson, Selznick's assistant, discoverer of Guy Madison and other photogenic people. Agar, who was discharged from the Army last January 1, has money of his own—he and Shirley live on it, spending none of hers—and was considering whether to go to Harvard Business School or to start right out in business, when Willson pointed out that motion pictures are good business too, and that he could make good in it without a helping hand from Shirley.

They began their married life in a one-bedroom rented house, furnished. That's where Shirley, who went to cooking school before Jack got out of the Army, discovered that most of her culinary lessons had been wasted. The elaborate casseroles and tricks to do with tunas and salads were all unappreciated; Shirley's man likes meat and potatoes, liver and onions, fried eggs and ham. They lived there more than three months before they could follow their plan of taking over their own home, next door to her parents.

This was the famous house with the stage, trap drums, soda fountain and the dolls. It now resembles a New York studio apartment, with the enormous living-room walls in pale aqua, with big couches and chintz. The space formerly occupied by the soda fountain, which was the small Shirley's chief delight in life, has been added to space taken from where the stage used to be, and that is the Agars' bedroom, done in yellow. The exterior of the home, formerly cream, is now white.

"I have had to give in and get a maid for this one," said Shirley. "Jack insisted on it. He said, after all, he had a right to some of my time, and he didn't want me scrubbing—say, you should see me do the floors—all the time, and we had some dancing to catch up on."

A year ago, Shirley's dates took her to quiet places. The boys were shy about being photographed with a celebrity. They stopped at the soda fountains on the way home for cokes and hamburgers with the gang. Now the Agars are well known at a few of the better bistros where the orchestras are good. They like to rumba.

Shirley does her shopping on the way home from the studio. All Southern California shops at the Farmer's Market, a fabulous open-air mart where the vegetables are fresher than sailors, and there Mrs. Agar trades. Sentimental housewives sigh among the rhubarb bins as they watch the bride buy the potatoes.

Women, who are the people that should know, agree that this sort of thing means a lot more to a girl than being a movie star. Shirley confirms that opinion in more ways than one.

Besides, you have to be grown up to go shopping for your husband's dinner.

Mark Against Time

"I had no right to go to that party," he said, in self-condemnation. "I'm nobody. I was the only unimportant person there. They didn't know who I was. Most of them didn't care."

Tactfully I tried to mention the stars who had struggled, taken years to reach their goal. Flynn, for example. After all, Steve was still new. Wasn't there still plenty of time? Steve flashed me a look I shall never forget.

"That's just it," he said, in a dry, hollow voice. "There isn't plenty of time. Maybe five years at the most. If I'm not a star by then, I'll never be a star. I'll never be able to act at all. I won't even be able to walk."

It all began in his childhood. Born in Cleveland, Ohio, an only son, he was frail, sheltered, adored and indulged by a beautiful young mother he adored in return. When he was three, Steve was taken to England to live with his grandparents. His mother, now divorced, thought the change might benefit her little son. Eventually they returned to Cleveland. The following year they decided to try the climate and visit relatives in Montreal.

On his twelfth birthday, a new stepfather came into Steve's life. It was good to see his mother happy but he felt strange, left out of things. He kept his misgivings bottled up inside himself. It was the summer of 1935. Steve, now fourteen, was sent to a popular resort where he determined to train for the junior Olympics. He loved to swim, was fairly good too.

He never stopped training. Then one day Steve was on the diving board about to try his first two-and-a-half. He balanced himself on the edge of the board, he sprang up and down. Slowly at first, then faster. Up in the air he went, back again for the big dive.

Behind him, unseen, a bully sneaked out on the board. His added weight naturally killed the spring. Steve, unaware, came down, landed on the board and split his back wide open. His convalescence was long and tedious. His pride was deeply hurt. But no one must ever know.

At sixteen Steve went to his first dance. His recovery was now complete. That lonely, lost feeling began to slip away. Then suddenly, ten thousand red-hot daggers ripped down his spine. Steve stood there petrified, too ashamed to cry out.

From then on any extra motion brought back the pain. Athletics were out. Steve never went to another dance. Highly nervous, worried about the pressure on his spine, he covered up by pretending to be indifferent to everything. Life became a series of episodes. Steve left home. Humiliated and jobless, he was forced to work for money and return again. He tried his hand at everything, bill collecting, oil painting, radio and stock acting helped most, to keep his mind off himself.

"It was 1938 in Chicago," Steve told me, "I tried to enlist in the Air Corps. I tried again in 1939. This time they advised me to see my personal physician about my spine. I went from doctor to doctor. Some advised an immediate operation. Some said it was too late. At the most, I was given five more years. Paralysis was inevitable. I would never be able to use my legs again.

Five years to accomplish the work of a lifetime! Marriage, home, children, financial security, the answer to his dreams. Automatically Steve's thoughts turned to Hollywood. Where but in this fabulous city would it be possible to accomplish so with the characters.” With James Cain, however, “You're in on his murders yourself.” Steve loves the quiet of the desert. He's depressed by the calm, gray waste of the sea. He hates all cold foods, sweets and vegetables. And he hates eating out. Occasionally, when he does, he always overtips.

For some unexplained reason he thinks his natural wavy hair makes him look weak. Twice a month he pays to have it straightened. His mother knits his ties and socks. He never has enough. Steve would eat steak and potatoes for breakfast, only Harriet, their treasured housekeeper thinks, twice a day is enough. He's inclined to be formal, especially at Hollywood parties where everyone is everyone's best friend. Steve loves everyone on the Twentieth lot and he hopes they'll always feel the same way about him. His loyalty is something for the Hollywood book. He claims there's a "bit of elephant blood in me," when he thinks back on some of his early-day treatment.

Recently Mr. Zanuck presented him with a $10,000 bonus, until a salary adjustment goes into effect. To further exploit Steve's versatility, the canny Mr. Z. selected "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now?" as Steve's next starring picture. He'll sing and dance. He's also pencilled in for "High Window," "Methinks the Lady" and "Meteor," future million-dollar productions. If he were triplets Steve couldn't fill all the requests that are waiting for him.

When he was signed at Twentieth, it was Darryl Zanuck who named him Mark Stevens. The inspiration came from Mark McPherson, a favorite Zanuck screen character played by Dana Andrews in "Laura." Steve welcomed this new moniker. As Steve Richards, or Richard William Stevens, his memories were dark and depressing. As Mark Stevens, a whole new happy and successful world had opened up for him. Stars still remain, but only in his screen characterizations will he ever allow them to be visible.

Because he knows if it hadn't been for his dark journey, he might not have driven so hard; might not have repeated time and time again to himself, "I only have five years... I've got to make it."

He's made it, all right, and the journey ahead looks bright, successful and complete for this man you marked against time.

Inking in Crosby

(Continued from page 65) And perhaps, the least said the better on this score. Except to add that the shirts are filed prominently with levis, cowboy chaps, wading boots and skis, alongside the Bond Street stuff in the closets of his Bel-Air home. The mere mention of a tuxedo starts him groaning—literally and musically.

That was Bing's chief worry about whether or not he would win the Academy Award for "Going My Way." The day before the ceremony there was a lot of speculating going on over at Larry's regarding the Oscar. Bing just couldn't lose, people kept telling him. He was bound to win. "Oh no, I can't," he insisted. "Why not?" they asked astonished. "I haven't got a tuxedo," he said.

He has one all right, but it's none the worse for wear.

My job involves breaking the scripts down into wardrobe changes, having artists make sketches of the clothes, and then submitting said sketches to Bing, who usually looks them over, then stamps his okay on them, which is his fingerprint.

However, it took some fast-selling before he fingerprints on one for "The Emperor Waltz." In this picture Bing portrays a salesman who has a phonograph concession in Austria and spends most of the film contriving to sell the Emperor one. In so doing Bing falls for a Countess, Joan Fontaine. In the big "Yodel" number Bing has to wear a yodelling outfit highlighted by some loud green leather shorts.

BING took one look at the Tyrolean trousers and almost reneged. "Say... this material shortage situation must alter getting pretty serious," he observed. He wanted them lowered a little—below the knees. No self-respecting phonograph salesman would pursue a Countess in an ensemble like that, he said. But he finally fingerprinted them in.

It's impossible to get anywhere with Crosby and Hope in any wardrobe conference, to reach any decision about how they'd like to be dressed. It's always an hilarious huddle, with one of them saying, "What dya think about this..." and the other topping with, "Swell... but why don't we..." and you don't come away with anything but laughs. When the clothes are finished, it's even worse. "Why can't I have one like Bob's?" says Bing. Or Hope. "Case Crosby's creation... and then look at mine. What is this anyway? Just a little something left over after Bing's is cut out?"

It's difficult ever getting Hope to stand still long enough to be fitted. Bing is less of a problem... he just doesn't have any fittings at all. After so many years, I can usually manage, but occasionally some unusual situation comes up and I have to call him in. I kept worrying about an Arabian costume he was to wear in "The Road to Morocco" until Bing finally said, "If you're really worried about it, just bring it out to Lakeside and we'll fit it this afternoon."

When the studio limousine bearing the chauffeur, the tailor, various colorful garments and myself arrived at the club, we were told by an attendant that Bing had left word for me to meet him on the third tee. He was just about to swing when I walked up. "Where's the costume?" he greeted. "Bring it on out here and let's fit it," he went on, as casually as though Arabian costumes are fitted on the third hole at the exclusive Lakeside Golf Club every day.

Bing has a great habit of introducing me to some inflated biggies as, "My Pro- ducer, Mr. Cohen, but of course you gentlemen have heard of him." Then he stands back, leaving me to make like an executive and talk important talk.

Once at an expensive resort hotel, Bing spread the word around that I was a champion polo player and a real polo champ standing there keeping me around for days suggesting that we knock off a few 'chukkers.' Having no idea what he was talking about, I always begged his pardon politely and passed on. Finally one morning he made a determined stand. "I say, Mr. Cohen, what about a few chukkers?" he insisted. "Don't be so modest," he went on, as I kept looking blank. "Mr. Crosby has told us all about you. I almost got matched to a world championship before I could finally convince him that I'd never had a mallet in hand.

Many people have often wondered what ever happened to Ra the Second, one of Crosby's horses that achieved favorable fame, and who faded from sight overnight at Santa Anita a few years back. The horse had suffered a slight leg injury previously, but under treatments he was improving greatly, and track talk had him ready to run again. The true story of Ra the Second has never been told... until now. Bing bought him in South America for $22,000, and we sold him to a kid for a hundred and fifty bucks.

The transaction took place on the set of "Holiday Inn." They were shooting a scene using carriages and horses. Bing and I were sitting on the sidelines watching, talking horse-talk that finally led to Ra. Crosby wanted to sell him, but he wanted to be sure he'd never race him again.

He kept watching one of the fellows who was driving one of the carriages. You could tell from the way he handled horses that he understood them. Loved them. Besides, the kid was always talking horses. He owned some interest in a small riding stable, and did part-time picture work.

Bing called him over. "Want to buy a horse?" he said, explaining about Ra.

"What do you want for him?" said the boy, knowing full well he couldn't afford it, whatever it was.

Bing put it all on me. "What do you want for him, Mickey?" he said.

"Why... I do... don't know," I stammered, surprised. "What do you say?"

"You know what he cost us," said Crosby. "We'll him off for what you think.

"Oh... about $150," I said, kiddily."

"Sold!" said Bing. Then turning to the boy, "On one condition... that you never race him again.

Then while the new owner stood there, still unbelieving, Bing threw in a silver bridle and wrote a note to his trainer at Santa Anita, instructing him to "let the bearer have Ra down, the young man became a veteran in the Army. He cured the horse completely in time, and rents him out now for pictures for $50 a day. You saw him in a big role in the Alan Ladd starrer, "Salty O'Rourke." Crosby's a colossal correspondent, in a casual sort of way. His mother always gets notes from him every day when he's away from Bing. He wanted me to have a copy of his letter from Tuscarora, New York, Paris, everywhere. Or he may send an elaborate menu from a French restaurant like the Cafe Chambord in New York, asking what I'd like to order, underlining something like "La Timbale de Pintaudon Garnie au Foie Gras et Truffes Importées," and writing under it, "Or would you rather have a fish?" Once when he was out of town, a strange well-dressed fellow walked into the studio one day with an envelope addressed to me. "Are you Mickey Cohen?" he asked. "I just came in by plane from New York this morning. Here's a letter for you from Bing." On the outside Bing had written, "By Courier."

There's a fast turn-over going on under that peacock-feathered Panama of his all the time. Bing thinks faster in low gear than others who fly around like they're jet-propelled. He has a photographic memory, ear, eye...just name it and he has it. He just looks at a script...and even that isn't always necessary...since he often ad lib his own anyway. Likewise, he seldom even rehearses a song.

He has great respect for ability, and not too much for those whom he personally believes are incapable of jobs they're doing. Yet, I've never known Bing to throw his voice where it can cause any harm.

On one picture Bing had a make-up man he wasn't too happy about, but rather than cause him any trouble, Crosby just put on his own make-up every morning throughout the picture, while the make-up man sat reading "Li'l Abner" in the paper, waiting until he got through. Then they'd walk out of the dressing room onto the set and nobody would be the wiser.

IT'S never in the script, but every Crosby picture opens the same—namely: "Where's the list? Who've we got down this time?" The "list" is a fancy term for assorted names, initials, or memos jotted down on odd bits of paper, song sheets, or whatever handy at the time, and involving people whom Bing is more or less looking out for from time to time. There are some old pals of the past. Could be a friend of his old man at Lakeside, who asked him once to "put in a word for so-and-so." He never forgets any of them, though.

Now the list is made up principally of service men Bing met overseas. Ex-GI's like Ben Nathan, a clean-cut, good-looking boy from the Bronx, who road-toured the cannon circuit with Bing in France, one of an Army crew who set up stages on captured German truck trailers, put up tarps to keep the rain out while he sang, or held flashlights in his face so the GI's could see him.

At night when they were jogging along a muddy French pasture in the weapons carrier, they'd all start talking about things back in the states. What they wanted to do when they got out. Ben thought Hollywood sounded like a good deal.

"If you still think so when you get out, look me up," said Bing.

Nathan was visiting relatives in Los Angeles this summer and sent Bing a note, wondering whether he'd even remember him or not. He called him back immediately, inviting him over on the set.

When he arrived, Bing was in the midst of a big scene. "Bring a chair up for my friend," he instructed. "Put him in the front lines where he can see this camera combat."

When the sequence was finished, they picked up right where they'd left off in Metz. Did Hollywood still look like good duty to him?

"Stick around. Maybe something will turn up," said Bing.

A little later he was on the phone turning it up, and as Sarge soon found himself back in the ETO again. This time in Austria and "The Emperor Waltz."

I could deliver a few thousand more words on similar situations, but I couldn't get away with it. As Bing reminds me, even after fifteen years I can still be erased.

Besides, I'd never be able to get him into another pair of green shorts again.

But you can quote me, here's one model who will never be passe. You may not see him in Esquire, but he's a cinch to be in vogue. For he measures up to the kind of All-American guy who'll always be in style. Your kind. My kind.

Pass me the ink, Pappy.

The End
The Girl in The Outlaw

cured, through her long bob which has about it something darkly electric. She studied her cigarette a minute. Then, with that complete direction of hers, which always comes as a surprise because in all my life I've never known another such beauty to be as direct, she said:

"I'm lazy. The only lazier person I know is my husband. He always says—when one of us is complaining about something we have to do—"Oh well, let's get some done now while we can. Then when we're older we can lie in the sun on our backs."

For years I have numbered among my darkest friends the greatest and the less great stage and screen stars of Hollywood, have I known one as separate and apart from her profession as Jane Russell. With most people there's something contagious about fame and the adulation and wealth it brings. Men and women, once having had it, want so much to hold it that, too often, they give up very easily up to lie.
Not Jane. And I venture to say, never Jane.

When I met Jane after "The Outlaw" was released and there was a great furor over it and her too, I said: "Do you know, you're not at all what I expected you to be."

“Well, I'm what I would expect me to be," she answered firmly.

SUSPENDED above the Hollywood hills today there's a colossal net with giant letters which spell "The Outlaw." Also along the boulevards there are tremendous posters—twenty-four sheets they call them —advertising this film with provocative pictures of Jane. So, naturally, the film colony is curious about her. Quite unexpectedly, not at all with the Dragnet maneuver of Garbo, she has become a mystery woman.

"Elsa," my Hollywood friends say, "tell us about Jane Russell?

I explain she was born in Bemidji,
Minnesota, twenty-five years ago and is a native American because her mother, Geraline Jacobi Russell, formerly a stage actress, moved from E特斯拉, Canada, so that her daughter would be born an American citizen.

Tell them she was named for Jane Cowl, and the only girl in a family of four boys, grew up on her parents' ranch as a tomboy.

I elaborate. I tell how her father, a business executive, died when she was a young girl. She and her brothers, while still in school, formed a family orchestra and played on club and lodge programs.

I remind my friends that Jane went to work as a dentist's receptionist upon being graduated from high school and came to the attention of the agent who recomended her to Howard Hughes through a tooth-paste advertisement for which she posed, as her small model.

Then I came to her love story. I tell how the entire time she was playing Rio, the sultry, half-breed girl in "The Outlaw," her heart and mind were first on Bob Waterfield, her high-school sweetheart.
I tell how often the course of their intense young love didn't run smooth and how, when this happened, Jane was desperate and words of praise from Howard Hughes millionaire producer, promising fame and fortune had no importance for her whatsoever.

My Hollywood friends listen patiently to the biographical chatter and then ask, puzzled, "But Elsa, what is she like as a person? Is she as beautiful off the screen?
What does she want from life? What does she do with herself?" And, even more puzzled, they add, "Isn't her career really important to her? And how does she feel about her sensational advertising?"

It is easiest to describe Jane by quoting Bob Waterfield's teammates and the young crowd at "The Glen." She's a Good Joe. "The Glen," according to Jane herself, "is a little joint out in Beverly Canyon where college kids and local football players go. It's run by an Irishman who went to high with a lot of us. You have to be yourself to get by out there. They don't go for any production. You just sit around and drink coke or beer maybe. There are juke boxes and the kids can play the piano. And sometimes there's a regular piano player and it's fun to talk to the bartender too. He's quite a philosopher."

Occasionally the crowd at "The Glen" used to ask Jane about some star they'd seen in a recent picture. But no more. Jane never had met the star. And they're more interested in football anyway. "All football players ever want to talk about is football," Jane says. "You know whether we made the game and was it difficult? Stuff like that. But when you're around them you get to be as interested as they are.

"Last spring when my friend, Portia Nelson, and I were in Chicago, where I was making personal appearances, we met pretty weary of all the bored people we met—divorced men and bachelors, mostly—of whom wanted to get married and all of whom dragged us to the Chez Paree. That may be all right once in a while if you like night clubs. I don't. Lots of times we said we had a date and went back to our hotel. We had a piano in our room and Portia helped me with my songs.

"Wait until the football crowd gets in," I used to tell Portia. "You'll be able to relax with them.

"Sometimes I thought I might be talking them up too much. But Portia liked them, same as I do.

"It's probably a good thing we had time to work on my songs before Robert came to see me, anyway. He always says, 'Just one thing, Jane—as long as you're doing it, make it good.' He can be hideously critical. So when he came backstage I didn't want to hear his sarcastic, 'That was terrible.'"

Portia's real name is Betty Mae. It was Jane, who recognizes many of her friends, always with names that have more validity and usually more formality than their own names, who first called her Portia. And it suits her well for she's an intelligent girl and articulate.

They met, Jane and Portia, when Jane made "The Young Widow." Speaking of this picture, Jane says typically, "I couldn't have been with Bob at that time anyway. He was in training and wives aren't allowed at camp."

Portia, who plays, sings and composes, was the director's secretary and always, as soon as the company was through with a scene, she and Jane would run to the studio rehearsal room where she would play and literally make Jane sing.

"It's a good thing she did," Jane says. "Because now on personal appearances at least I do something. When they send you out they assure you all you have to do is dress up and get out on the stage and return all the time, and how much you like that particular city. But do this and you feel like a big jerk."

"I'm not too good. Sometimes I came off stage—where Portia waited in the wings—doing this..." She ran her hand down her face in mock chagrin.

Jane didn't want to make that tour. Five shows a day, seven days a week, for eight weeks, when you have no great drive.
or ambition is very hard work.

"But once she let herself in for it,"

Bob Waterfield was in Chicago with Jane for their third wedding anniversary. They celebrated by buying Janes, who was married with the topaz ring Bob had given her the previous Christmas, a very wide gold wedding ring and a bracelet to match. The bracelet is monogrammed. Above all, even in little ways, she is Mrs. Robert Waterfield, wife of a star player with the Cleveland Rams who later on plans to become a coach.

Because Bob had to go on ahead with his team Jane and Portia came home alone.
In Springfield, Illinois, they picked up the new four-door, two-tone gray Packard sedan which also celebrated the Waterfield anniversary. They left Springfield one Sunday morning early, and, driving day and night, with four-hour shifts at the wheel and sleeping in the back seat, arrived in Los Angeles at 2 A.M. Tuesday morning.

"We traveled the way Bob and I travel," Jane explains. "No stopping over. When you're headed for home you want to get there."

Jane frequently has been called domestic. Nothing could be further from the truth. She and Bob are great homemakers.
But there it ends. Neither likes the work true domesticity entails.

"It's fun to get together with Robert sometimes," Jane says, "but I wouldn't want to prepare meals and wash dishes three times a day. And cleaning and dusting—stuff like that—I hate.

"Frances, Robert's mother, spoils me, I guess. She's the kind who goes ahead and gets things done before you know it. Often she has the dinner dishes finished before I even get up from the table. That makes me feel like a big chintz."

"What is a big chintz?" I inquired, feeling more than slightly dated.

She smiled. "A chintz is a guy who asks the woman to break a nickel and leaves two cents and takes back three."

WHEN building restrictions are less limited Bob and Jane will break ground for their own home. Already they've bought their land, on a high knoll overlooking the Valley.

"Frances will be glad, too, I imagine," Jane says. "Crowds of people make her nervous and Robert and I have the hag in a lot. We'd much rather do that than go out.

"We're not going to have too big a place. And there won't be any neighbors.
For if you walk too far from our house you'll off the ground. We even plan to plan our swimming pool for a second tier.

"We'll put in a few flowers and a small lawn—after that we are planting ivy, which doesn't require gardening. You have to think of things like that when you're as lazy as we are."

It is going to be a simple house with living room, den, two bedrooms, kitchen, maid's room, work room and three baths.
That side of the house overlooks the Valley is to be all windows. The dining room will be an alcove one step higher than the living room and face a tremendous freestone set in a stone pit with seats upholstered in buckskin, "sturdy yet not cold as smooth leather," on either side.

Jane, who would have studied interior decorating if she hadn't gone to work as a den's photographer and photographer's model to help her family's fortunes, says,
"I want heavy pieces, carved chairs and tables and a few well-selected antiques.
In the playroom there's to be nothing that can be hurt—a stone floor and even mugs of stone or something as durable.

"The laundry will be a work room too; so I can have fun with upholstery and woodwork. Upholstery I studied at night school and I really can do things."

Her face brightens when she talks of her mother and brothers.

"When Mom sold our ranch," she explains, "she held out two acres; enough to give building lots to Wally, Ken and Jamie. We all figure Tom, who's still in Germany, will stay with Mom. But just in case he marries and fowls up Mom's building a wing on the house where she can live without getting in anybody's hair."

"Ken, who's out of service, is married. He and his wife both are going back to school. So don't ask me how they're going to build a house and buy a car. But they'll manage. Ken's always been the money maker in the family. When he was in the Navy he wrote Mom for pictures of me that he could sell aboard ship."

"Wally's still in high and Jamie, who's just a kid, but huge, is in the Merchant Marine. He's spunky too. The other day he complained that he was tired of sitting around. So they made him a boatswain and he shipped out of San Diego in command of a lot of older men. He called Mom up and said, 'Hey, pray for me, will you. So I don't flunk.'"

When I asked how Bob reacts to the sensationalism that has colored her advertising, her face clouded. "He complains sometimes. But I always say, 'Oh, that again!' He knows I can't help it. And most of it really isn't any worse than the stuff you see on calendars. As for the picture itself, there's one shot I don't like—where I lean over the bed. It's ridiculous. It makes me uncomfortable and it must make audiences uncomfortable too."

The Waterfields however have little time to fret over problems beyond their control. When Bob isn't playing football he likes to hunt deer and doves. Jane aims at improving her collection of orchids, and there are fishing trips. Jane, loathing fishing, never goes in the boat. During the hours it's away she sits on a rock and dreams . . . not of new glories, not of ermine or orchids, not of the flash bulbs of photographers—but of the house she and Bob will build in the Valley. For it must be a good house; one that later on will run smoothly on the income she and Bob will have as they lie on their backs in the sun and there are little Waterfields to be educated and fed. Jane hopes there will be three. An ideal American family.

Ladd Adds Up

(Continued from page 41) Springs the night they first met, Kay beat Alan and accepted a humble check from him in consequence. Now Alan Ladd is a boy who doesn’t like to be beaten at anything. It wasn’t the money and it had nothing to do with always wanting to be best. But a challenge was there. So much of liked Kay to play a return match when they returned to town. The Kysers came over one evening and Kay beat Alan even worse than before.

The Ladds and the Kysers have been keeping up the social score ever since. “When Alan and Sue first meet you they’re shy and watchful,” Kay explains. “After their first match they’re much of each other again, or they like you and loosen up like a stack of chips in an earthquake. But Alan has never beat me in gin rummy. It’s a game with him. I call him my Number One Pigeon.”

And with that you leave Kay for there are several people you must see if you are to get the full measure of Alan Ladd. His former teacher, Mrs. Gray; Irving Pichel, who has directed many Ladd pictures and, of course, Sue Ladd.

You find the Ladds at home, at ten in the morning. This is the large brick house just off Los Felix Boulevard that Sue has had for years and which they are keeping until Alan can complete his new one. There is no activity throughout the house. That clatter from the kitchen area is Georgia, the cook, in her Florida mood. The pork roast is too small for last-minute company. The high, clear voice of the nursery wing is Alana who, having put her doll to bed with phonograph music, has found a chocolate and consumed it,—what she did not leave in her eyebrows,—without asking permission. Her nurse, Kathleen, cannot justify this behavior in the slightest,—I didn’t!...Oh, yes you did! I didn’t! I...d-i-i-dn’t!

A slim, brown-haired girl of about twenty-five comes trotting into the room where you are waiting. She is crying. She observes you, gasps, blows her nose, turns and runs out again. This is one of the few girls in America who can express a volcano-flush of fan mail; and she has just this minute told a hopeful chap she wouldn’t marry him,—over long distance. Feminine voluble coming from the hall, coming. After a moment Sue Ladd comes in, dressed in a stunning black housecoat with silver initial medallion down from shoulder to waist. Her big brown eyes are warm with tears. The secretary’s crisis has been shared. A maid brings coffee.

At the beginning of your second cup there are Specialist sights on the stairs and Alan comes in. He’s going to the ranch so he’s wearing loafers and white sweat socks and buttonancies of the long-tight on a helipless figure. His shoulders are crowded somehow. Down the stairs and that faultless coat by a famous shirtmaker out of common white terry cloth. He is the color of good luggage, the top of his hair is bleached almost white by the sun, and your immediate thought is that he could do him justice.

Your next thought is that he is wearing a gun. You point at it. “That’s if I want to wear a hat at the races,” he says. “Just got the permit today.”

“Indians or wolves?”

“Snakes,” he puts on a grim look.

“Sends,” he never killed a thing in his life. Everything animal on the place is a pet already. They’re all going to multiplicity endlessly and Alan will give them names and there’ll be no place for any of us.”

ALLEN’S FOOT-EASE
For a while you talk houses—the Ladd's current problem of the plot of land covered with lumber and equipment upon which building of the new house was just about to start when Alan suddenly looked at the plans and decided they were no good. Whom to hire to make the revision? And where to get pipe for the ranch pasture? Alan stands up finally, gives Sue a kiss on the forehead and takes off. It is now nearly lunch time anyway so you and Sue decide to grab a quick sandwich in the amusing little breakfaser. Alan comes down and wants to sit at the table too, and does, looking like a miniature Alan Ladd with soft blonde curls and thoughtful eyes and an outburst lower lip.

SUE begins to talk, lazily but with deep insight and with a studied attempt at detachment. This is a courageous effort, she is obvious so aching love in him that she would just like croon praise. "People say success hasn't changed him," she begins. "Ah, but it has. When I first met Alan he was an essentially unhappy guy, tense and nervous and often miserable. He'd had a pretty rotten time of it, you know. He's still nervous, but controlled—and he's developing a better sense of humor than ever.

He's still moody; I like that. You can pin him down to dates, although when he has to, he's punctual. "He lives on impulse. He has a dozen ideas for enterprises, business deals—and then he drops them. He's come to realize that he can get them darned good—he's completely impatient about getting them finished, and once they're done he's bored. Something else has to be started. He won't let this house be alone, for instance, which is silly because we're going to sell it in a few months. But what can you do? He keeps saying, 'We oughta relax,' and all the while he's charging up and down the room, pacing like a tiger.' Sue, a soft, inherently relaxed person, talks for a time about his being too sensitive for his own good—not asking for passes when he was in the Army for fear people would think he was trading on his name. His love of a good argument, and the several times it has got him into trouble. His insistence on details being perfect, but his dislike of bothering about them himself. His easy-going disposition high-lighted by sudden bursts of temper: As when he darkened his hair for the role of Raven in 'This Gun for Hire' and afterwards the studio insisted that he keep his hair dark. 'Blond men don't go over in pictures,' they said. But he said simply that if he had to go through life dyeing his hair he'd rather skip the whole thing.

She mentions his instinctive good taste, his really amazing understanding of others' problems, and she laughs softly as she speaks of Alan's delight when as a Father's Day surprise she told him that December will bring a new little Ladd—a boy they hope! You watch her and you have a sudden conviction that she is a genuinely happy woman. You tell her this and she looks at you wonderingly for a moment. Then in she makes a little gesture at Alan's photograph. "Why wouldn't I be?" You have already noticed the inscription on that portrait. It reads, "For my wife, from whom I will never be apart, count her that man. May love and life be ever Alan.

Reluctantly you leave Sue for your next stop which is a big stucco building on Beverly Boulevard with a neon sign on it: The Dicksboro. You park around the corner and go in, and even before you ask at the desk you know the gray-haired woman with the perky hat over there on that lobby sofa is Mrs. Gray who taught drama, probably, with English and history on the side. She has a lovely blue eyes for it, and the voice. She taught all three to Alan, when he was very young and still a student at North Hollywood High. Usually there is nothing duller than to talk to an ex-teacher of a current movie star, but Mrs. Gray is special because she has stepped out of the role of mentor into that of close personal friend to Alan. This happened because, several years ago, someone mentioned that young Alan Ladd was working as a grip in a studio. For reasons p. be drug later, Gray got pretty upset when she heard that. She sat down and for the first time (and the last) wrote a letter to an ex-pupil. In it she balled him out for possibly an act, after which he considered a genuine talent, and showed courage. The letter worked. Later, when “This Gun for Hire” was released, Alan called at her school and asked her to the studio. Since then they have been like a favorite aunt to the whole Ladd family.

Mrs. Gray’s concise, edited sentences tell you a remarkable number of things about Alan, to those who first met him. (In the ninth grade.) He was a good actor, was one of those intelligent responses that gladdens a teacher’s heart. That he was a scrapper. That he joined her Shakespeare group and excelled in it. She’ll tell you how she dropped in on a dance one night, and saw Alan and a tall blonde walk away with the dance contest and win their fourth cup in a row.

SHE cast him as Koko in the Mikado, too, after she had discovered that light baritone of his. And she knew about his family. Her family—how he started as a painter, was ill so much that Alan had to leave school periodically to wash cars and carry a paper route and do other odd jobs—not for spending money but because otherwise there wouldn’t be bread on the table at home. Apparently there wasn’t always enough, as it was, because although Alan was hard as nails and the school’s swimming instructor, he developed in his years a troublesome stomach that is still with him and which was even the cause for his leaving the Army.

“It was nothing but short sentences,” Mrs. Gray will tell you. Recently he’d told her why he never let any of us at school know about conditions at home. He said simply, “I couldn’t do that.” And of course he couldn’t.

You will yet want to have a word with Irving Pichel (who has directed several of Alan’s pictures including his latest, “O.S.S.”) and with some of the people he has worked on films, who tell you about Alan is not new, although nonetheless sincere. They say he is fun to work with, painstaking, thoughtful; that, since he has become so popular, he has worked harder than ever of doing a little, that he really is one darn good actor.

Adding him up, finally, one picture of him stands in your mind above the other. He is on a hospital tour, and after one show before an assembly of patients, during which he suffers his usual agnies of shyness and really contributes very little, he is asked if he might be spared some time to leave to bed, chatting with the fellows individually. And as he does this his poise returns and he is at his best. The hours go by, and the rest of the troupe, having completed its three shows for the day, leave for the hotel for dinner. But Alan stays on, and only when they close the wards does he catch a cab and make the hotel.

The troupe manager meets him in the lobby. “You can’t keep this up,” he tells Alan. “You’ll beat yourself out.”

And Alan says, “Are you kidding? That’s the only way I can give them anything. So that’s the way I’m going to do it.”

Being Alan Ladd, that’s the way he does it.

THE END
The Shadow Stage

From This Day Forward (RKO)

A FEW adroit tricks up the director's sleeve turns this average story of the trials and tribulations of marriage into a picture with a punch.

Joan Fontaine and Mark Stevens take a look at Joan's sister's married life, complete with scrupling brush, children and frustration, get scared, get courage and get married anyway. The old pattern sets in: Mark loses his job, the pennies get a pinching, despair starts looking in the window. Then comes the war, merely an interlude in the film, and the aftermath which brings a new chance.

Joan Fontaine does an excellent job of turning herself into part of the ordinary flotsam and jetsam. Mark Stevens is an arresting newcomer in a quiet way. But what holds the picture together is the characterizations by Joan's film family. Each of them (Henry Morgan, Wally Brown, Rosemary De Camp, Queenie Smith, Arline Judge, Renzy McEvoy, Bobby Driscoll and Mary Trien) offers a performance of artistic precision; the whole is a picture that belongs in a prominent place on your movie calendar.

Your Reviewer Says: Let's go!

Two Guys from Milwaukee
(Warner's)

THIS one you can take or let strictly alone, depending on how fond you are of the team of Morgan and Carson. It is a harmless little offering in which Dennis Morgan plays a visiting Balkan prince who decides to see America straight as a guy from Milwaukee. He exchanges some formal receptions on velvet carpets for a pick-up pal, Jack Carson, also from Milwaukee, a date with Jack's Joan Leslie and a few enlightening glimpses of the side of New York one does not see from the royal suite at the Waldorf.

The date with Joan offers the complications, rather tortuous ones, that wind up in an ambitious climax that leaves the audience feeling that this could never happen here anyway, so what's the difference? Carson and Morgan, Joan and Janis Paige all play around together with a wealth of good feeling; S. Z. Sakall as Count Oswald is certainly worth his weight in gold.

Your Reviewer Says: No ill feelings.

Little Mr. Jim (M-G-M)

JACKIE JENKINS's freckles and homely ability make this a movie worth your time. As the small son of Army Captain James Craig and wife Frances Gifford, he gets to teasel little girls and endears himself to his audience.

This is a story that might easily have become maudlin but, to its great credit, never does. The major event in Jackie's life is a new minor—a promised baby that he discovers has great bartering value among the female juvenile crowd. But instead of the new baby, he finds that his mother has gone away, never to return; that his father has turned into a strange remote person; that his old bullwork is the Chinese servant, played with a perfected touch by Chingwah Lee.

It is a pleasant "no-pen" film that evolves into a storybook ending too good to be true, but no one's going to complain. In fact, everyone will be happy about the whole thing.

Your Reviewer Says: A pigtailed paradise.

ANNA AND THE KING OF SIAM—20th Century-Fox: An unusual fairylike story of an Englishwoman who becomes an integral part of the Siamese royal family. Irene Dunne plays the schoolteacher who comes to the palace of the King of Siam to teach his harem and is soon at home in the oriental world and culture. Harrison turns in a fine performance as the King. (Aug.)

AVALANCHE—FRC: Bruce Cabot, sleuth from the Treasury Department, arrives at a ski lodge to discover the gaps in the income tax of a gambler. Then snow slides look in the guests at the lodge and murder begins. Should it have been more exciting, but the cast, including John Smith, Helen Mowery and Veda Ann Bore, do their best. (Aug.)

BEHIND THE MASK—Fox: Another of the Shadow series, with Kane Richards as the playboy detective who, with the aid of Barbara Reed, is out to find the killer of a blackmailing columnist. Why the ubiquitous Shadow succeeds in baffling police and criminals alike is beyond the power of George Chandler and Dorothy Keane to confuse the issue with their shenanigans. (July)

BRIDE WORE BOOTS, THE—Paramount: A slapstick comedy that’s supposed to be very funny, but unfortunately not even the expert presence of Bob Cummings, Barbara Stanwyck and Diana Lynn can make sense out of this silly story. Barbara’s faces under makeup don’t help and their quarrels lead to a divorce over Diana Lynn, a Southern siren who tries to get Bob for herself. (July)

CLUNY BROWN—20th Century-Fox: An absolutely lamb of a movie, with Jennifer tashful as the housemaid with a flair for plumbing who goes to work in the English home of Reginald Owen. Charles Boyer is the rough with a humorous disdain for England’s cutie system. Richard Haydn is the portrait of the village chemist, and Peter Lawford is Owen’s son in love with Helen Walker. (Aug.)

DARK CORNER, THE—20th Century-Fox: This is the first in what is to be a series of stories with suspense and good acting that you really won’t care much who kills whom or why. Mark Stevens, who plays the private eye, makes a sure bid for stardom. Lucille Ball is so right as his secretary, Clifton Webb is a sophisticated art dealer jealous of his wife, and Knut Kreuger and William Bendix is excellent as Webb’s dumb gumshoe. (July)

DEVOITION—Warners: This brings to the screen the touching story of the four famous Brontes, Charlotte (Olivea de Havilland) who wrote “Jane Eyre.” Emily (Isa Lupino), author of “Wuthering Heights,” the poetess Ann, played by Nancy Coleman and drunken painter Bramwell, Arthur Kennedy, Paul Henreid is the curate whom both Isda and Olivia love, but his Viennese accent seems out of place in a Yorkshire village. (June)

DO YOU LOVE ME?—20th Century-Fox: If you belong to the swooner set, the answer to the picture’s title is yes, as it has Harry James’s hot trumpet and Dick Morton’s singing. The fragile plot deals with the metamorphosis of Maureen O’Hara from the dainty, demure girl of a school of classical music into a glamorous woman who’ll knock your eyes out. With Reginald Gardiner. (Aug.)

DRAGONWYCK—20th Century-Fox: Strong melodrama with current Price as the eccentric owner of Dragonwyck, a house of horrors. Innocent countryside girl Gene Tierney comes to the house as companion to the nightmarish bride-to-be, and remains to fall in love with Price. When his wife dies, the two marry, and then sinister developments result. Glenn Langan is the doctor who also loves Gene. (May)

EASY TO WED—M-G-M: Van Johnson sings, dances, makes love and even shoots ducks in this delightful comedy that begins when Van agrees to help投标 man Woman out of a life suit by making love to Esther Williams, the beauty who’sying. Lucille Ball is Keenan’s girl friend and Celie Kelly is her sister. Van tries to impress by his shooting. (July)

Gilda—Columbia: Embattled gambler Glenn Ford goes to work for George Macready in his South American gambling casino and the two become fast friends. Then Macready returns from a trip with a new wife, Rita Hayworth, the girl whom Glenn loves. The exciting melodrama then moves through a maze of German castles, Argentine police and jealous lovers. You'll be fascinated by it all. (May)

Green Years, The—M-G-M: A long and lavish dramatization of the A. J. Cronin novel about a middle-class Scotch family that is forced to raise a young Irish grandchild. Charles Coburn, as the great grandfather, has the role of the year. Tom Drake is the Irish lad, and Don Stockwell, Hume Cronyn and Beverly Tyler all contribute some fine acting. (July)

Heartbeat—RKO: Jean Pierre Aumont should have picked a better picture than this weak and unbelievable one to mark his return to the screen. Ginger Rogers is the reform-school graduate who takes up professional thievery, is dressed as a debutante by Adolphe Menjou in order to lure diplomat Aumont, who of course is completely taken in and falls in love with her until he learns her past. (June)

Herd of Dogs, A—M-G-M: This picture, directed by Vincente Minnelli, is one of the few; distinctive productions from this studio in recent times. Elizabeth Taylor, who has been on the screen for a few years, now stars, as a girl who has the kind of personality that makes many pictures. (December)

Taylor murders him and his well-planned alibi throws suspicion on Virginia. (June)

SO GOES MY LOVE—Universal: Interesting and often tenderly illuminating little incidents in the courtship and marriage of inventor Don Ameche and Myrna Loy, who's frankly looking for a husband, enliven this charming, romantic picture. Richard Carlson is the suitor Myrna becomes engaged to until she proposes to Ameche, marries him and tells him on to success. Women will love it. (June)

SOMEWHERE IN THE NIGHT—20th Century Fox: Another mystery thriller with John Hodiak as the amnesiac victim whose only friend in the world seems to be a criminal, newcomer Nancy Guild, as the girl who aids John, is amusing to look at but can't supply enough more inestimable acting to make the charm of the convincing sister, only to find that the shy one is the real love. Dane Clark as the artist and Charles Ruggles as the cousin are both excellent. (Aug.)

SPECTER OF THE ROSE—Republic: An original, strange love story of the ballet, which will either move you deeply or leave you completely untouched. Despite the fact that Ivan Kupala is suspected of murdering his first wife, ballerina Viola Essen marries him, and they dance to triumph in a new ballet. Both players are vivid new personalities, and you'll also see Judith Anderson and Michael Chekhov. (July)

STOLEN LIFE, A—Warners: Bette Davis has the time of her life playing a dual role of sisters, one good and one bad, and she does both with astute perception. Glenn Ford steps into big-league movie acting as the man who succumbs to the charms of the conniving sister, only to find that the shy one is the real love. Dane Clark as the artist and Charles Ruggles as the cousin are both excellent. (Aug.)

STRANGER, THE—International: Tense and dramatic, this psychological mystery film, is adult stuff. Glenn Ford is the escaped Nazi, who in the disguise of a professor is living in a small Connecticut town. Loretta Young is his American bride. Slowly forced to realize what her husband really is; Edward G. Robinson is the investigator on the trail of Wells. (Aug.)

SUSPENSE—Monogram: A lavish ice revue is the setting for murder in this excellent production. The revue is owned by Albert Dekker and stars his wife, Beila; and all goes well until Barry Sullivan becomes manager of the show and makes love to the star. Suspense mounts when Sullivan's former girl, Renee Glory, begins to expose his past. (June)

TABARZAN AND THE LEOPARD WOMAN—RKO: Tarzan, played as usual by Johnny Weissmuller, and Brenda Joyce get involved with the Leopard Man, a strange people with a stranger code, and one thing happens after another with a fast pace. Acasta plays the high priest of the Leopard Men and her machinations keep the plot developing. (May)

TILL THE END OF TIME—RKO: A candid picture, rich in sincerity, of the adjustment of three families by the simple love of one man. They are Guy Madison who comes back to a loving mother and father; Bob Mitchum who finds some roots; Bill Williams, who has lost his legs. It is also the story of Dorothy McGuire, a young widow whose life is dedicated to her. (Aug.)

TO EACH HIS OWN—Paramount: A tear jerker all about frustrated motherhood. Most women will love it. During World War II, Olivia de Havilland falls in love with doomedlier John Lund, bears him an illegitimate child and faces the tragic necessity for the baby to be reared by her friend, Mary Anderson, who marries Olivia's ex-suitor, Phillip Terry. (July)

TWO SISTERS FROM BOSTON—20th Century-Fox: When Kathryn Grayson heads for an operatic career via a New York burlesque house, her prim sister, Countess Maurica, comes to the family is a burlesque, and Geraldine Page, who plays one of the sisters and Lauritz Melchior, plays a grand opera star. It's sprightly and gay and you'll love it. (June)

WELL GROOMED BRIDE, THE—Paramount: There are all the techniques in daughter's wedding, but Olivia de Haviland has the last bottle in town and is determined to use it for her wedding to Army Lt. Sammy Tufto. James Gleason and Louise Post are the choice Dwellings. (September)

WIFE OF MONTE CRISTO, THE—PRC: Cops and robbers in satin breeches and flowing capes. When chief of police John Loder sets a trap for the person who is murdering his brother and helps the husband of the Count of Monte Cristo, Martin Kosleck, is forced to get out of town; and his wife, Loretta Young steps into his shoes and carries on the raids. (June)

WILLIAM AND MARY—Warner Brothers: Claudette Colbert is the stuffy author who experiences all sorts of emotional upheavals on her way to Hollywood, but Cary Grant is the Marine captain whom she decides to cast in the screen version of her book, and you'll be enthralled by both of them. You'll also love Don DeFore, who plays Capitain to the principals in this light, gay, frothy comedy of romance. (July)

In the files of the Dubarry Success Course are thousands upon thousands of true success stories, but none more remarkable than that of Dorothy Mullins of Danbury, Connecticut.

Dorothy was 34 years old. Only five feet tall, she weighed 215 pounds. Deeply sensitive about her size, she had long been resigned to what she thought was her lot in life.

Several times Dorothy had tried so-called reducing diets, but none brought results. Then she began to hear about the Dubarry Success Course. She sent for information. The Course could be taken at home — that was important. So she enrolled.

Dorothy was advised first of all to go to her doctor, have a thorough physical examination, tell him what she planned to do. With his approval, she started. She lost 8 pounds the first week, 31 pounds in 6 weeks. In six months, she went through the Course four times — lost a total of 87 pounds. Accustomed to wearing a size 44 dress, she found she could slip into a 14.

In spite of all this weight loss, Dorothy's skin is smooth, her body firm. She has learned to care for her complexion, to do her hair becomingly, to use make-up properly. Starting under a great handicap, she has made herself an attractive woman, with a good figure.

"Gradually," says Dorothy Mullins, "it is dawning on me that my life's dream is coming true. It's as if a new world had opened for me. Never, never can I thank you enough."

Of course, the case of Dorothy Mullins is unusual. Few women need to lose 87 pounds. But her achievement offers convincing proof to countless other women that a few pounds will not lose that they need not be weight. Dorothy Mullins has emphasized that a quarter of a million other women have happily discovered — that the Dubarry Success Course is a plan that really works. It can help you achieve your ideal weight, having a figure you're proud of, have a smooth, glowing skin, learn glamorous make-up, look better, feel better, make the most of yourself. And you can enjoy this plan at home — at a cost so low it will surprise you. You follow the same methods taught by Ann Delafield at the famous Richard Hudnut Salon, New York.

Why not at least find out what the Course can do for you? The coupon will bring you full information.

LIZABETH SCOTT has two distinguishing "trade marks"—lovely, thick dark eyebrows and a low, vibrant voice that seems to come from deep within her. It's an unusual voice, and completely natural with this tall and tawny blonde of the lithesome carriage...

The best way to attain a lovely voice tone, she thinks, is to know how yours should sound, naturally, and then try to improve it. With practice, she feels, you can inject a richer, friendlier quality into your voice. This improved way of speaking soon becomes a habit...

She believes in unplucked brows, except for removal of straggly hairs. Using a tiny brush and a little eye cream or oil, she nightly brushes her brows...When making up, she brushes the brow hairs up, then with the brush tip shapes a neat line and arches them across the top. Lizabeth likes using a dark brown mascara on her lashes.

Other outstanding Scott qualities are her vitality, gracious handling of people, and liking for outdoor fun, which adds sparkle to her beauty and personality...

Before our nine-thirty to ten A.M. appointment in her Gotham Hotel suite was over, other Interviewers and photographers arrived. It was to be another busy day for the girl who plays the good-hearted vixen in Paramount's "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers." The day before she attended her first professional baseball game and is now a Brooklyn Dodger fan. She proudly displayed a baseball autographed by the players. "The attitude of ball players is astounding," marveled Lizabeth. "They're heroes, really, but so charmingly casual and modest. I wanted to say to them all, 'you're wonderful!'"

In answer to our admiration for her smooth make-up job, she confided she applies cake make-up with a sponge and cold, instead of warm, water. When dry, she lightly pats cold water over it to take away any powdery look, and to make it stay fresh looking, longer.

Glamour Glossary

... for the beauty-minded—in which six little words turn up with special dressing-table meaning

Comb: Something a girl keeps to herself
Borrow or loan this item and you're in for some beauty trouble. A comb is a personal possession and if you're careless enough not to stick to your own, you may end up with an unhealthy scalp. Dandruff and infection travel along merrily with borrowed combs; keep yours strictly personal; keep two of them so that one is always fresh from a hygienic bath.

Gesture: What makes or breaks you
You can use your hands and arms as adroitly as Dorothy McGuire. Gain flexibility in your hands and arms this way: Swing your arms in circular windmill fashion from the shoulder. Now extend your arms with palms of hands towards the body and shake your hands vigorously. Then stretch your arms sideways from your shoulders and drop hands from the wrist, then raise them slowly.

Wave Set: A soft touch
A bit of this applied to your mascara brush instead of water will do wonders in the business of seeing that your mascara goes on gently without caking and stays on in a silky satisfying way. It looks and acts nice on the hair-brush too—just for a quick disciplinary measure for wind-blown curls.

Flour Sack: What your face should look like ... only immediately after powdering, of course, while you're still at the dressing table. The point of this is that most women are stingy with their powder. Plaster it on till you have that flour-sack look, then brush off the excess. Joan Leslie uses a baby brush; you can use cotton, too. Your foundation absorbs the surplus into the pores; your make-up is even, gives you an even break by lasting longer, looking lovelier.

Underskin: An undercover agent
This can wreak havoc with your face. Lying directly beneath the outer skin, it needs care, too, lest the oil glands and tissues start drying out, in which case you'll have that fatal gray look. Be on your guard as efficiently as Olivia de Havilland: Keep your underskin in shape with massage, spend at least fifteen minutes a day rubbing soft creams through to that layer of skin underneath. Keep-in-mind item: Kitchen salt mixed with cleansing cream and used about twice a week will leave you a pink-cheeked pretty.

Sitting: A standing beauty order
Slumping comfortably feels good, looks bad, may endow you with a double chin. Watch the way Anne Baxter sits; then mark this up as a must: Your spine must always be rigid, shoulders squared, head up. Pretend a string is attached to the crown of your head, drawing it up and back. A pencil placed at the back of the neck should be straight with the neck from shoulders to hairline for a perfect-posture pose.
First come... first served with BEAUTYREST MATTRESSES!

1. Yes... they're here again, BUT...you'd better hurry! So many people want them, there simply aren't enough luxurious new Beautyrests to go around.

   Remember, nothing means more to your comfort than a good mattress. So order the best—a Beautyrest!

   P.S. If your dealer can’t supply you right away, please be patient. You’ll get your new Beautyrest soon.

2. “Inside tip” about comfort: In the ordinary inner-spring mattress (top) coil springs are joined together, go down together, forming uncomfortable hollows.

   But Beautyrest’s 837 coil springs are independent, not joined together. Each separately cushions your hips, shoulders, legs... gives you gloriously buoyant comfort!

3. How long will it last? With an ordinary mattress, you never know. But with Beautyrest’s Guarantee, you’re sure!

   Beautyrest does not sag or lose its shape. Its border stays neat, firm, resilient. 8 ventilators help keep it fresh and dry.

   That’s why Beautyrest comfort is guaranteed for at least ten...yes ten...full years!

4. No question about quality! No—not when you’re buying a Beautyrest!

   The same fine construction...superb tailoring...supreme comfort Beautyrest offered before the war are yours again. In fact, the new Beautyrest is as luxurious as ever!

   So see your Beautyrest dealer as soon as you can. Remember, first come, first served!

GIRL: Okay, Cupid. What could the pumpkin teach me? How to be a pie?

CUPID: How to be a Mantrap, my dateless darling. To smile. Don't you know what even the plainest girl can do if she's got a sparkling smile?

GIRL: Sure. If she's got a sparkling smile. But what happens to me, when I brush my teeth, is a smile full of no smile.

CUPID: And “pink” on your tooth brush, perhaps?

GIRL: So?

CUPID: Listen, my airy friend, that “pink” happens to be an urgent warning to see your dentist! Let him decide whether it's serious or whether it's simply a case where today's soft foods have been robbing your gums of exercise. If so, he may very well recommend “the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage.”

GIRL: Ipana. Massage. Dentist. So what's about the smile you were talking about?

CUPID: Precisely why I am here. Sparkling smiles call for sound teeth. And sound teeth for healthy gums. And Ipana's designed not only to clean teeth but, with massage, to help gums. Let your dentist decide whether you need this famous dental routine—gentle massage with Ipana after you brush your teeth. Check on it, Cinderella...and start on a smile that'll have you “man-haunting” come Hallowe'en!

We're overflowing with excitement about "Undercurrent". It's several days since we previewed it—and we still haven't shaken off the spell of this amazing new M-G-M romance.

And it baffles us to find words that convey to you the moods, the lights and shadows, the unusual that make "Undercurrent" such a rare and exciting motion picture.

But let's try. We'll begin with Katharine Hepburn. She plays a girl of innocent and haunting beauty—her acting is dramatic quicksilver; one moment completely gay, the next serene in her love, then filled with terror at the unknown threat that hovers over her life.

And forgive this irrelevancy—she wears such attractive clothes with such wonderful grace that we predict untold millions of envious sighs.

Then, of course, there's handsome Robert Taylor and anything we could say about his performance in "Undercurrent" would be an understatement.

"Undercurrent" is not only the best possible vehicle for Taylor's return to the screen, but it is also the picture in which he creates—believe us—one of the most sensational male roles in film history.

We won't tell you exactly why we think so—it would spoil the suspense of the picture—but we know you'll agree with us when you see Bob as the brilliant young tycoon whose life is haunted by a strange and disturbing dread.

Robert Mitchum and all the cast have been chosen with rare dramatic judgment to give "Undercurrent" its starting quality.

A special commendation goes to Edward Chodorov for his powerful and imaginative script, based on a story by Thelma Strabell.

And to Pandro S. Berman who produced it, and Vincente Minnelli who directed it, our thanks for a truly daring and memorable film.

Yes, we were swept away by "Undercurrent". You'll be, too.

—Leo

Swedish hop: Rare shot of a rare occasion when Ingrid Bergman and husband Dr. Peter Lindstrom go Macambo-ing Round-up: The Frank Sinatras are expecting their third child and couldn't be happier... Clark Gable with Joan Crawford causing necks to crane at the California Cabana Club opening... Hollywood agog over David Selznick's attack on a photographer at Mocambo who was actually snapping Shirley Temple... Jimmy Stewart stagging it to parties to the dismay of the beauties who don't dream where his heart really lies... Warner Brothers not only extending a welcome-home hand to Jeffrey Lynn, after three years in the service, but trying to find a home for the actor and his bride Robin Chandler... The stag line forming at the right since Vera-Ellen's divorce... James Mason's illustrations in his wife's book 'Ignoramous' eagerly awaited by those fans who became Mason addicts after "The Seventh Veil"... Donna Reed and husband Tony Owen adopting their second child.

Headliners in step: Old friends Joan Crawford and Clark Gable exchange current items at California Cabana Club

Around Town: Richard Ney attended the Arthur Little Jr. party for the first time without his wife, Greer Garson (who was working), and danced every dance . . . Betty Grable and Harry James driving down Sunset Boulevard each in separate but identical fire-engine red Cadillacs . . . Zach Scott and Robert Sterling at The Players for dinner because their wives were golfing at Del Monte . . . INSIDE STUFF

Set of the Month: The picture is "The Late George Apley"—the director, young and handsome Joe Mankiewicz whose directorial chair is marked "Old Timer" because Joe is the youngest director—writer-producer in the business. The cut-up and comedian of the set, one Mr. Ronald Colman, has Edna Best in such stitches she can hardly finish the scene while we watch from the sidelines. The cast is constantly under the sway of the Colman humor. We report with awe that he is enormously funny at times. And Mr. Colman doesn't know it yet but when shooting is finally over, that cigar he smokes throughout will be gold-dipped and made into a paperweight as a gift from the cast "to a fine gentleman with a keen sense of humor."

"My hair is all wrong again," Richard Ney complains. Seems Richard goes home for lunch and a dip in the pool which leaves his hair damp and clingy.

Mala, the only Semitic-Eskimo of our acquaintance, is assistant cameraman and eighteen-year-old Vanessa Brown, a former Quiz Kid, is playing Ney's girl friend. Very quietly Mr. Mankiewicz cautions Peggy Cummins anent her British accent. When it becomes too noticeable, the director calls out in broad American "Broth-er" and Peggy knows.

There's a happy relaxed air about the set that promises a fine picture.

We Nominate: For bubbling, unspoiled good humor—Celeste Holm because she cheerfully signs Ann Sothern's name to autograph requests when fans constantly mistake her for Ann. And never once does she complain.

For uncomplaining sportsmanship—Richard Haydn who is left to wash up the tea things on "The Late George Apley" set every day and neither complains nor balks. (Continued on page 8)

Are you in the know?

When you don't know the routine, would you—
- Try it anyway
- Say your feet hurt
- 'Fess up frankly

Why lumber through a rumba—or spoil a jitt-bug's "shine"? If you aren't hip to the step, say so. 'Fess up frankly. Droons rush in where smoothies fear to tread. But at "certain" times, there's one fear a smooth girl can forget (with Kotex): the fear of telltale outlines. That's because Kotex has flat tapered ends that prevent revealing outlines. And you can dance the hours away in comfort, for Kotex is made to stay soft while wearing.

For camouflaging freckles, do you—
- Take the cake
- Apply lemon juice
- Wear a dotted veil

Freckle-heckled? To camouflage the summer's sun spots—take the cake (makeup, that is) and apply with wet sponge. Blot surplus with a Kleenex tissue; blend well with fingertips while damp. Then let dry—and you've got 'em covered! It's easy, when you know how. Like keeping dainty on problem days. You'll know how to stay dainty, charming, when you let Kotex help. For the best-loved actor in Hollywood—Jimmy Durante who has a good word for every actor, is jealous of none, is first to applaud talent, no matter how little and speak an encouraging word to the discouraged.

For the most outspoken—Dane Clark who will lose friends and position to speak the truth as he sees it. Dane likes people for what they are rather than who they are and fears no one.

Turner-Hughes: The very plane that almost caused Howard Hughes his life and wrecked a beautiful Beverly Hills home when he crashed into it was the one thing that stood between the marriage of Lana Turner and Howard Hughes. Repeatedly Lana begged Howard to permit someone else to test the plane. "I have a bunch, Howard," she said. "Please, please don't do it."

The wedding date had been set and all was ready, but the plane had not been completed at that date and Howard would not leave for a honeymoon until after it had been tested. Several times all arrangements were made and the plane was still unsatisfactory. Realizing his work meant more than their future together, the couple decided to remain the close friends they had previously been and still are rather than marry; Howard refusing to give up his dangerous testing.

Lana proved right in her hunch and while she made no show as did some others of crashing the hospital, she suffered acutely over the fate of her friend. This Cal knows.

Yippee: A trek out the Valley to old Republic, home of those hard-riding, sweet-singing cowboys, disclosed the good news that despite all "that court lawin'" against this studio, Gene Autry intends to go right on making Republic pictures. Gene felt Roy Rogers and the new lad, Monte Hale, who made outdoor films in color, had been publicized too much while he was in the service. He was afraid the public would grow weary of too many singing cowhands. But something must have changed Gene's mind for he'll go on making the kind of films his fans love.

INSIDE

Over There: A cheery letter from Bill Eythe in England is like seeing London itself. Bill tells of visiting all the historical places—Poets Corner, the Abbey, Shakespeare’s home. Seems on his off days Bill takes a bus to a treasured historical spot and then slowly walks home through the city, missing nothing. Production methods are different there, he tells us, with actors being consulted on scripts as to changes, etc. The question his fellow workers ask most often is: “Is it true American production methods are streamlined like a factory output?” Bill didn’t tell us what he answered but we judged from his letter England could bear with a little snappier production methods.

Hurd Hatfield, also abroad, is the envy of every Frenchman in town. Jean Pierre Aumont or Boyer would have given anything to play in the Renoir picture Hurd is making in Paris and in French, too. Hurd is living at the George V and having himself a whirl.

Jeep Jolt: There was an odd twinkle in Mark Stevens’s eye as he stood in Cal’s doorway. “Ready?” he asked. We were ready but not for the vehicle that stood at our door—a tan jeep with a matching top and two seats. We bounced up the twisting roadways past Mary Pickford’s home, with Cal’s head bobbing and teeth rattling as the jeep hipity-hopped its way to the Stevens home. Mark had bought the jeep only a few days before and was like a kid with a new toy. Annelle, his charming wife, laughed as Cal practically fell apart getting out of the thing. We had come to dine with the young couple and to report to you that Mark and Annelle have our nomination for the couple most like you or the young couple next door. They live in a charming but cozy home far enough away from downtown to seem another world. In order to have an extra room for their expected
No other shampoo leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage.

Shimmering, lustrous hair, whether dark or fair, always strikes a responsive masculine chord. And to be sure that your hair is at its gleaming, glamorous best use Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action. “Hair that is satin-smooth and alive with all its natural lustre is one beauty asset I'll treasure for keeps,” says lovely Magazine Cover Girl and Drene Girl, Jean Lord. “Here are my favorite hair styles. Try them at home or ask your beauty shop to duplicate one after you next Drene Shampoo.” No other shampoo, only Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action leaves your hair so lustrous, yet so easy to manage!

THE RIGHT NUMBER is Jean's day-time “do”... her bright Drene-lovely hair arranged in this simple center-part with shining-smooth turned up roll. “Never let dandruff spoil the sleek beauty of your hair,” warns Jean. See how Drene removes unsightly dandruff the very first time you use it.

JUST THE RIGHT NOTE to draw admiring glances... charming Jean Lord's Drene-lovely hair gleams in upswept flattery. Because Drene is not a soap-shampoo, it never leaves any dulling film on hair as all soaps do... actually reveals up to 33 percent more lustre! “And,” says Jean, “It's easy to keep shining curls and rolls in place when you use Drene Shampoo with Hair Conditioning action.”
Introducing Beverly Tyler who's size nine and nineteen—petite and pretty example of . . .

THE Triumphant TEENS

BY SARA HAMILTON

Beverly, of "My Brother Who Talks to Horses"

SHE'S nineteen and talks incessantly of the time when she was young. After "The Green Years" audiences everywhere talked of Beverly Tyler who played the Scottish sweetheart of Tom Drake and invariably referred to her as "young." It has her painted. After all she's been with M-G-M for four years and, as she points out, that makes her a veteran—an earnest red-headed, green-eyed veteran who is rapidly recovering from frustration, shyness and an inferiority complex.

Sunday school, she believes, is a good starting place. Beverly's singing in the Methodist Sunday school choir in Scranton, Pennsylvania (where she was born) so impressed the singing coach, Mrs. Earl V. Tolley, that she took her to New York for extra coaching with Frank LaForce.

In no time Beverly had a singing role in a soap opera, thus gaining valuable experiences. With a chum on the program and her parents, she was walking down Broadway one day when her young friend urged her to go into the Loew's building and contact the M-G-M people. Beverly thought it a lot of nonsense but decided to take the chance. Perhaps it was her indifference, or perhaps fate, but two minutes later Beverly was singing for Mr. Marvin Schenck and ten minutes later, to her bewilderment, was asked to make a test. She made it, was signed and with her mother went to Hollywood. Later her father, an executive with a typewriter company, had his business transferred to the coast and joined his family.

For three years she sat at "the children's table" in the M-G-M commissary and sulked. Every other child on the lot got a chance but Beverly who had the odd misfortune of being a mature looking thirteen. She regularly attended classes in the studio school room with Virginia Weidler, Elizabeth Taylor and other students, studied voice and ballet in the afternoons and in the evening returned to the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Warren G. Saul (Beverly's real name) to storm about the other kids getting all the parts.

At sixteen her chance came and, armed with Mr. Mayer's reluctant consent, she and her mother took off for New York and the musical play "The Firebrand of Florence" with Beverly singing the lead. The show lasted little more than two months but from the experience she emerged poised, sure of herself, no longer resentful and quite a dish. So much so that the studio did a quick double take, ordered her to acquire a Scottish accent overnight and test for "The Green Years." She made it with colors and red curls flying. And to prove she's not so young despite those nineteen years, she's now playing Tom Drake's wife in the atom bomb picture—and "so there," she adds.

SHE'S an only child and thinks maybe it shows. Claims an only child has a certain independence of manner that could be mistaken for snootiness.

One knows somehow she'll never falter from this point on. She has no car and like millions of others is waiting for that promised new model. Meantime, she uses most of her spending money on taxis.

Languages, because of her music, was her favorite study. And when she completed her M-G-M high-school course at the age of sixteen she joined the graduating class of the Los Angeles High School to receive her diploma.

She's happy about her potato complex. She doesn't care for them or too many sweets. Which may account for those size nine frocks which she selects herself.

She's waiting until she can afford the real thing before she wears jewelry or fur coats. She's sensible about most things, dates her "Green Years" co-star, Tom Drake, doesn't care for night life and never expects to. She's waited too long to get places and nothing will interfere with her and study—until the right one comes along, that is—she adds.

Scranton, of course, is right proud of their native daughter and when "The Green Years" opened in New York, over a hundred of them traveled down for the opening. She thinks maybe the force within, which keeps her studying and practicing, may be because of those back home who believed and encouraged.

★ To a man, Americans agree that Luscious is the word for Lana...also Lovely, Liltsome, Luminous and Alluring.

★ For your information, the "Lana" portion of her identification tag is strictly an added starter. Born in the mining town of Wallace, Idaho (which proves that's gold in them thar hills, brother!), she was abundantly christened Julia Jean Mildred Frances Turner. She tossed out four-fifths of the nomenclature when she went into pictures.

★ Fame came unexpectedly to Miss Turner as she was languidly sipping a chocolate ice-cream soda in a drug store across the street from Hollywood High School, where Lana was a student at the age of sixteen. A friend of Director Mervyn LeRoy, who knew beauty when he saw it, spotted her at the fountain. The rest is history. Two weeks later she was playing a top role in "They Won't Forget".

★ Lana's ultra-dynamic qualities are really evident on and off the screen. She's a confirmed window shopper, an avid record collector, an expert stylist and loves dearly to drive fancy roadsters—preferably those painted red.

★ If you're interested—and who isn't—she is five-foot-three, weighs a well-distributed 110 pounds, looks out at the world through soft grey-green eyes and still loves chocolate sodas above all others.

★ Her most recent screen appearance was with John Garfield in M-G-M's "The Postman Always Rings Twice". Her next role will be in "Coutette", famous story of young love in the deep South. Add a lilting Southern accent to luscious Lana Turner, and the result is bound to be a memorable screen treat!

made with SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Peaches or Apricots

Looks good! You bet it does! It's real, too. No fancy painting this! No-siree! It's a real portrait of a pie, photographed just after the whipped cream finish went on!

And it's as good as it looks. A pie you can really get excited about!

SUNSWEET Peaches and Apricots are always in season... and always full-ripe with the fine rich flavor that only full-ripe fruit can have. You can't dry green fruit or half-ripe fruit to SUNSWEET quality. It has to be full-ripe. That's why SUNSWEET Peaches and Apricots make such fine-tasting pie. And that's why you should always look for the name SUNSWEET on the package.

They're rich in vitamins and valuable minerals, too. "Tenderized" for quick-cooking. Sealed in foil for perfect protection. Packed and guaranteed by the growers themselves.

Your grocer has 'em or can get 'em for you.

HOW TO MAKE IT

Rinse and drain 2 1/2 cups SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Peaches or Apricots. Add 3 cups water, bring to a boil, and continue boiling about 20 minutes. Add 1 1/4 cups granulated sugar, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons butter, and 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon and bring to a boil again. Add 4 tablespoons cornstarch moistened in 1/2 cup of cold water and cook and stir about 3 minutes. Pour into baked pastry shell; cool. Decorate with whipped cream and additional cooked, sweetened SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Peaches or Apricots. Serves 6 to 8.

SAILORS TAKE A VOTE

The Bogarts teamed in "Big Sleep"

I read with interest the article on Lauren Bacall by Humphrey Bogart in your June issue, continuing the discussion of Miss Bacall's so-called debacle in her second released film and her much-discussed future as a screen personality. So I determined to write and say a few things.

During the war, on our ship—a rocket firing LSM (R) with a crew of eighty-two—we viewed such films as "Saratoga Trunk," "My Reputation," "Rhapsody in Blue," "The Animal Kingdom" (which is now "One More Tomorrow") up to a year and a half before their general release in the States. Among these previews we were lucky enough to get "The Big Sleep."

Out of a total of over 150 films that we showed on our ship, there were very few films that they received with more enthusiasm than "The Big Sleep." I wish I had been shown "Confidential Agent" on board; if only to prove to myself (I have not seen it) that it was as poor a picture as we were reported.

Soon after we had seen "The Big Sleep" I read in a Los Angeles paper that there was a great problem at Warners over Miss Bacall and that they were considering re-shooting a lot of "The Big Sleep" before releasing it to the public. All the fellows agreed that it had one of the best-written scripts, was one of the most interesting, fast-paced and smartly directed mystery films we had seen—and it was expertly acted by just about everybody involved. Not only is Howard Hawks a clever director, but he works well with Miss Bacall who is one of the most effective and interesting personalities in the motion picture business.

Mr. Bogart says that there is no idea that Miss Bacall is a great actress. Since very few screen actresses, even themselves, would claim to be great actresses, this is certainly no criticism of Mrs. Bogart, and he is absolutely right in saying that she can be a top-flight screen personality. She will require special treatment, but so far as "The Big Sleep" is concerned, I know of a good audience, now almost all civilians again and scattered over the country, that hack me up and say there is no need to worry. Get it out on screens and see if we aren't right!

Sincerely,
DAVID MALLERY,

A reliable guide to recent pictures. One check means good; two checks, very good; three checks, outstanding.

Sister Kenny (RKO)

Sister Kenny was a remarkable woman; this film of her life is no less a remarkable motion picture. It has the power of simplicity, the dramatic punch of realism and the finished touch of some excellent acting by Rosalind Russell and Alexander Knox. The facts behind the film are well known: An Australian nurse's discovery of a new treatment for infantile paralysis and her lifelong fight to get that treatment recognized by orthodox medicine. Rosalind Russell plays Elizabeth Kenny, makes her lovable as the young ambitious nurse, admirable as the fighting middle-aged woman who gives up marriage to Dean Jagger in an effort to help the stricken children of Australia, symbolic as the aging humanitarian who comes to America, after England has turned down her plan, in search of official recognition of the Kenny treatment.

The battle between the careful investigation by medical circles of a new treatment and the courageous work of pioneers in that treatment is well presented; Alexander Knox as Dr. McDonnell, believer in Sister Kenny, is outstanding. This is a film that belongs among the best of the year.

Your Reviewer Says: A superior stand-out.

Blue Skies (Paramount)

Fred Astaire's marvelous dancing reaches its peak in this nostalgic Technicolor musical featuring Irving Berlin's haunting melodies. The long skirts of twenty years ago cannot take away the charm and gaiety of the picture's mood and teen-agers will laugh as heartily as their elders at Fred Astaire and Bing Crosby in their song-and-dance-man routine. The plot is told in story form with Fred Astaire, as radio raconteur Jed Potter, turning back the pages of their lives in the hope that he can bring his friends Bing and Joan, who have been divorced, together again. Bing, as the restless night club owner, was never in better voice. Joan Caulfield, heart interest for Fred and Bing, is beautifully decorative. Olga San Juan as Nita Nova, Fred's cute and capable dancing partner, and Billy De Wolfe as Tony, Bing's funny-man-Friday, establish themselves as newcomers to be remembered.

And for the dancing climax there is the insinuating rhythm of the "Heat Wave" number.

Your Reviewer Says: A technicolor treat.

Notorious (RKO)

WRAPPED up by Hitchcock and delivered by competent Ingrid Bergman, Cary Grant and Claude Rains, this story of intrigue south of the border comes through as something to talk about. It gets off to a slow start: Miss Bergman is the daughter of a traitor but is a patriot at heart; she is reformed from a drink-and-be-merry life by secret agent Cary Grant and sets off with him to Rio to b-h a government agent. Love comes flying in the plane window and in a week's time is there to stay. This haste is necessary, since romance is but a prelude to the real plot, a humdinger that keeps you edging forward on your seat until the last episode, a classic in suspense.

There is no attempt at too much window-dressing; thanks to good direction and good acting, the picture is played quietly without too many heroes on the part of Grant or too much melodrama from the villains. As a result, the film gains in authenticity.

The Bergman technique is tops; Grant does his more or less routine job well. Claude Rains turns into a bad man with complete ease, but we will admit it is somewhat of a shock to see that gentleman, usually the noble square-shooter, perpetrating such a horrible deed as he does in this one.

Your Reviewer Says: Get ready, get set, go.

"Oh, she's a Blonde and can get away with it!"

MAYBE a blonde can get away with it for a little while... but a brunette—never! Those telltale flakes and scales show up all too plainly and people begin whispering "infectious dandruff" and draw away.

Look Out, Lady!

If you have the slightest evidence of infectious dandruff—flakes, scales, or itching—better start at once with the delightful treatment that has helped so many... Listerine Antiseptic and massage. Make it a part of your regular hair washing routine.

Remember, infectious dandruff is nothing to fool with... and women as well as men can contract it.

Kills "Bottle Bacillus"

Early and regular Listerine Antiseptic treatment may often head off the infection or relieve its severity. Here's why:

Listerine Antiseptic gives the scalp and hair an antiseptic bath. Right away it kills millions of "bottle bacillus" (Pityrosporum ovale), the ugly little germ that many a noted dermatologist looks upon as a causative agent of infectious dandruff.

It's Easy... It's Delightful

There's no mess, no bother, no smell, no grease about the Listerine Antiseptic treatment. It's easy... it's delightful... and you simply have no idea how fresh, clean and exhilarated it makes your scalp feel. You will be delighted also, to see how quickly embarrassing flakes and scales begin to disappear.

Get in the habit of using Listerine Antiseptic as a part of your regular shampoo. It pays.

The Strange Love of Martha Ivers (Wallis-Paramount)

EVEN though you probably wouldn't want to meet any of the people in this story of unbalanced emotions in a small town, there is suspense—plenty in their lives and you'll sit on the edge of your seat as you watch the tale unfold.

Van Heflin is a hardened veteran who picks up a girl, Lizabeth Scott, gets thoroughly beaten up by thugs and comes back for more in an effort to discover why his childhood girl, Barbara Stanwyck, and her politician husband, Kirk Douglas, want to get him out of town.

Lizabeth Scott convincingly plays a probationer from jail seeking companionship and love in a world that has almost defeated her. Barbara Stanwyck reaches great dramatic height as the town's wealthiest woman who holds a lifelong criminal secret over her husband's cringing head. In his first screen role, Kirk Douglas proves himself a fine understanding actor, able to hold his own with such veterans as Stanwyck and Heflin. And Van Heflin's return to the screen is an auspicious one.

Judith Anderson is seen briefly as Barbara's aunt, as is Roman Bohnen as a scheming tutor. One of the year's most dramatic juvenile spots is cinched by young Janis Wilson, who plays Barbara as a child, while Darryl Hickman and Mickey Kuhn are two other youngsters who make the most of their early parts.

Your Reviewer Says: It's powerful stuff.

Monsieur Beaucaire (Paramount)

THIS is Tarkington burlesqued by Hope—in a racing, romantic coach-and-four setting; and it turns up to be a Bob Hope special. For those who like his brand of comedy, this will be a life-of-the-party treat; for the non-Hopers it may end up just with a "silly picture" rating.

M. Beaucaire, a barber from the court of Louis XV of France, is forced by some "it may mean war" circumstances to impersonate the gay court playboy, the Duc de Chandre (Patric Knowles). The impersonation is strictly Hope; the situations give him plenty of opportunities to be the... big brave coward, the naive know-it-all, the comedian par excellence. In a scene where he, as the Duc, is presented to the Spanish court as the prospective bridegroom of the Infanta, he turns every trick of his trade, leaves his audience roaring up their sleeves. As a pretty French wench, Joan Caulfield complies with the first adjective superbly; the Spanish princess, Marjorie Reynolds, flirts coyly from beneath her Spanish veil; Joseph Schildkraut is a competent villain in lace cuffs.

The action steps drollly along, the lines keep up a fast pace; Hope's buffoonery is unrestrained.

Your Reviewer Says: If you like Hope, you'll love it.

✓✓ They Were Sisters (Rank-Universal)

THIS is James Mason at his sadistic best. It is the portrait of a man whose dark moods leave a sinister effect on the lives of three sisters who belong to an average upper-class English family into which he marries.

Sterned by the beautiful one of the three, he sets about to win and wreck the gentle sister, falling the efforts of the strong sister to bring him to justice. The only person to evoke warmth from him is his eldest daughter who, interesting to note, is played by Pamela Kellino, Mason's wife in real life.

The children give excellent, touching performances and Dulcie Gray, as the gentle sister who turns to drink for escape, is most convincing. Her gradual deterioration is at no point overdone. The dialogue has sparkle and the story high suspense.

Your Reviewer Says: Dark—and handsome—bundle from Britain.

✓ Claudia and David (20th Century-Fox)

THE chintzy atmosphere of life on a suburban farm is spread cozily all over this new episode of Claudia and David, that young couple who, through the deft portrayals of Dorothy McGuire and Robert Young, have won themselves a coterie of sentimental fans.

With enough complications to keep the action moving along at a graceful pace, this installment finds Claudia getting jealous of David and his business client, Mary Astor, and David getting jealous of Claudia and her new-found friend, John Sutton. There are no dishes thrown, but all the more fun for everyone, since the marital pros and cons take the form of some typical verbal scenes that get knowing chuckles from both sexes in the audience.

Something big is bound to happen to break up the happenings—and it does, in a sequence in which Dorothy McGuire comes through with a fine bit of restrained acting. Bertha and Fritz, Julia and Harvey are there, of course, but it is to the McGuire-Young team that hats are doffed for making this a neat homey picture well worth some front-row attention.

Your Reviewer Says: Two make a two-check marriage.

✓ The Cockeyed Miracle (M-G-M)

TAKE your choice of the words in the title for this one: If you don't like seeing the hereafter interpreted in celluloid, you may call this slightly "cockeyed"; if you enjoy a bit of fanciful caprice you'll go for the "miracle" side. Executed with a light touch and in the finest of taste, this has Frank Morgan and Keenan Wynn as two "spirited" gentlemen who wander around through walls having themselves a grand time observing their human counterparts and blowing up big storms when necessary.

Morgan takes leave of the world and his wife and children to meet up with his own father—dapper Keenan Wynn in topper and cane. Before they ascend the heights, Morgan feels he has a few earthy matters to clear up—his financial affairs and the romance of his daughter, Audrey Totter, in love with absent-minded Richard Quine.

The two of them make a fantastic team that has fantastic results. Humor your sense of humor and go have some fun.

Your Reviewer Says: All in good spirit.

✓ Caesar and Cleopatra (Pascal-UA)

STRICTLY in the limited-appeal category, George Bernard Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra" comes to the screen in much the same manner as Shaw's other epics. Claude Rains plays a bald-headed conquerer in toga and laurel wreath, given to dashing off philosophic remarks; Vivien Leigh, looking too thin to be true, is the young Cleopatra whom Rains teaches to be queen.

The settings are perfection; every detail of the period is meticulously observed; nothing is spared to let color have full sway. In fact, the production is reputed to be the most expensive Britain has ever made.

Coming to Egypt, Caesar finds Cleopatra and her younger brother contending for the throne; throws in his weight on the lady's side; and after his short stay leaves her in possession of the land of the Nile. The lines are spiced with Shaw, the historical characters portrayed faithfully by Rains and Leigh. The main trouble is that for the last half of the picture the action becomes static.

Your Reviewer Says: Shaw plus Caesar and Cleo.

✓ Home Sweet Homicide (20th Century-Fox)

USUALLY screen mysteries are guaranteed to produce the goose-pimple, hair-on-end routine, but this does nothing of the sort. It will, rather, give you a look at three little hellions—Peggy Ann Garner, Dean Stockwell and Connie Marshall—as they try to solve a neighborhood murder. Their deductions are sometimes amusing, sometimes a little boring, but the film constitutes a fresh slant on the who-dun-it side.

Since mother Lynn Bari is a writer of mystery stories, the small fry have their ammunition ready as soon as the shots are heard—allibis, hidden suspects and mysterious manila envelopes fall in and out of their hands in a fashion that has detective Randolph Scott and co-worker James Gleason realistically scratching their heads.

No great effort is made to arouse suspicion or heighten interest—the picture rests in the children's hands. At times they're capable of carrying it; at others, they obviously need a bit more outside help to turn this into anything but a half-hearted attempt at good entertainment.

Peggy Ann Garner's past performances should get her a better role than this.

Your Reviewer Says: Toy-gun murder stuff.

Mocambo glitter for Diana, of "Easy Come, Easy Go," and fiance, Henry Wilson

Diamond on her finger

Diana Lynn tried it on for size "just in case . . ." Then she thought over its engaging effect . . . and put it on again

ONE evening Henry Willson, one of Hollywood's more eligible bachelors, dropped in at a theater to see a picture called, "And the Angels Sing." It seemed a pretty routine affair to him and he occupied himself mostly with analyzing the screen personalities who were engaged in it. That is his business. But he was familiar with most of the faces and with the abilities of their owners, so that wasn't much fun, either. Then suddenly It Happened. A flower-like girl of sixteen or so had floated across the screen. Henry sat up. He says now that he "felt funny." He knew who she was. Her name was Diana Lynn and he had seen her in another picture some time before, only he hadn't "felt funny" that time.

His professional attitude melted to a mere button and he found that instead of wondering about her acting talents he was trying to guess her qualities of loyalty, humor, intelligence, breeding . . . He didn't, he discovered, want to cast her in a picture. He wanted to know her.

But a still stranger thing happened to him just then. As assistant to the president of Vanguard Pictures, Inc., he is often called upon to assist in casting important parts in pictures. So he knew that if he should telephone Diana's studio, Paramount, he would have no trouble at all in getting an interview with her. Suddenly this routine procedure seemed "obvious" to him. So he began a series of the most devious maneuvers to try to (Continued on page 134)

The Editors

I, who for thirty years have been campaigning for the public and the rights of our movie fans—those loyal movie-goers whose enthusiasm for motion pictures has made Hollywood as we know it possible—am now going to take the other side. For the first time in my life I am going to shake a finger of warning at certain of you. If I don’t, you who really are in earnest in your devotion to Hollywood stars will suffer the consequences.

I am not criticizing those movie-goers who write letters of appreciation and are sincere in their wish to obtain photographs and autographs of their favorites. How could I criticize the kindly friends who, while I was so seriously sick, sent me thousands of telegrams, cards and letters of good cheer and hope for my recovery? I know
A frank and frightening appraisal of the violence that is forced upon the stars, with a plea in their behalf to end it that, in addition to my fine surgeons and excellent nurses, it was the good wishes and prayers of my friends that saved my life.

I am attacking the peculiar form of mob violence that seems to be spreading across our nation like a virus, breaking out wherever movie stars appear. Never have I had any sympathy for ungracious actors and actresses who isolate themselves and refuse to pose for photographers, or to give autographs to sincere admirers, or to be seen by curious and friendly fans. But I am, here and now, taking the side of all the stars who have suffered at the hands of those reckless and thoughtless others who in some instances have actually inflicted personal violence.

I want to cite some actual cases of what happens when people let themselves be caught up by this disease. I believe they should be publicized in the interests of those of you who are real friends of the movies and who must be as anxious as I am to prevent such occurrences in the future.

Take Mark Stevens, for example. He is not sufficiently well known to have been the victim of the disgraceful demonstration of a few weeks ago. What happened to Mark is a (Continued on page 115)

HOLLYWOOD is like a rapidly growing child. Turn your back on it for a day or a week and it changes. So you can imagine what happens in six months. Or can you?

Frankly, I wasn't prepared for some of the changes I found when I returned this year. But it was fun finding them nonetheless.

What, for instance, was the big social event of the summer? Was it an affair for a visiting rajah from Hyderabad given by the elite in the hanging gardens of Brentwood? Not by a long shot! It was the Cinematographers' Ball given by Hollywood's crack cameramen at the Cocoanut Grove. And a heartening sight it was to see these artists of the lens come into their own! For years they've battled Hollywood's unwritten caste system, rarely mingling with stars and executives socially. Now it's their day. And that was their night. For the elite were there, all right, but strictly by invitation. I might even add there was considerable vying for bids.

MAXWELL

Darryl Zanuck and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. took me in tow. Shirley Temple was there. And Jim Stewart. Even Hepburn, who is usually camera-shy, posed willingly while Grady Metro's casting director, beamed, "See, Katie, it doesn't hurt!"

Towards the latter part of the evening there was a blare of drums and Errol Flynn, borne in upon a palanquin, portrayed that great poobah, The Cinematographer of the Future. It was a palatial throne borne by four black "slaves." Over Errol's head, like a blinding umbrella, were flash bulbs. To add a modern touch—Flynn wore a tuxedo and there was a sign, "Quiet! Genius at Work." Fun, of course, it was. But it was also significant of how the cameramen are taking their place.

Hollywood's changed many ways besides photographers' parties. There's the new ice cream parlor on the Strip, Wright's, with the picture window looking out on Sunset Boulevard and the stars standing in line for the double rich sundae specials.

There's the brand new Cabana Club, a huge new beach (Continued on page 128)
T was a cold, drizzly morning in early May. At La Guardia Airport, a group of us huddled together anxiously watching the clouded sky. Suddenly, the whir of motors was heard and a Pan American Constellation winged its way toward the landing field. Exactly seventeen hours after it took off from England, landed in New York—ten minutes late.

There were twenty-six passengers aboard—all members of London's celebrated Old Vic Repertory Theatre, but for everyone waiting, the focal point of interest centered on two people—Vivien Leigh and Larry Olivier. As they disembarked Vivien came first, looking beautiful in a Paisley snood that framed her classic features and wearing the same mink coat that she had worn when she had left New York six years ago. Larry followed, grinning from ear to ear. And then a lovely thing happened. As if a switch had suddenly been turned on, the sun came out in all its brilliance. It seemed to say, "This is a very special day. Welcome back!"

Six years. It was hard to believe so much time had elapsed since that May afternoon in 1940 when they left. Now that they were here again, it was as if they had never left. Yet, how much water had flown under the bridge in that interval! The war—and Larry, a Sub Lieutenant in the Fleet Air Arm. Vivien, spending gruelling months entertaining the troops in the embattled Mediterranean area. Their home in Chelsea blitzed, but luckily not to the ground, nor when they were in it. Blackouts, ration points, food shortage, clothes coupons, no petrol, buzz bombs and debris. Was there ever a lifetime before this? And then, miraculously, civilians again, and back to work, conscious of the gap left by rows of wooden crosses. Larry shooting "Henry V"—ten months of exhaustive effort to make this masterpiece which he directed, starred in and produced against the odds of wartime restrictions and hazards. Vivien, shooting "Caesar and Cleopatra," working nine tedious months under the same handicaps but relieved of the personal responsibility that was Larry's.

Hollywood beckoned via cable and transatlantic phone. "Come back. Write your own ticket. Why stay in London now? In Hollywood, the only 'blackouts' are on the stage of the El Capitan Theater. There is no rationing of anything—including 'hams.' You only stand in line for movies and nylon's."

The cheery, colorful cottage at Pebble Beach on the Monterey Peninsula is Greer and Richard Ney's pride and delight.

Greer, a redhead with a "green thumb," is the star of "Sacred and Profane"
GREER GARSON was having the afternoon off because George Cukor, the director of “Sacred and Profane,” had been taken suddenly ill.

It was a particularly exquisite, hot, late-summer day. The French doors were opened, out of the gracious Garson drawing room, which is all antiqued woodwork, low green velvet-covered couches and flowers. From its cool depths, you could look out through those open doorways, onto the garden greenery and the flower borders and watch the golden leaves from the sycamores spiraling lazily down into the swimming pool. Occasionally you could hear the swish of a limousine, going by the high hedges: to some other swank spot in Bel-Air, but that was the only sound that disturbed the lazy quietude.

Greer was wearing a very simple white cotton wash dress and her hair wasn’t “set” but rayed out on her shoulders in wilful, natural curls. It was unusual to see her when she wasn’t groomed to the teeth, and the effect of it was not to make her less beautiful but more so. That was because there was a relaxation about it, a relaxation that was reflected in her sensitive, highly emotional face, and in the atmosphere of her home, and as I was soon to discover, in Greer’s very spirit.

“You should have been here an hour earlier,” she said. “We were all in the pool then—mother, Richard and I. Now they two are dressing quite properly—they’re naturally natty, anyhow—but I...” She spread her expressive hands and grinned from the (Continued on page 137)
The younger with wings in his eyes, now a star in "The Razor’s Edge".... John Payne
His father, his home, his dream—all were gone. But a minister and a flier named Slim told John Payne how to barnstorm until he hit his course.

By Maxine Arnold

Young John Payne stopped digging for arrowheads to watch a small speck in the far distant sky. He stood up in the freshly-ploughed field, one hand over his eyes, squinting. Getting bigger all the time. No doubt about it. This was no hawk. It was an airplane. The barnstormers must be heading South for the winter again.

The speck was now about over Mill Mountain on the edge of Roanoke. In a few minutes it would drift onto the field near the Payne place. The pilot would be tying it down to a fence post, covering the engine with canvas for the night. Folks would be gathering around, asking questions. Making big plans to go up for a five-dollar ride—ten dollars for a double one—the next day. John had the five dollars but his Mother wouldn’t ever let him go up. She was afraid of the big wobbly “kites.” When he got older . . . maybe.

Once a flier had let him “try out” his cockpit, sit in the plane. He’d laughed as the excited little boy with the flushed face and dimple in his chin ran a hand speculatively up and down one canvas wing. You had to know what they were made of if you were going to build them. And he was going to build them. Build bigger, faster ones that would go eighty . . . maybe one hundred miles an hour!

Too excited to go on unearthing arrowheads, young John ran off across the field to the Payne home, a picturesque red brick Colonial mansion with white pillars, set in a grove of walnut, oak and boxwood trees, some of them 150 years old.

WHENEVER a fellow calls me for a date, I know he likes small blondes. If he didn’t, he wouldn’t have called me in the first place, so even if it’s a first date, I start off with a big advantage. But I always say a first date means nothing. It’s the second and third and fourth dates that show how you rate in the boys’ private phone books. I think to be dated once and then dropped would be simply excruciating.

Fortunately it hasn’t happened to me yet. Of course, I’ve been helped by having a pair of wonderful sisters, one older and one younger than I am, and a mother who is out of this world for realizing that fun is fun and everybody wants to have lots of it. Mother never set any arbitrary age limit on when we could begin going with boys, no “you must be sixteen and home by nine o’clock” or any such routine. She trusted us and we loved her and told her everything we ever did. So even when I was attending Beverly Hills High, I got around the soda fountains and the juke boxes.

But when I got into pictures, three years ago, I was really worried. I’d heard so much about the movie colony men—what wolves they were, what heartbreakers, and how terribly, terribly spoiled.

I’ve dated a lot of them now—David Rose, Bob Hutton, Rory Calhoun, Vic Mature, Bob Stack, Frank Lattimore, Farley Granger and quite a few others, and that’s (Continued on page 95)

It will afford his pretty blonde wife the opportunity to take a crack at a co-starring role with him away from the distracting influences of the screen capital.

The picture they are going to make during the voyage is "Treasure in Yucatan." Flynn said that his father, Theodore T. She has learned—to lead with her heart—to be herself—to keep on searching for, and finding, happiness

BY JOAN CRAWFORD

THE thing that everybody remembers about me, if they are aware of my existence at all, is that when I started in Hollywood I was a fat, dumb girl who was making hey-hey while the California sun shone.

Today, because I'm not fat, and am a little less dumb and because I'm fortunate enough to have an Oscar to stand on my drawing-room mantel, nice people come to me and say, "Joan, tell us what you've learned."

That embarrasses me and I'd not be saying one word if it weren't that I get so many letters begging for advice from girls as lost and bewildered as I was at sixteen and seventeen.

Then I go out to a Hollywood party and I meet some of the starlets coming up in this industry and I see them banging their heads against the same stone walls that bruised my head.

Don't give me any of that talk about youth's being the time when you are happiest. It isn't true. Youth is when you suffer. I know. I suffered in my teens. If you are in your teens the chances are that you're suffering too.

It is because of you that I'm consenting to say the things I'm going to say here.

I want you to know that you can be exactly as happy as you want to be.
You can do it. You yourself. That much I've learned.

That and the other important thing.
You can create your own happiness.

There's the challenge of a queen in the new Joan Crawford, star of "Humoresque"
WHEN we “kissed the boys goodbye” a few years ago we really let our hair down—and too often it was stringy. The college girl wins the diploma for starting her high-school sisters on flying shirrtails, ill-fitting blue jeans, sloppy Joes and dirty saddle shoes.

During a tour of American cities which I made last year I saw thousands of such girls. Always, however, there would be two or three smart girls and invariably I found they asked the most interesting questions.

I met one girl who stood out like a queen. Her skirt was trim with an even hemline, her hair brushed and shining, her sport shoes polished. She wanted to know how I thought she should do her hair, what I suggested in the way of lipstick tones. Aware that I came from Hollywood, she quite frankly, but charmingly and courteously, set out to get all the information she could.

Shirley Temple is another smart girl. I have never seen Shirley badly dressed or mannered. (Continued on page 100)

Young man very much on the beam is Glenn Ford, who rose to fame on the rough-and-tumble route. These two pictures symbolize his flight to the stars. At the top you see his name among the stars on Glenn's signet. This marked the start of Glenn's stardom—in theaters across the nation—and across Glenn on the roof of this self-same theater in Santa Monica where he used to wield the arc light on preview nights!

At that time he used to dream that one day the soaring searchlights would herald to the entire planet the name of Glenn Ford.
Glenn Ford... gallant guy of "Gallant Journey"
One man—and a horse to work out! Glenn groomed steeds of stars when he wanted to be groomed for stardom himself. This was one of varied odd jobs.

Perhaps the oddest of his jobs was as master mariner—aboard a bait boat. It was a great life, riding the waves, lunch on the pier, but he longed for the smell of grease paint indoors.

Closer to his dream was the time he put in at the Miles Playhouse in Santa Monica. Besides acting he built sets and did the janitoring in the morning.

A scout tested him, got him into "Heaven with a Barbed Wire Fence." "Dropping Gwyllyn, I made a name for myself out of Dad's home town, Glenford."
Columbia signed him and he made many pictures, including “So Ends Our Night,” before going into the Marines where he excelled on the rifle range.

Love danced in. Ford met Eleanor Powell, wed her two years later on a ten-day Marine pass, had a magical honeymoon in San Francisco. This sort of thing often leads...

"We fall over each other—and we're still living out of trunks and boxes. There isn't any place to put anything—including ourselves." She thought a moment trying to come up with at least a shred of silver lining—and finally a big smile broke triumphantly through. "Anyway, my cracker box boasts a stall shower. That fascinates the baby. She stands under it for hours and pretends she's showering or rather she did. This morning I turned the water on."

Did she like it?

"We were not amused," she laughed. "The water made such a weird noise on the shower cap it frightened her. Or that's what she led me to believe. You never know. She's the worst little ham!"

BY HERB HOWE

In a Hollywood restaurant actors and writers sat entranced forgetting food and drink. Like hypnotist's subjects they were thinking hard. They were thinking up names for Danny Kaye's baby, booked for December. Danny himself ate nonchalantly. Having devoured a lobster, who had made the mistake of arriving in overcrowded Hollywood, he chose "Christopher" for boy, "Stephanie" for girl, subject to okay of Madame D. Kaye whom he polls every day on the question. Then he broke the spell by singing "Happy Birthday to You." Georgia Gibbs at whom he sang snapped out of her trance looking puzzled, since it was not her birthday. Danny pointed to Eve Arden whereupon Miss Gibbs graciously sang "Happy Birthday" to Eve. Soon everyone was singing "Happy Birthday" to everyone and it was no one's happy birthday. Thus life becomes extravaganza under wand of Wonder Man Kaye.

All the world's a stooge for Danny and every minute is a show. He even plays tricks on pigeons, pretty sly tricksters themselves. In his new Goldwyn gala from James Thurber's "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty" he did a scene at an open window tempting the birds with cake crumbs. With his gift of tongues, he cooed to them in their own language so the pigeons too became entranced just like all the diners in the restaurant.
Danny Kaye, the juiced-up genius

"What'll we call the baby?" cooed Danny.
"Cookoo," said one pert pigeon sarcastically.

Prof. Kaye can make the sounds of any language but no one can make the sense. This illusion is called "scat." While in Japan diverting the GI mind from k-rations and geishas our Wonder Man bewildered the Nips, already pretty b'd. They were certain he was talking Nip but their minds failed to track the meaning. Some of them suspected they were being afflicted with more of that Yank radio-activity.

And so the pigeons, likewise pixillated, cocked their heads and wondered if it could be something they ate. Danny's pigeon English so bewitched them they entirely forgot their own roguish business.

Though this is the first record of our scat Svengali putting the spell on birds, he has tamed the beast in bobby-soxers to the dumbfound-ment of police. Emerging from a Cleveland theater with twenty minutes to catch a train he was stopped by a sea of autograph-bleating kids. Cops tried to clear a way but Danny merely waved his wizard hands.

"Kids," he said in his soft sirenic tone, "I would love to sign your books but I must catch a train for New York to play a benefit. Will you help me?"

Getting marriage application—Barbara says with a kiss that she likes name change from Hale to Williams

Cloudy outside—sunny inside as honeymooners were bounced off plane in Washington, D. C.

Barbara, of “Lady Luck,” and Bill, of “Till the End of Time,” in their honeymoon home
T all happened—with certain additions—just as Barbara had dreamed of it, sitting under the apple tree back of her home in Rockford when she was twelve.

She had known it would be in the beautiful little stone church at Rockton, just outside Rockford, Illinois, where she had seen so many friends married. She had known that her childhood pastor, the Reverend B. E. Allen (affectionately and irreverently nicknamed "Pappy" by Barbara when she was small) must officiate—and that all the aunts and uncles and cousins and in-laws and school friends would be on hand to help celebrate. It all came true, except that the dreaming little girl under the apple tree could never have guessed that she would be a motion-picture star and that she would be marrying a motion-picture star. But that's what happened. And in a way, you might go so far as to say it all came about because of a thunderstorm.

It was an ordinary summer shower which drifted over Rockford that day. But Barbara rushed to the hall closet and hid her head behind the biggest coat she could find. Her uncle, whom she adored, came to coax her outside. "Get into your bathing suit. I'm going to show you something that's a lot of fun." Then he took her onto the lawn and taught her what fun it was to romp in a warm summer rain. He showed her how far away the lightning was, and how harmless was the noise it made. "You just go on out and face it," he explained, "and all your fear goes away. After a little bit, you find it's fun!"

Barbara has never forgotten that. "Lots of times in my life I've wanted to hide in the closet from problems, new experiences, new (Continued on page 119)
If I Had

These are the reflections these six stars

Around the World

"I'd wish for a trip around the world," says beautiful Rita Hayworth.

"I'd like to be gone at least a year and just roam the earth without any sense of responsibility. I'd like to feel free to let my impulses take me to the farthest corners of the globe, to follow little-known trails, to explore mysterious lands, to study foreign people, to gaze on all the wonders of nature and man. I'd like to forget for a while that I am Rita Hayworth and live as the natives do in each of the countries I'd visit.

"My mother used to tell me that I should have been an adventurer or an explorer. But ever since I began dancing when I was fourteen, I have been tied down by obligations entailed by my career and just for once in my life I would like to feel a complete sense of release to wander wherever I please."

For My Parents

"My dearest wish ever since coming to America," comments Peter Lawford, "has been to someday reclaim for my parents all the cherished possessions which they had to leave behind in England when we came here.

"You see, in our travels around the world, they collected many unique and irreplaceable keepsakes—keepsakes which have fond memories or sentimental value attached to them. Some of them were given to them by Indian rajahs, Egyptian princesses, high llamas, mystics, African chiefs and witch doctors. Some of them are thousands of years old and have weird stories connected with them.

"When the war came, we couldn't go back to England and we still haven't been able to find out just what condition our home and possessions are in.

"If I could build for my parents a duplicate of the home we had there, complete with a lane and a large garden and fill it with all the treasured souvenirs they collected throughout their lives, then I could honestly be happy, because I know how happy that would make them."

Home on the Range

"If I had one wish, I'd wish for a home on the range," Ella Raines reflects. "I guess it would be difficult to find one where the buffalo still roam, but I would like to have one in some wild secluded spot a few hundred miles from Hollywood where I could hunt and fish and ride in solitude. I don't suppose I'll ever get over my passion for the wide-open spaces. I grew up as a perfect tomboy on a ranch in Washington where my father taught me to rough it.

"This ranch I want wouldn't have to be too large—about fifty acres—but I'd like it completely equipped with everything, horses, sheep, cows, pigs, dogs, chickens. I love every kind of animal. I love to feed them and take care of them and watch them grow. I don't like to brag, but I used to win blue ribbons with my lambs and calves in stock shows in Washington. Instead of spending my money extravagantly on clothes and jewelry, I'm saving every spare cent I get toward buying this hideaway."
One Wish

—I’d Rather Be a Fish

“I would wish to come back reincarnated as a fish,” exclaims Esther Williams. “Then I’d have a legitimate excuse for spending all my time in the water. I guess the only reasonable facsimile of that wish would be to have a huge swimming pool right outside my bedroom door, so that every morning I could climb out of bed, plunge into the water and swim to my heart’s content with nothing to interrupt me—weather or engagements or work or friends.

“I seem to have been born with an innate love of the water because even when I was two years old, I used to cry when my mother would take me out of the bathtub. I think I learned to swim before I learned to walk. In high school, I used to do my homework in the bathtub during the winter to get my required submersion period. Unless I spend part of my day in water, I suffer a slight drying of the skin.

“I have everything I want except my dream pool where I could spend several hours a day just making like a fish.”

A Tolerant World

“If I had one wish that could actually be fulfilled,” Zach Scott states, “it would be for complete and absolute elimination of racial prejudice. I don’t mean any one race. I mean all persecuted races.

“Recently, a great colored artist came to town—an artist whose talent had brought happiness, entertainment and great escape from reality to millions of people all over the world. Out of complete respect to this man and because I know many famous Hollywood people who would have deemed it a privilege to meet him, I decided to entertain. I live in a small house which is inadequate for large parties, so I tried to make reservations elsewhere. I called every place in town I could think of, but each one had a different excuse. Finally the appalling truth dawned on me. It was because of the artist’s being colored. Most restaurant owners were agreeable but said their help would walk out.

“I still suffer from shock when I think that this can happen here. My very sincerest wish is that racial prejudice shall be banished from this earth.”

The South American Way

“There is just one thing I have really wished for in my life that hasn’t come true so far and that is to go to South America,” remarks Linda Darnell. “I suppose every person has one place where he would rather go than any other place in the world—a place beyond the horizon which beckons as a distant Shangri-la.

“When I was growing up in Texas, we had a servant who was born and raised in Brazil. Her romantic stories about the Latin American way of life fired me with a great desire to go there and sometimes I’d actually find myself feeling homesick for a land I had never even seen. It was a strange sensation and it has never quite left me. Every time I hear Spanish music I get the urge to suddenly fling everything aside and hop the next ship sailing south. I’m sure I wouldn’t be disappointed in the country because I believe that beauty and romance lie in the eyes of the see-er.”
As I embark upon the fearsome enterprise of analyzing my wife, I try to think of the one word that is more Paulette than any other word.

Well, just thinking out loud I should think the word that most truly and completely defines, distills and sums her up would have to be a hyphenated one: Sense-of-fun. Not to be confused with sense of humor, sense-of-fun has to do with enjoyment of life.

Paulette is shot with enjoyment of life. She has fun with every living moment of the day. If she doesn’t—if a place, or a person, or a date, or a conversation fails to stimulate her—she quits them. Even down to a dish that happens to taste well and it’s all heaven, or doesn’t taste well and she would rather not eat it—at all.

There is nothing jaded, I can bear witness, about my wife. You would take her, if you knew her as I do, for a sixteen-year-old schoolgirl standing perpetually, wings unfurled, on tiptoe.

She will be very excited about going to an opening; very excited about meeting people—whether politicos, artists, authors, actors or friends whose qualities she already knows; very excited about taking up French; excited about getting presents....

Now, Paulette has always gotten more presents than anyone I have ever seen. People have, from time to time, dug pretty deep. They like to because (Continued on page 125)
SOMETIMES, a man has to live a lot, learn a lot, before he knows what he wants out of life. Sometimes, like a beacon piercing the night, comes the awakening of truth. What he is searching for is already there. His, just waiting for him to reach out and caress. It could be any man. Sometimes, the man is Ray Milland.

By his own admission, three things have happened to Ray—three things so vital to his life and times, he believes himself to be a happy man.

This, from Ray of the turbulent past, is a revelation. On him the effect is becoming.

Danny's the sand-digger, Dad Ray his cheerful playmate
"These three things," says Ray reflectively, "have changed everything. I no longer feel inferior. I have greater appreciation for everything—especially the simple things. I think I have learned to live. These things are not of world-shattering importance. They only concern those in my life and me. My world. First, I won the Academy Award for giving the best performance by an actor in 1945. Second, my six-year-old son, Danny, learned to swim. Third, I learned something too. I learned to—sit! Sit and do nothing, that is. Sit and feel calm and peaceful inside. Sit and know there wasn't any other place where I had to go, or wanted to be." That is precisely what Ray did—with benefit of sun and sea at Newport Beach.

"After our New York trip I was worn out," says Ray. "I'd made five consecutive pictures ('California', 'Trouble with Women' and 'Imperfect Lady' are still unreleased). So Paramount gave me a three-month vacation. Before, we always took short trips or remained in Hollywood and lived the usual routine existence. It was Mal who suggested we take a drive Easter morning. We were at the breakfast table. She knows I love boats, so we automatically headed in the general direction of Newport.

'It feels cool, Daddy,' he said, as he grinned from ear to ear. That's all I needed. When Danny climbed out of the chair, I climbed in. It did feel cool. I also began to feel as young as Danny looked.

YOUR PROBLEMS ANSWERED BY CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Dear Miss Colbert:

Larry and I had “gone steady” for three years when he was drafted. Since we were convinced that we were in love, we were married.

During the first year of our marriage our son was born, and we were very happy. My being able to follow Larry helped. When the housing situation became impossible six months ago, I came home to my parents.

I had been home only two weeks when Teddy, classmate of Larry’s, came over to see me and my son several times and we had fun talking about our old times in the same school gang.

One night, Teddy said abruptly that he couldn’t take it any longer—that he had always been crazy about me, and had been jealous of Larry, adding that now he was more jealous than ever.

A month later he married a girl he had known only a few days. Before he and his wife left town (he is out of service and will work in a neighboring city), he came over to see me again. He said that if I ever needed anyone, I’d know whom to call.

Now I am faced with the startling realization that I am deeply in love with Teddy, and have no desire ever to return to my husband. I suppose that I’m being young and romantic; I don’t know whether I deserve sympathy or a good spanking.

I have said nothing of all this to my husband yet. If it weren’t for my son, it would be so much simpler to decide. Please, Miss Colbert, tell me what to do.

Corinne R.

In considering your problem, there is one thing I should like to draw to your attention: For some women the unavailable man holds an intense fascination. You must have known Teddy during the three years you were “going steady” with Larry, your husband. Obviously, at that time, it was Larry in whom you were interested and not his friend. I notice, too, that you appear to have been somewhat astonished by Teddy’s ill-advised declaration of love.

Although nothing so annoys a returned service man as what I am about to say, I must admit that in Teddy’s case I think he was somewhat war weary. In his floundering attempt to adapt himself to post-war life, it is possible that he looked upon you as a representative of the old, secure, prewar life he had known in school. When he told you he loved you, he was actually speaking in allegory. He loved the carefree memories which you represented.

Under no circumstances do I think you should take him seriously. He has married another girl and has gone to another city. Do not be foolish and spoil your life, that of your husband and complicate the life of your son by yearning for a will-o’-the-wisp emotion which could never be captured.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

My problem is this: I don’t know what field of work to enter. I have always thought I wanted to be a translator of foreign languages, but I don’t quite know how to begin in this field.

I am a freshman in college and blame myself for being no nearer a final career goal than I was in high school.

How should I go about finding out what my forte is? The curriculum here is general, and I do not seem to excel in any particular subject. As a result I am getting that “complete failure” feeling.

I would like to know, please, how to overcome this confused feeling and start to prepare myself for a successful future.

Elizabeth A.

Contrary to popular opinion, the discovery of a career in which an individual can be happy is not made at any specific time in life. There are those who have known from babyhood what career was to be followed. And there are innumerable instances of human beings finding themselves only after having become grandparents.

It seems to me that, if it is at all possible, in your sophomore year you should change your major. I presume that you are specializing in romance languages; why don’t you discuss your problem with some member of the faculty whom you have grown to respect (Continued on page 74)
MISS MARGARET COLEMAN—She has luscious honey-gold blondeness, a bewitching soft-smooth complexion. Another charming Pond's bride-to-be, Miss Coleman is the daughter of the well-known Dr. and Mrs. George A. Coleman, of Philadelphia's fashionable "main-line" suburb Wynnewood, and is to be married to H. Stephen Casey, Jr., of nearby Wayne, Pennsylvania.

She's Engaged!
She's Lovely!
She uses Pond's!

The New "Blush-Cleansing" Peggy Coleman uses for her complexion will give your skin, too, —an instant fresh-bright look —an instant soft-as-rain feel —and bring up a sweet blush of color

HOW TO "BLUSH-CLEANSE" your face as Peggy does:

You rouse your skin by pressing a face cloth drenched in warm water against your face and throat.

You "cream-cleanse" while your skin is receptively moist and warm. Spin your fingers full of snowy Pond's Cold Cream upward in circles, as if drawing engagement rings all over your face. Pond's demulcent action gently loosens dirt and make-up as your fingers swirl. Tissue off.

You "cream-rinse" with a second thick Pond's creaming. Spin 25 little Pond's Cold Cream engagement rings up over your face. Tissue off.

You tingle your clean, clean face with a good splash of cold water. Blot dry.

THAT'S ALL! "My face feels beautifully soft," Peggy says. Every night—give your face the complete, Pond's "Blush-Cleansing." Every morning—give it a once-over "Blush-Cleansing," a warm splash, quick rings with Pond's Cold Cream. Tissue off, then a cold splash.

Night and morning—every day—dip your fingers deep into a big jar of Pond's. A 6 ounce jar is perfect to use.

HER RING—

Dapper Don

The breakfast room at Don De Fore's house is no longer the family gathering place, on account of the man of the house had to do a quick reconversion job on it when Paramount called him up and said, "Hey, for gosh sakes, come and get your fan mail. It's piling up like crazy."

Slightly amazed and very curious, Don backed his green Buick convertible out of the combination workshop-garage and went full speed ahead to the studio where he found his work—big boxes of unopened, unread, unanswered mail had really been piling up on him.

"What'll I do with it?" he pleaded.

"It's your pigeon," the heartless publicity department told him.

"What'll I do with it?" he asked Marion, the little woman, when he unloaded it at home.

"It's your pigeon," Marion said—or at least it sounded like that.

"The mail must go through!" Don announced with a great show of determination. His first job was to case the place. No, he couldn't use the den—that had been reconverted into a bedroom for Marion's mother and you just don't dump twenty boxes of fan mail in your mother-in-law's room—not when you like her as much as Don does. And particularly not when she's come to help take care of your new infant.

Then he had an idea. What was so special about breakfast that it needed its own separate room? The table would make a nice desk and the chairs would do for filing cabinets.

So that's where Don can be found any spare minute answering stacks of neatly sorted and classified fan mail. He gets a kick out of every letter because he got very few of them when he played minor parts, mostly the kind that made him out a big, amiable, dumb lug.

The fun started when producer Hal Wallis rescued him from lug parts and gave (Continued on page 122)

In the groove with disk recollections of the melodies you loved in your favorite films

TWO SISTERS FROM BOSTON: A lyric laurel for Lauritz Melchior is this gay and stirring Victor Album recreating musical high lights from the delightful Ally-son-Lawford-Grayson-Durante M-G-M movie. Hear the great Metropolitan opera star sing "My Country," a variation of Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 14," the "Marie Antoinette" arias derived from Mendelssohn's "Concerto for Violin" and, for good measure, "The House I Live In" and Romberg's "Serenade" from "The Student Prince."

THE JOLSON STORY: Columbia Pictures' long-awaited accolade to the modern minstrel man who made his "Mammy" a household favorite, will start an avalanche of Jolson recordings. Beating the gun is Jack Benny's tenor Dennis Day. He selects one of Al's best songs "April Showers" (Victor) and is artfully assisted by Russ Case's orchestra.

NEVER SAY GOODBYE: Hollywood's prolific pair of tunemasters, Dubin and Warren, add another hit to their string with the theme song from this Warner-Enrol Flynn romp. It's called "Remember Me" and Tommy Dorsey (Victor) and The Pied Pipers (Capitol) have grooved it. As they say along Tin Pan Alley, "It's a sure thing."

NIGHT AND DAY: Another wrap-up of Cole Porter songs, this time played by Dave Rose's orchestra (Victor) and dedicated to the Cary Grant-Warner Brothers musical biography of the writing Yale man from Indiana. Best melody, the rose-scented syncopation of "In the Still of the Night."

BLUE SKIES: More records saluting Paramount's technicolor treat co-starring Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire in a cavalcade of Irving Berlin songs. Best of the lot, Benny Goodman's treatment of the title tune (Columbia) and Dennis Day's delivery of the film's one new song, "You Keep Coming Back Like a Song" (Victor).

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: "Testament of Freedom," Randall Thompson's impressive work inspired by the spirit and set to the words of Thomas Jefferson, is beautifully interpreted (Victor) by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky and the Harvard Glee Club. A Columbia album of spirituals sung by the great Negro artist, Paul Robeson, including the familiar "Go Down Moses" and "Joshua Fit de Battle of Jericho." Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburgh Symphony ring out the lovely "Carousel" waltzes by Richard Rodgers in a single disk (Columbia) that will win countless replayings.

Just one thing is really important: Under no circumstances allow yourself to feel that you are a failure. Feel, instead, that you are searching for that path which leads to success.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a girl of seventeen who is confused. Last September I met a fellow at school. We didn’t date, exactly, even though I am allowed to, but he walked me home from school, club meetings and other activities.

In the beginning I didn’t like him, so I didn’t bother to pay him very much attention, although he was wonderful to me. As time passed, I decided that I liked him, but by that time his friends had told him all the things I had said about not liking him, being bored with him, and so forth, so his attitude changed. He stopped walking me home and before long we were only saying “hello” to each other in the corridors. I invited him to my birthday party and he accepted, but didn’t show up.

I would like to know what I should do to make him pay attention to me again.

Heartstuck

Psychologists have always been interested in the perverse nature of woman-kind. Your experience and that of every girl who has written a similar letter to me should warn our readers to treat every boy with courtesy and good comradeship. No matter if a girl isn’t interested in a boy, she should bear in mind that each year changes everyone and that the goon of today may be the “Greek god” of tomorrow.

But more important still is the rule about not making unkindly about others.

Don’t be heartstuck about your experience. At least you have learned a good lesson the hard way.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a boy fifteen years old and because I have buck teeth I never get any dates.

I was going to get my teeth straightened, but a boy friend of mine had braces put on and suffered like anything. When they were taken off he didn’t look much better.

Is there any way I can get girls to notice me in spite of my buck teeth?

Holly H.

It is true that on occasion orthodontia is unsuccessful, but in at least ninety-nine percent of the cases an impressive improvement of appearance takes place.

We all know that in the last analysis the qualities which cause us to like people are not immediately apparent on the surface. However, it would be foolish for me to attempt to deny the fact that first impressions are important and may sometimes make the difference between success or failure in a given undertaking.

I would advise you to consult a good dentist. If your parents are not able to bear the financial burden perhaps you can earn enough money after school to swing it. Not only will corrective measures benefit your appearance but in time to come—because teeth are a most important factor of general health—your entire well-being will be affected.

CRAMPS—HEADACHE—"BLUES" maids the newspapers keep mentioning in connection with the arrival of our former Army's foreign brides and I'm bitter.

When I was stationed in Washington, D.C., all wide-eyed and innocent, I went with a charming man for six months. We danced, played golf, went to movies, and I grew very fond of him. One day he admitted that he was married and had a child living in another state. I was transferred to Pittsburgh and while there, met another charming man. I dated him for ten months before his darling little wife arrived from California.

The war ended, and I came home with a sigh of relief thinking, "Now I'll meet the right type of person." I started to date a boy I had known in high school. After four months of this I picked up the evening paper to learn that he had gone east to meet his British bride.

To top it off I started going with a very nice fellow in December. Last May he proposed and I accepted. During the ensuing week we even picked out a ring. Then, last week, he got around to telling me that he was already married and was having trouble getting his wife to divorce him. Boy, that did it.

You will note that in every instance the wife was not with her husband. If a girl cares so little about a man that she goes her own way, why should a single girl be condemned for going with a married man? I'm going to continue to date this fellow; I'm going to spend as much of his money as I can until I go north on vacation. Then, look out, I am really going to make up for lost time.

It seems to me that you have received a good many letters from wives crying on your shoulder about their husbands being snared by single girls. Chances are, the men didn't admit being married, and if a wife doesn't show up for six or eight months, how is anyone to guess that the man is married? I am sick and tired of it, as many other girls are, I know. I am going to fight back from now on and ruthless won't be the word for it.

Lorna L.

Your letter disturbed me so deeply that I find myself inadequate to answer it. I am publishing it here because I should like to have an expression of opinion from other girls, from married women and from the men who read this column. I shall use their letters in as immediate an edition as possible.

A Knight and His Lady

(Continued from page 37) doubt of it. Post-war London is still a grim city. Hollywood, with all its gaiety and glamour, would be a welcome contrast. And the gold in those Beverly Hills hills shouldn’t be overlooked either. Vivien could have a new mink coat. Larry could go berserk in Suika’s. They could add a new wing to their country home, a Fifteenth Century manor in Buckinghamshire.

But when you have lived on borrowed time as the Oliviers did for five years, you clutch on to happiness, appreciating every minute of it when you have it—not after it is gone. For Vivien and Larry, their happiness was in London, doing the work they enjoyed for the inner satisfaction it brought them rather than for any personal glory. So Larry joined the “Old Vic,” England’s most famous repertory theater since 1880. Vivien started rehearsals in “Skin of Our Teeth,” re-creating the role that Tallulah Bankhead had originated on Broadway. Their combined salaries were in no way commensurate with what they could have earned separately in Hollywood. But because they are the kind of true artists who have a passionate love of the theater and would rather act well than eat well, they were blissfully content. Larry, as Richard III, was hailed as the greatest actor of his time. Vivien as Sabine was the toast of the West End. It was such happiness as dreams are made of. Until the day it turned into a nightmare.

LARRY had gone to Germany for an ENSA tour with the Old Vic. Vivien remained in London, packing them in at the Phoenix. It was one of their rare separations. They couldn’t reach each other by phone, but they wrote every day—tender messages between two people, who resent every moment that keeps them apart. And then came the post when there was no letter from Vivien, but the shocking news that she had collapsed at the theater and was desperately ill. Larry was frantic. He couldn’t quit the Old Vic in the middle of an Army tour. For the first time he hated his profession and its tradition, “the show must go on.” In between performances, he managed to fly to Paris to see Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt, who were there in “O Mistress Mine.” They had just seen Vivien in London and had talked to her doctors. They assured Larry it was nothing serious. The past five years of strain and work had finally caught up with her. All she needed was quiet and a prolonged rest and she’d be perfectly well again. Larry continued his tour a caged animal, until the tour was over, at long last, and he was in London again with Vivien.

As soon as the news of her illness broke—magnified, of course, out of all proportion—she was deluged with invitations from her countless Hollywood friends to come to California, where good nourishing food was plentiful and the sun would bathe her back to health. Deeply touched as she was by this unbounded hospitality, she refused everyone. She couldn’t leave England without Larry. To be near him was better tonic than all the medical prescriptions in the world. So she stayed at their country home in “Bucks” where for eight dreary months she went about the business of getting well. This was a job she had to do, and with her indomitable will and courage, she did it.

It is why, when they stepped off that plane at La Guardia Airport, Vivien was more beautiful than ever and well again. Vivien and Larry are now back in London, their six weeks’ visit a kaleidoscopic pattern of thrilling memories. Reunion with old friends, Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt, Ruth Gordon and Garson Kanin, Gertrude Lawrence and Richard Aldrich, Kit Cornell and Guthrie McClintic, Margalo Gilmore and Robert Ross, Thornton Wilder, . . . Late supper at the Colony, "31" and the Stork, with menus that looked like museum pieces to their unaccustomed eyes. . . . Shops on the Avenue—a fairyland to explore and emerge with "Bundles for Britain." . . . The happy well fed, well clothed look of everyone—such a contrast to London . . . Their suite at the St. Regis, filled with fresh flowers from Helen Hayes's Nyack gardens, and gift tokens piled high from intimates and strangers alike . . . the din of the city—not from buzz bombs but from chauffeur-driven cars . . . The Century Theatre and the cheers and braves for Hotspur, Justice Shallow, Astrov, Oedipus and Puff . . . The City Center and the personal triumph of "Henry V" . . . the broadcasts of "Richard III" and "Peer Gynt" with Larry taking two thirds of his salary so that the other members of the Old Vic could have more, because that's the kind of right guy he is . . . the tangible tributes—an M. A. degree from Tufts University, the first time such an award has been given to an actor since 1893 when it was conferred on Otis Skinner . . . and the Variety critics' poll, which nominated him the finest actor of the Broadway season . . . Vivien, in the background, fiercely proud of her husband's greatness.

As a friend of Larry's ever since his very first visit to America when he played a supporting part to Gertrude Lawrence and Noel Coward in "Private Lives," I was proud—remember—the time he came to Hollywood to test for the lead opposite Garbo in "Queen Christina" and was turned down because some master mind thought he looked too much like Ronald Colman. In London, we toasted "our friendship always" in the bar of his new home, overlooking the Thames in Chelsea. I sat in his dressing room of the Barrymore Theatre, when he was playing in "No Time For Comedy" and watched the glow in his eyes as he showed me his stills of Vivien as Scarlett O'Hara. And my heart ached for his empty success on Broadway without her, and hers in Hollywood without him. I finally caught up with his future best on the set of "Gone With the Wind." Being a friend of Larry's automatically made me a friend of Vivien's.

It is because of this personal friendship that I was privileged to dine with Larry and Vivien during their hectic non-stop Mad-hatter's whirl. Facing Vivien, one wonders how it must feel to get up every morning and see that vision reflected back at you in the mirror. Her green print dress matched the emerald of her eyes. Her dark hair, oblivious to new fashion modes, was worn as she has always worn it—long, with loose natural waves, and heightened the alabaster of her skin.

Out of the blue Vivien said, "You know, next to the gaiety and luxury of New York, I feel frightfully drab."

I almost fell off my chair. "Vivien! Don't you know the mayor ought to pay you for improving the looks of the city?"

Larry smiled agreement. "You, too," I added. "It's flattering to have such prejudiced friends," he retorted.

Vivien giggled. "We know he isn't beautiful, but he certainly can get himself up mighty pretty. Maybe, it's just as well he's going to do 'King Lear' next."

"Is it because of 'King Lear' that you're rushing back to London?" I asked.

"Yes, it is to be my own production this time and as in the picture 'Henry V,' I am accountable for every detail. I pray that it comes off as I hope. It is my farewell appearance for the Old Vic for the season. I feel that it is only fair to bow out and..."

let some new talent get a crack at the invaluable experience of this wonderful repertory company."

“What then?”

Larry supplied the answer. “I am very lucky to have as a good friend, Gar Kanin, who also happens to be the author and director of Broadway’s biggest comedy success, ‘Born Yesterday.’ I have tied up the English rights and Gar is coming over to stage it as brilliantly as he has in the Max Gordon production.”

“Will you play the Judy Holiday role?” I asked Vivien.

“No, I’m reopening ‘Skin of Our Teeth’ and I expect to continue in it until we leave for Hollywood after the holidays. We’re due there in January.”

Vivien and Larry back in Hollywood! What welcome news to their American public, who have been clamoring for their return! How wonderful for all their friends! David Niven, Benita and Ronnie Colman, Mary Lee and Doug Fairbanks, George Cukor, Lill and Rex Harrison, et al, who will dust off the red velvet carpet as it has never been dusted before.

Will they appear in a picture together or will Heathecliff and Scarlett go their separate ways again? What of the rumor that Vivien was to be Peggy Cummins’s successor in “Forever Amber”?

These questions are not rhetorical. Let Vivien and Larry answer for themselves.

First, about “Forever Amber.” “I’m told that Darryl Zanuck offered me a million dollars to take over the role,” said Vivien. “If he has, it’s all news to me. I wish he had. I’d feel so elegant turning down a million dollars!”

“I imagine I’ve been suggested for the part because Amber is supposed to be like Scarlett O’Hara. But actually, they have nothing in common except their physical attraction. Scarlett was born too soon. Her fiery spirit and independence were out of place in the Civil War period. She would have been a wonderful career woman today. Amber was born to be a courtesan, whether the year was 800 or 1946. In any event, I’m sure she will be compared to Scarlett and if for no other reason than that, I wouldn’t play the part. I don’t ever want to be pigeon-holed by type casting.”

“Have you any story that you especially like?”

From the expression on Vivien’s and Larry’s faces it was obvious they had.

“There is a novel called ‘Earth and High Heaven,’ which we’d love to do. It’s a timely, sensitive love story with wonderful parts for both of us. Sam Goldwyn, who owns the screen rights, wants us for it, but we can’t give him any definite answer as yet. We saw David Selznick last night and he also has several stories lined up. So have a lot of other producers. We haven’t had a minute to read any scripts here but when we get back to England on our fortnight holiday at Bucks we’ll have time to wade through some and keep the best. We hope our first will be together, but if it isn’t we don’t mind being separated as co-stars so long as the separation stops there. You see, we’re old-fashioned. We don’t believe that being apart is conducive to a happy marriage.”

At this moment, the telephone which blessedly had not interrupted during the whole dinner hour rang. Larry’s car was waiting to take him to the theater, where in half an hour he would be transformed into the wizened, tottering Justice Shallow of “Henry IV, Part II.” He got up, kissed Vivien and the three of us drank a toast to our next reunion in January.

It will be a time to look forward to, for there are no two more real people in a land of make-believe.

LIZABETH SCOTT

Born in Scranton, Pennsylvania on September 29, 1923. She was christened Elizabeth. After enrolling at the Altiene School of Drama in New York, she became Lizabeth—more interesting for the marquee lights where she determined her name would be.

It was producer Hal Wallis who signed Lizabeth to a screen contract and guided her to stardom with her first picture, "You Came Along." You'll see her next in the Hal Wallis-Paramount production, "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers."

For rain or shine—to wear over everything—this exciting all-wool plaid poncho by Aquatogs. Sizes 10-18. About $35.00 at Meier & Frank Co., Portland, Oregon, and Saks-34th, N.Y.C.

California highlights for you...

FRANCES RAMSDEN,

who models these fashions, made for you in California, wears her hair in a "spaniel bob." Frances, a Conover model, was dining at Preston Sturges's restaurant, "The Players," when Sturges saw her, tested her, signed her, and cast her in United Artists' "The Sin of Harold Diddlebock," which brings Harold Lloyd back to the screen.
Wonderful what some of the girls are doing with simple sheaths over which they tie all sorts of skirts and things—making several costumes out of one basic dress. Vivian Blaine breezed into a party wearing a smart navy blue sheath-like dress with a full overskirt of beige jersey. This skirt tied on like an apron, fell only to the hemline of the navy dress underneath. Accessories were beige pumps with high navy leather heels, a huge bat of beige felt with a navy veil, and a navy bag and gloves. The bodice of the dress was draped high at the neck and short sleeved. Very smart!!

Veronica Lake, dancing at Mocambo, had a black dinner dress with a long, very full net skirt. The top was invisible because she never took off the peplum jacket of bright pink paillettes she wore over it. From the cuffs of the long-sleeved jacket peeped tiny black net ruffles. Pink and black by all means when you want to be ravishing!

The film belles are crazy about the newest thing in huge chiffon or silk handkerchiefs on which are printed their own telephone numbers. Esther Williams and Diana Lynn have their phone numbers hand embroidered in a contrasting color across one corner. Diana, besides letting her handkerchief hang from pockets, sometimes pins it to her shoulder with a gold clip. And underneath her embroidered phone number is embroidered the word, “Busy!” Anita Colby, Photoplay’s new Beauty Editor, gave us one of these handies and we’re mad for it.

Greer Garson goes for the newish dipping hemlines. At The Club she wore a lovely powder blue crepe dinner dress with a high scalloped neckline that was just barely cut off the shoulders. The full flaring long skirt was scalloped at the hemline which was about thirteen inches from the floor in front and almost trailing length in back. The belt was suede, a deeper blue, lavender and pink braided together. Greer wore black lace mittens, a diamond clip on one shoulder and matching blue crepe sandals.

Odd items stunning in the way of adornment: Gracie Allen is wearing a so-tiny diamond-studded cuckoo clock which George Burns found in an antique shop. He had it put on a snake chain gold necklace for her. Lana Turner came back from New York with a “ringing in her ears” all because of her latest jewelry accessory—tiny gold bells with little diamond-studded clappers that not only dangle when she walks or moves but really jingle-jangle! With street clothes Lana adds a gold chatelaine which she wears on a belt or looped across a suit which also dangle little golden bells. Sometimes she wears it wrapped around her wrist in a beavy bracelet . . . to match the “bell song” in her ears.

Claudette Colbert wore a divine off-the-shoulder cocktail dress at dinner at La Rue the other night. It was of black silk jersey, draped and shirred along classic lines with the neckline bordered in American beauty silk roses. Over this costume Claudette wore a long black cloth cape lined in the same deep warm red as the roses. She also wore diamond and ruby earrings and a diamond and ruby clip attached to a platinum snake chain necklace.

Paulette Goddard must be aiming at the slogan “Paulette in paillettes”—she’s been using them so lavishly lately on both dinner suits and dresses. Her new cream white dinner dress—cut down to there in a slashed neckline.

The Lift That Never Lets You Down

- Sure you want those currently fashionable curves that only a smart bra can give you.
- You want your bra to keep on giving you the uplift you want too, no matter how often you wash it and wear it.
- That's why you'll get a real thrill with your new "Perma-lift" Bra.
- The famous cushion insets at the base of the bra cups make the difference—gently lift your bust from below—never lose their uplift thru countless washings and wear.
- For smart lines, for beauty, for comfort beyond belief, ask for a "Perma-lift" Bra—America's Favorite—at all fine stores—most styles $1.25 to $2.50.
- You'll also enjoy wearing a new "Perma-lift" Girdle—No Bones About It—Stays Up Without Stays.

- It won't wrinkle, won't roll over, yet it will stay up.

- "Perma-lift" and "Hickory" are trademarks of A. Siren & Company (Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

Line has a long-waisted tight bodice and a full shirred skirt. It's very broad shoulders and tiny short sleeves are plastered solidly with gold paillettes that splash over the shoulder seam and up toward her neck in a leafy design. With this dress Panette wears no jewelry—just a huge bag of gold kid.

Loretta Young is going in beauty for sets of heavy Mexican silver jewelry. One layout, complete from earrings through necklace, heavy bracelets and ring is made of the heavily carved silver in a very ornate, chunky design, studded here and there with dark green jade.

One of Dotty Lamour's new fall dinner gowns is ballerina length in front and dips to the floor in the back. The tremendously full skirt, of deep rose tulle, has small black velvet bows scattered across it. The long-waisted bodice is black velvet—and its off-the-shoulder neckline has a cuff of the black velvet which stands out a little from the black bodice. With this gown Dotty wears high-heeled black velvet slippers and carries a black velvet pouch bag.

Betty Hutton is wearing light-colored smocks over dark skirts during her pregnancy. Her smocks are square shouldered and tailored with box pleats that are sewn down only to a point just below the bust-line. A right breast pocket, completely covered with a huge brightly colored monogram is the only trimming. Her skirts, of course, are full and adjustable. Her daytime smocks are gabardine. But for evening, she wears silk smocks over a long skirt.

Fashion is Fun

and makes you lovelier

This fall clothes definitely are dramatic, definitely more "dressed-up looking" than they have been for too long. Here are a few simple accessories that will give last year's wardrobe this year's look...

* * *

Wear a big gold kid belt on bright wools or evening dresses.

* * *

Don't forget bow effectively a sequined scarf serves as a dickie with basic suits and dresses.

* * *

Lace insets will give new life to a peplum or the neckline of a simple black costume.

* * *

Make a wreath of velvet flowers or bows to wear around the crown of your soft untrimmed black hat. And remember how wonderful touches of pale pink or blue can be with black velvet.

* * *

Sew gold braid, scroll effect, high on the left shoulder of that simple dress that needs a pick-up. Or, if you're extra clever with a needle, form your monogram in gold braid.

* * *

Sleeve interest is the thing this year (see the dress Elizabeth Scott wears with colored diamonds accentuating sleeves). So—sew colored grosgrain bands on the sleeves of a simple dress. Start your band at the shoulder line and bring it "barber-pole" style down to the wrist. Brown bands on a beige dress; black on a green dress; and on a black dress, bands of a bright color.

* * *

If you have any of those beautiful lace collars and cuffs that were so popular when mother was a girl count yourself lucky! For lace, so right this year, is forever romantic and flattering.

* * *

Sweaters are really going glamorous this fall. Watch for the new dressier weaves—so smart with simple skirts. The low oval neckline is still just about the most flattering and perfect with your choker or pearls.

* * *

For Indian summer days the smartest costume we can think of is a long-sleeved dress with a sleeveless trench-length coat. Make one of wonderful suflke jersey and cinch in your waist with a dark leather belt. This type of costume can be worn all winter, too, under a heavy coat. It could also be dressed up or down to suit any occasion.

Now that fresh flower-boutonnières are a little difficult (and expensive) to buy, why not pin fake flowers on your shoulder with a regular long florist's pin. Even your best friend will run up and want to smell them—they look that real!

* * *

Buy gold braid and sew it on heavy grosgrain ribbon for an extra special belt. Team this with a matching wristlet (tied tight around the smallest part of your wrist). A conversation piece, these!

* * *

Tall crowns on soft squashy hats (suede, wool or fabric) are a big winter item this year. Push the crown of your hat around any way that's most becoming and anchor it with your best pin. Medallions or crests are fine pins for this and also can be worn at your belt for variety.

* * *

If you want to set the world on fire (and who doesn't), have the time of your life selecting just the right color in suit, dress or slacks. Fabric colors never have been so bright or becoming. And if you're the type that shines in fire engine red or vibrant blue or lemon yellow—well, it's definitely your year.

* * *

Casual sport skirts take on a new look by the addition of soft unpressed pleats, all around, giving an easy-fitting air. Such a skirt in plaid with a black jersey pull-over and a black wool hat on your curls will see you through almost any kind of an engagement.

* * *

When you buy your new suit concentrate on a tunic or a cutaway jacket. Tunics are so right if you're tall. If you're petite you'll be wonderful in a cutaway. Pencil-slim skirts with both of these jackets will do things for your "figger"—tall or short.

* * *

Vestees are most exciting in fur. A welcome addition to a basic dress they also add such a dash of glamour when worn with skirts, slacks or under suits. They're attractive when knitted or made from stiff fabrics too.

* * *

Did you know that girdles and panties now come in the most delicious pastel shades? Our favorite girdle is of pale, pale yellow with painted forget-me-nots scattered here and there. Oh yes, we asked it, washes like a dream.
If you're choos-y and you're pick-y you will on-ly wear a (Continued from page 43) simply not true. Consider Vic Mature alone! What stories I'd heard about him! Well, I'll tell you about the real Vic—but first I think I'd better take these nice people in the order of their appearance.

The first film colony man I dated was David Rose and was I thrilled! Dave is still one of my very best friends and he often spends the evening with my family.

Actually, the first time he and I met was my first night in California, when I was singing in Ted Flo Rito's band and Dave was married to Judy Garland. I had just finished a number and had gone backstage when Dave and Judy came back and Dave, such a brilliant composer, said to me, "You're good." Imagine how I treasured that compliment coming from someone like him.

So when I'd been in pictures about six months, and he was divorced from Judy, you know I was quite surprised when he phoned and asked if I'd go out dancing with him. He came by for me right on time and took me to the Palladium. I suppose he thought he had to take me there because there was never a jitterbug place and he knew I was only seventeen. At first he was a bit formal until I got very casual and began talking about food and church and the fun our family has. Dave began to smile then. "I love to cook," he said.

"Oh, I do, too," I said. "Particularly sweet potato delight and a very special salad with lots and lots of garlic and anchovies mixed into the 'dressing.'" That did it. Almost the next night I went with some friends to Dave's house and he broiled some big thick steaks while I fixed the salad and the vegetables and the sweet potato delight. After our wonderful meal, I didn't know what was coming off, for he brought out a huge Army kite, the kind used as a practice target, and what did that sophisticated Mr. Rose want to do but teach me how to fly it. I thought it a little odd until I tried—and then I discovered it was as exciting as deep sea fishing. The kite would sail away from you. You'd tug and pull it back. Then it would yank you nearly off your stance. I got a big kick out of it.

That kite—and the evenings we sat around just playing records—or talking to my mother and sisters—or fixing more home dinners—taught me that David Rose is like his music—full of simplicity and sweetness and hidden depth.

The way I met Victor Mature could only happen to a picture actress. It was September and the studio had me posing for Christmas photographs. I was dressed in mittens and a coat and hat with jingle bells on it and I'd been making snow men out of white cornflakes when suddenly they told me to go, just as I was, over to another stage to kiss one of their stars just returned from service.

That was Vic and that's how we got together—two complete strangers exchanging warm salutations while cameras ground. From that moment on it was a mad rush that Mr. Mature gave me. He called. He sent flowers. He wrote me notes. Vic sends the cutest flowers. Every day I'd get a bowl of pink and white roses and hidden among them would be some sort of a toy bearing the craziest message. The day after we'd spent an evening hearing the Slim Gaillard trio—you know those three who do "Cement Mixer"—he had to send me a cement mixer toy. Stuff like that.

But where Davie Rose is a silkier dancer, Vic doesn't like to dance at all. That wolf exterior of Vic's is all a great big act. What he most liked to do was to come to our house, raid the icebox, sit on the living-room floor and talk.

Bob Hutton likes little things—not necessarily meaning me. He makes miniature houses and furnishes them, complete with miniature furniture. He even sends miniature flowers—dozens of baby sweetheart roses.

Bob's really glamorous dating. He's so sharp himself, and he wants you to be sharp.

Right there comes in one of my own date rules. A girl in a small town knows what the boy who is calling for her likes. She can tell by the way he lives and the girls she knows he's been out with before. But Hollywood is too big for that sort of information to be picked up easily. So what do I do when a new man invites me out is to study up on him beforehand. If he's had interviews in the fan magazines, I read every one of them—I dress in the way he says he prefers, even to the color. If I know he likes to play golf, I brush up on my golf. If he goes for tennis, so do I.

Bob Stack, for instance. He's mad about polo. That means horses. So these days, when I'm seeing a lot of him, I'm also seeing a lot of horses—with an instructor, I assure you, at hours when Bob isn't around.

Some friends invited me to meet him "because he has just got out of uniform." After Vic Mature that made me feel like a one-girl rehabilitating committee—but on our first date I felt more worldly than Dietrich, for Bob had sent me baby green orchid which I love.

This Bob goes in for all the sports. He dances divinely. He skis, he shoots, he swims; he plays tennis and polo. Because of him I'm learning to shoot and trying to limber up my tennis form.

Rory Calhoun is what I call a lumberjack kind of boy, very casual, very sweet and, like Vic Mature, he is not the wolf he looks to be. But Frank Latimore is what he appears, a relaxed, charming fellow, who likes to go for beach picnics but also wants to take in the fights Friday nights. I had to read up on fights like crazy before we had that kind of a date. I think a girl should let the man do most of the talking—but should really understand what he is discussing and be able to keep him going with intelligent questions.

You learn a lot that way—and have fun too.

Another thing I do is to have one special perfume for each man I go out with. For instance, for Vic Mature I had a perfume that smelled the way I imagine a tiger lily would smell—if it had a fragrance. I figured he'd like something like that and he did. For Bob Hutton I have an elegant incense-type perfume. I never change perfumes with them, so that whenever I smell that particular scent I think of that one fellow and the fine times I've had with him—and I hope when he sniffs that perfume somewhere he thinks of me, too.

I haven't yet found the man I want to marry—but I've got my wedding planned. I hope it will take place in the spring—because I think the spring colors are most becoming and I've already engaged Bonnie Cashin of my studio, Twentieth Century-Fox, to design my dress. I don't care so much what the man I marry looks like. Of course I wouldn't want him to be fat or bald but I wouldn't want a pretty boy either. I don't care what his profession or work is, but he would have to have a sense of humor and love his home and want a big family. The only thing I'll want him to be very, very serious about is music and me and I'll have to be very serious about him because with my religion I can only marry once.

P.S. I'm busy working in "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," but meanwhile I'd like to go out with Peter Lawford some evening soon. You see, I've studied up on him and I know all his likes and dislikes and I've bought a perfume that I think he might like too.

Take-Off

(Continued from page 41) was in the fertile Valley of Virginia, guarded on one side by the Blue Ridge Mountains, on the other by the Alleghenies. Four hundred acres of rich farm land threaded by sluices, canals and the winding Roanoke River.

Today it was the property of John's father, George Washington Payne, wealthy farmer and real estate man. But folks still referred to it as "Fort Lewis" because it once belonged to Col. Andrew Lewis, famous frontier fighter and Virginia patriot. It had served as a fort against the Indians in frontier days. There was a block house in the back with walls two feet and seven inches thick. There was a secret passageway too...now caved in. John and his friends liked to dig around the ruins of the secret passageway. To make up stories about the tomahawks and arrowheads. Sometimes at night when the moonlight cast eerie shadows around the place, the imaginative boy could almost see the Indians with their feathers and painted faces riding in frenzy across the fields.

HISTORY was made here. This was his home. He watched history on the corners of Fort Lewis. Make Virginia—and his father—very proud of him.

Gradually the collection of arrowheads was moved out of his "workroom" on the third floor to make space for the growing number of model planes. The elder Payne watched the mounting number with interest. He'd inspect the flight lines of some sixty-two rubber-driven and compressed-air models that John proudly showed him..."and they'll all fly too!"

George Washington Payne didn't try to influence his sons' futures. He wanted to give them a good education, then let them follow their own inclinations. He was of the opinion that life is like an apple grading machine. You might wander around a lot, but eventually you'd land in the chute where you belonged. Secretly, he was very proud of John's interest in aviation. He often accompanied him when he took them out to the field to stretch their wings. As they watched them go, John would go into big plans for becoming an aeronautical engineer. "And I'll be a good one, too, Dad," he promised. "I know you will, John," smiled his father. Looked to him as if this son was already headed toward the right "chute."

At fourteen John Payne stretched his own wings. He was going to Episcopal High School at Alexandria, Virginia, about three miles from a field where a tall, lanky six-footer of the last war named Slim had started a flying school. John thought this Slim must have been flying by the "seat of his pants" a long time. They looked pretty worn. The Jenny was worn in spots to. When the flier wasn't too busy with customers he'd talk with him about thermals and air currents and altitudes.

"Want to go up?" the lanky birdman said one day.

Payne got into the cockpit slowly. Sat there frozen to the seat. This was it. He felt a little guilty about his mother...but well, he was older now. Could he be sick? He couldn't be Slim.

The Jenny taxied off down the field, then the pilot gave her the throttle and they lifted from the ground, weaving and wobbling. Upstairs Slim was keeping her up to seventy miles an hour. The ship rolled and banked and the motor sounded like a thousand giant firecrackers going off at once. It was more exciting than he'd even dreamed of...going through clouds like white giant blankets, looking 1,000 feet down below at the crazy green and brown patchwork quilt of fields, little white doll houses where grown-up people lived and worked and worried while he thundered along hundreds of feet above them. He felt strangely superior and a little sorry for the little human ants who thought they were so important down there.

From then on John took his three-dollar weekly allowance out to Slim every week for another ride. He was sooting after three hours.

THEN when he was seventeen the whole world seemed to crack up. It was as though Fate said..."Here's one, we've never touched. Let's let him have it in one solid dose!"

First came the crash of '28 when the Paynes lost most of what they had. Then early one morning in January, '30, his father was stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage and died, leaving a stunned family.

John couldn't realize that his father, the pillar of his world, was gone. He wandered grief-stricken around the place.

"Fort Lewis," with its family heirlooms, its handsome hand-carved fireplaces, its boyhood memories, was going to be sold. He and another guy probably wouldn't know or care about black flint dart-heads or secret passageways.

One thing still remained and nothing was going to lick him on that—his pledge to make his own contribution to the future. To be a good aeronautical engineer. He was impatient to get going on it. To take the entrance examinations for Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

And late that summer he did take the examinations for M.I.T. But Fate was still calling the signals for him. He failed the mathematics exam.

He couldn't go to their school. Couldn't be an aeronautical engineer. That's what they said in the letter. "We regret to inform you..." They regretted! Spectacled college professors who did their flying with figures on paper. You didn't have to be a hypotenuse to kick her out up there in the open sky. That was strictly a combine deal between you and God and the ship.

He knew he could build them and make them fly. But the letter said no. He felt hell. Lost. He was glad his father couldn't know. For he'd failed him...but bad.

What to do next? What to make of his life? He was eighteen now.

He took the letter and his dark future over to the Episcopal parsonage to the large, kind, intelligent minister, Doctor Block, who could always be counted on to be safe and understanding.

All good things would come to him in time, the minister said. Life wasn't lost. He could sing, write, act—any of them. What was best for him would be.

And back at the flying field at Alexandria, his old pal Slim told him pretty much the same things. Only in more Slim-like words. The lanky flier unwound himself out of the cockpit, threw a leg over Jenny's side, and began...

A guy had to make a lot of take-offs in his life. They couldn't all be good. Some were bound to be rough. But a guy needed to hang on a bit. Find out what the best flight pattern was for him.

Now take him, Slim, he used to think about being a doctor. Maybe he'd have been a good one. He never knew. For he'd just stumbled along with Jenny and hadn't even tried. John had a lot of flying time ahead of him. He could always take a rain check upstairs. What he needed to do now was to make another take-off.

John Payne took off—for Broadway and Hollywood.

Act As If You're Beautiful

When I first started to work with Shirley, David O. Selznick, our boss, said, "Anita, remember Shirley isn't any average teenager but a very sweet and intelligent young lady. You'll discover she has taken the trouble to learn a great deal about our motion-picture business and a lot of other things too."

Shirley, of course, wouldn't be satisfied to be an average anything. If she had been I wouldn't be writing about her because you wouldn't be interested in reading about her.

Above all, Shirley has learned that you cannot be anything better than a lady. Not in a stuffy or prissy sense, but in the broad meaning of the word. She's always beautifully groomed. And also in other ways she has too much pride to be seen at a disadvantage. She walks with an erect grace. She never sits with her legs curled around the chair rungs or spread apart with her ankles lying on the floor. And at table she sees to it her lip rouge doesn't smear the table appointments. Her human relationships also are splendid.

When she was at Westlake School for Girls, for instance, she never tried out for the school plays; but made up the other girls. And before her marriage to John Agar, while she was most cooperative with the press, she also insisted, pleasantly, that no one see her wedding dress before she wore it, or intrude upon the privacy of John's family.

She's a smartie, that Shirley. She knows beauty is a combination of things, that it's the way you act as well as the way you look.

THE time has come, I think, for all of us to be smarties. Now that we've welcomed the boys home again there's going to be a change. We're again aware that we are women. We want to look beautiful. And irrespective of whether or not we are beautiful in any orthodox sense, we will, if we're wise, act as if we were—and thereby become more beautiful, inevitably.

The new lines in clothes, the new trends in make-up and hair styles and the gaiety in the air everywhere promise a romantic winter. The time has come, definitely, for a general toning-up process, for a personal fall cleaning.

All right! The summer sun has dried our skin and our hair. Our skin at this time of the year is likely to have the faintly jaundiced look that fading tan induces; even to be a little leathery in spots like knees and elbows. If we took proper care of our hair through July, August and September, it won't look like an old broom but it probably will still lack the soft gleam that reflects in men's eyes.

To reclaim our skin we need a cleansing cream that isn't drying, an unmedicated baby oil and lemon juice.

Lemon juice applied daily with a little cotton swab will bleach those remnants of tan that give a mottled look. Use it on your back and shoulders, too, if you're dreaming about a dance dress with a heart-shaped decolletage or an off-the-shoulder line designed to make you look like a belle in a daguerreotype. Follow the bleach with great gobs of cleansing cream and watch your skin turn soft, satiny and camellia-like.

Elbows, heels and knuckles scrape for oil. And oil will do the rest of your body no harm. Oil yourself well and sit in a hot bath. It's pleasant. So are the results.
NOW for our figures! Because of the new clothes lines watch your waistline and shoulder line. Jennifer Jones, the star of David O. Selznick's "Duel in the Sun," recommends the following exercise to whittle your waistline down to something approaching those measurements. Grandma boasts she had when she was a bride:

Stand on tiptoe. Reach toward the ceiling with both arms. Raise the right arm higher, higher, higher! Bring the right arm back to its first upright position. Raise the left arm higher, higher, higher! After stretching several times with each arm, stretching so high that all your muscles pull, bring your arms down at your sides and drop to your heels. Repeat.

My next Hollywood exercise gives you a double take; serving bust and shoulder line at the same time.

Bring your arms up at shoulder level. Touch fingers. Clench your hands. Pull your elbows back toward your spine, keeping them level with your shoulders. Pull back as far as you can, further than you think you can, really. Repeat.

Dieting, let's face it, is an un- fail ing way to reduce. Oh, the pity of it! Diets come and go, but the stars go right on counting calories. Needing to look well and function at top efficiency at all times, the stars find a diet based on calories allows them sufficient food of a sufficient variety.

Usually, however, Hollywood begins a dessertless stretch with one day on fruit juices or a diet of fruit juice for twenty-four hours every week.

However other things are as important to a diet as the diet itself:

1. SLEEP. Too little sleep is as bad as too much sleep. You need eight hours sleep a day. Our bodies are complicated...
Mechanisms. Insufficient sleep causes nervous tension and fatigue. Nervous tension and fatigue react upon our glands. And any glandular disturbance may result in the food we eat being assimilated as more fat than energy.

2. LIQUIDS. They're conducive to fat if taken during meals or one hour before or after meals.

3. SELF-DISCIPLINE. No one enjoys dieting. However, our mental attitude can make dieting a horrible trial or a comparatively simple matter.

Self-discipline, incidentally, is one of the things I've come to respect as an essential ingredient of beauty and happiness. To teach myself self-discipline I do three things a day that I positively abhor. Like answering my mail. I attend to my mail first thing every morning and it has ceased to be the dreaded chore it used to be. A great liberator, self-discipline., For only when we've done what we know we should can we have that most valuable of all assets—personal freedom.

Good mental form, good health and good looks are synonymous. When we're at odds with ourselves—and we are when we let ourselves down—we're discontented. Whereas contentment is the best powder any woman—sixteen or sixty—can wear on her face.

Which brings me to make-up. The things I've learned about make-up from the stars! It will take me months to tell you about them. Here, however, are a few make-up tricks to serve you well this year as we turn back to femininity and, I hope, romance.

Before applying a make-up base use a little cream on your face.

Don't try to match your make-up foundation to your skin. It's positively old-fashioned to do this! Do as the stars do for technicolor—choose a make-up base of the tint which your skin needs for perfection. My skin, for instance, is olive toned. To lighten and brighten it I use a pink cast. Experiment until you discover the most flattering cast for your own coloring.

If your eyes disappear into your face in a way you wish they wouldn't, outline your top lid with an eyebrow pencil and just beyond the end of your natural eye line curve this line lightly upward. Acting as a shadow, this will give the appearance of heavy lashes. Also, give your outside lashes plenty of mascara, lightening the application as you come to your center lashes.

To encourage the growth of eyelashes, eliminate old ones. Use your thumb and index finger—but gently, please! And give your eyelashes vaseline to grow on. And add a touch of vaseline to your eyelids—for sparkle.

I dye my eyelashes—as many of the stars do—for a more natural look. Surely it need not be said that make-up never should be apparent. There are a few individuals, however, who have an allergy to this dye. Find out for yourself, of course, before you try it.

There's no end to the transformations we can work in our own appearance with Hollywood's beauty geniuses as our guides.

We'll still do a complete fadeout, however, if our attitude isn't right. If we do not experiment until we find just the right clothes, make-up and hair styles. If we do not guard against slouching and being either rude or dreary. If we do not find life good and glamorous, simple though it be. If we don't, in our own way, live graciously. If we aren't like Shirley—a smartie. If we do not act as if we were beautiful!

The End

Mr. and Mrs. Mariner

(Continued from page 45) the archer, and Ted Stauffer, Swiss composer, and Jim Fleming, Errol's best pal.

But when asked whether Nora was going along, Errol hedged.

"This is no pleasure cruise," he said. "Everybody on my boat is going to work and work hard. And don't call my boat a yacht! Call her a work boat."

However, reporters have been known to possess a persistence of sorts. Under the repeated hammering of "Is Nora going along?" Flynn began to show signs of wear. And then a thought flashed across his mind:

"This story won't appear until after we've sailed from Balboa, will it?" Flynn asked.

"No."

"Good, then I'll talk about it."

And out it came:

"I've been planning this trip for a long time, as you know," Flynn started, "and Nora has always been a very important part—even though a somewhat secret part—of the plan. Only our closest friends were in on the secret—the gang that's coming, Nora's folks and Jack Warner.

"The outdoor picture we're going to make, in color, needs a beautiful woman star. Who, then, more beautiful than Nora?"

The handsome, sun-bronzed Flynn then got off on another tangent.

"We're going to touch Panama, Barbados, Trinidad, the West Coast of Africa and perhaps Southern France. And let me point out that the trip is strictly a business venture—to make a top-notch, first-class motion picture."

"Jack Warner was thoroughly sympathetic with our plans, and very willingly granted me a leave of absence. As a matter of fact, Warner Brothers very likely will release the picture when it is completed."

TALK about dinghies, motor launches, radio compasses, harpoons and such was all very well but there was the vastly more intriguing human equation to be probed. What was Nora going to do aboard ship?

He passed that off by saying that she probably couldn't cook, and she couldn't help haul sail or tend one of the twin diesel motors. Then he added that her job when not shooting film was probably just to look beautiful and not get underfoot in rough weather.

"This is something a man plans all his life," Flynn rambled on with a sort of deep thought in his eye. "Most fellows seldom get a chance to do something like this in a lifetime. Now, under full speed the Zaca does 10 1/2 knots, and in addition to the two dories we're carrying two—"

What was Nora going to wear aboard ship? Would she take along dungarees or natty yachting clothes? And what about costumes for the picture?

On all this Errol seemed a little vague, even embarrassed. And finally he confessed he hadn't given much thought to that.

"But I'm sure Nora has, so I don't have to worry about it."

While this pensive little moment was passing, the phone rang. It was Humphrey Bogart, telephoning over from Columbia Studios. Their conversation was brief, and from Flynn's end merely a series of "uh huh" and "I see."

Errol replaced the phone on the hook.

"That Bogart!" he exclaimed. "For almost a year we've been planning for him to come along on this trip. Now he can't come! Says he has to work! For years he's been on suspension and now, when we're ready to leave, he has to work!"

With some effort the subject of the cook on the junket was introduced.

"Whoever cooks has got to make pancakes," Errol declared. "Exquisite pancakes which will melt in the mouth and not the kind you'd use to patch a rubber boot."

"Well, does Nora cook pancakes like—" "We will be gone a minimum of ninety days, probably considerably longer. And we won't come back until we've got the blankety-blank best outdoor picture in color that you've ever seen!"

"Errol," your reporter interposed, "isn't it true that you were practically born on a cruise similar to this one?"

"Yes," said Flynn. "My parents were on a marine research cruise for Queen's University and the voyage was temporarily interrupted while I was being born at Hobart, in Tasmania."

Well, inasmuch as you were born on a cruise like this, is there any possibility that Nora—"

At this point your reporter left Flynn's room in some haste.

Nora herself was more explicit later in her press announcement. She said they were expecting a child in March and that they'd take a physician on the cruise, just in case.

The End

Svengali of Scat

"Thank you, kids," said the old wiz, prancing between cordons of kids as cops struggled pitifully for autographs.

It's a topsy-turvy world Danny sponsors but who'll say it's not better one? On the stage his magnetism is so terrific that during the worst of the butter shortage he drew two pounds out of a New York audience, a feat of magic that tops rabbits from a hat. Other priceless gifts such as bacon, layer cakes, canned goods were heaped on stage, not to mention little mementos like diamond rings. These free-will offerings are also made at his radio broadcasts. No one knows how he does it, least of all Daniel.

Like all spellbinders of stage and platform, Daniel is endowed with electricity. When he steps before a crowd he is instantly charged and he charges the crowd. "It's not me hypnotizing them," says he. "They hypnotize me." A juiced-up genius he's in seventh heaven, so delirious at times he can't stop. Twenty-minute benefits have stretched two hours, Danny knocking himself prostrate. Twice in a year hospitals have yawned for his debilitated remains. But before death could yawn he was up to antics for the doctors and nurses. His ability to recharge himself is something doctors do not explain. Danny explains it by his ability to relax. He hits high and hits low and when he's low his completely out, a theater without lights.

This skyrocketing Svengali has soared in seven years from $300.00 per week to $25,000 for stage appearances and $150,000 for each picture. Quite a melon, this, to grow from a little watermelon seed which Danny played at the age of five in a Brooklyn kindergarten show.

Figures fatigue Danny save as symbols of a fruitful life. There is the story of how as a dentist's assistant he tried to improve his mathematics by figuring on the woodwork with the dental drill during lunch hour. When the dentist returned our Daniel was in the dentist's den. His escape was narrow.

dollars and he told her he had forty. Now he says soto voce that he found that the forty was a debit not an asset. Thus the opulent career of Mr. and Mrs. David Daniel Roy of Park Avenue and Beverly Hills began ten bucks in the hole.

Danny's on a dole now from his lawyer. It started at fifty a week spending money. Dizzy with sudden wealth he squandered two dollars for socks, for which he never paid over four bits in his frugal life. They achieved holes on second wearing. But he was not embittered. He did not plunge back into bargain basements. Today he wears monogrammed shirts and custom-tailored suits, sleeps in striped pajamas in a canopied bed and smells hypnotically of toilet water. "Good taste" is a sensitive point, but hats he rejects and overcoats he loathes.

He drove a Cadillac roadster until it burned, possibly overmagnetized by his contact. In hope of melting the sales manager into selling him another Danny slyly requests that we say he always has been true to Cads and would never make eyes at another make. So far, the sales manager has avoided Danny's shows lest he be mesmerized into driving a new car onto the stage amid the testimonial rain of butter and other comestibles.

Ambitious to prove himself an actor and make people forget he's a "scat" siren, Danny dramatically sings "Molly Malone" in the new opus and in a dream sequence enacts a whole bouquet of characters including a gun-totin' Texan, riverboat gambler, schooner captain, fashionable surgeon. In leaping from character to character he finds no trouble. He was protean from birth. He bowed into the world with the Brooklyn-Russian name Kominski, hair the color of an Irishman's that got him called "Red," and grew up to resemble a midwest Scandinavian—lank, loose and jaunty as a six foot cornstalk, tassel topped cornflower-eyed, scattting Swedish as one weaned on smorgasbord.

Little wonder he preaches tolerance of all colors and nationalities and makes speeches like his friend Sinatra who presented him with a medal he wears: St. Christopher on one side, Star of David on the other. As a preacher he is effective, pointing out that in show business a man's a man on his merits be he Russian, Irishman, Swede, Jew or Ethiopian.

He's cosmopolitan in matter of food too. He favors Chinese and Hawaiian dishes when eating out, with French and Italian close seconds. At home Danny always was a good boy, eating whatever is set before him except steak. He does not crave meat, lucky boy. He has an allergy only to people who make fuss at table, shout at waiters and talk down to servants. For his own servants he conjures his best and most terrifying didoes. All his best stuff is conceived in spur-of-the-moment flashes. He is stimulated by people, the closer the better, and feels at his best in crowded night club or home parties. But if asked to perform at social affairs before the mood sparks him he folds himself up and shrivels away.

At first he thought he could not act in a studio with only the eyes of gadgets glaring at him. His kitchen cabinet was hastily convened to form an audience. His kitchen cabinet consists of his wife and three old friends: Louis Mandel (not to be confused with Lady Mendl, also a friend) who serves as his lawyer, Max Liebman who has written much of his material; Eddie Dukoff, the press agent who joined him when he made his first hit in a night club. He refers to them as "the organization." There are no written contracts. They have the old-fashioned faith in a friend's word being the best bond.

Perhaps Danny’s best gift is an instinct for choosing friends and converting them into working disciples. They say, dewy-eyed, they adore him. He never fails them. When Louis Mandel’s mother died in Brooklyn, Danny quit the theater and spent twenty-four hours with his friend. When Sinatra lost his voice Danny volunteered to take his place in the Wedgwood Room. On acquiring a twelve-room apartment his first thought was to call in old friend Lillian Waldman Schary to do the decorating. He wanted it all early American and the fact he assigned was no light one—a Cape Cod cottage on Park Avenue. He always wants writers to tell the world the fine job Miss Schary did.

Shy, almost inarticulate in talking of himself, Kaye is an eloquent press agent for his friends. So are they for him. When Jack Benny saw him first in a basement cabaret he bounced back to California as a volunteer herald for what he declared the greatest comic genius of the age. Today he is Danny’s best audience, sitting on the floor so he will not hurt himself when rolling with laughter. Danny auctioned off Jack’s famous violin in Gimbel’s basement for a hot million in war bonds. The two are elated that their pappyies, meeting up in Florida last winter, became pals.

Leo Durocher is the closest cronyside “the organization.” Danny made an actor of him in a vaudeville slot with which they entertained Army camps. Now he is scheming to put “The Lip” in films.

But it is significant that most of the people at the parties given by Sylvia and Danny are not celebrities. They garner friends in the byways and shadows. One of the most precious is a little girl they saw in a crowd clamoring for autographs outside a theater. Danny with his acute ear for vocal intonations caught her strange whispering pleas. He asked her why she whispered. She said she couldn’t speak louder. They learned she was an orphan, one of a family of thirteen, who had been pushed around by people until she felt so unwanted she could not speak. Danny oozed tears, which come quickly to him. Left motherless herself when very young, raised in a tough tenement section, he warmed up to the child. She became a Kaye protege and, outfitted with clothes, treated by doctors, given affection, she began to regain voice and personality.

The only threat to Danny is a Kaye cult, the cobra embrace of that animal called “intelligentsia.” Now British producer Pascal wants Danny to do Macbeth. Edward Johnson, Metropolitan Opera director, proclaims him the ideal Figaro. But protecting Daniel is the firm belief that it’s not the individual that matters so much as the ensemble. In acting as in business it’s “the organization” which makes success. He has no favorite performers, only favorite performances.

He used to worry about his own affairs; now he stews about humanity at large. He believes it is a man’s duty to speak his mind once he is convinced and he has followed Sinatra in making a fight to remedy juvenile delinquency, create a spirit of tolerance and brotherhood.

From the tenements where Danny was born there have come some mobsters with different ideas about society. Criminals mushroom in the dark alleys of poverty. Men who can grow up in such dank regions among shadowy characters and yet love their fellow men have proved great humanitarians, even evangelical. Poverty is ground for weedy growths but it likewise has produced great talent and character. From our little watermelon seed there appears to have sprung a plant bearing these.

Beachcomber DeLuxe (Continued from page 66) over to San Pedro. I waited outside while he went into a second-hand store. Soon he came running out. They had just what I wanted, Price $17. I told Ray to grab it. Being a good business man he talked the proprietor down to $10! I felt as if I had saved a fortune.

There followed lazy, leisurely days. Ray made the rounds of the marine hardware stores. He talked to the boat captains and the boat-yard workers. They swapped yarns, exchanged a few local jokes. They treated Ray like a crony, regarded him as one of them. He felt easy, relaxed. Having developed a great interest in fishing, he'd sit for hours on the little pier adjoining their house. Out of old driftwood Ray made a crate. He tied it to the pier and allowed it to float. Every time he'd bring in a croaker, bass or yellowtail, he'd deposit it in the crate, still alive. By this process, fresh fish dinners were always the main feature of the house.

Each day at sunset Ray took the local paper and sat on the porch. Kitchen noises drifted out from inside. Before him graceful sails on parade bowed pleasantly to the sky. Ray found himself looking forward to the peace and quiet of these evenings. Suddenly he knew how to get happiness, realized what happiness really was. The realization that he had found something—something he had sought far and wide—filled his heart with appreciation. But for one small flaw, it would have been complete.

"Danny wasn't afraid of the water," Ray explains. But we couldn't get him to swim without his life belt. He reminded me of myself, the way I was at age 12. I wanted to do things. I knew I could. But I was shy in trying in front of other people. We didn't want to force Danny. Yet we knew it would be so good for his development, for his self-confidence.

"One day I was sitting by the window. Outside in the bay I saw Danny slowly remove his life belt. I ran quickly and called Mal. We hid behind the curtain, peeking. We just stood and watched and held our breaths. He looked so little there in that great body of water! Just for a moment he floundered. Then we saw his arms strike out! He had done it entirely himself. I felt a great relief inside myself, just as I knew Danny felt one too. He had proven himself to be an individual—a very important step. I was very touched and thrilled."

Long before their vacation ended, Ray knew their present life was to become a definite part of their future. Once again all seemed to be planned out by some stronger force. Taking a walk one evening, they found a house for sale. Such a thing was a rarity in those popular parts. So they lost no time in getting to the real estate broker. The minute they were admitted into the knotty pine, red brick-flowered living room, they knew they were going to buy it.

"We'll knock out the front wall and put in a large window that commands a full view of the bay," Ray enthused.

"Bright colored chiffon drapes, wrought-iron table and chairs in front of the fireplace," Mal answered.

Upstairs were four small bedrooms, a connecting bath and two rooms, one for the old man and Ray didn't have to exchange thoughts.

"We'll knock out the walls and have two large bedrooms, instead of four small ones," he said with a knowing look. Future Milland dropper-inners, please note!

When Hollywood heard, every decorator... in town started bidding for the job. The Millands, who have never hired a decorator for any of the homes they've bought and sold, wanted the fun and the feeling that this was a home they had made themselves. The first night they slept there, the glass was still missing from the downstairs bay window. Except for the beds, which were included, there wasn't another stick of furniture in the house. By the time he finishes "Gold Earrings" the house will be complete and Ray will have his new twin-engine cruiser. "We can live here at least ten months out of twelve," he beams. "When I'm working in Hollywood, there are always weekends to look forward to. I've planned wonderful excursions around the bay. I bought a portable stove. We'll catch lobsters, boil them and have picnic lunches on the islands nearby. If we have business in Beverly Hills, we can be there in two hours. Danny loves it. Both Mal and I feel that the parties we used to attend, seeing lots of people, isn't important to us any more. Our friends will understand. The others don't matter. This is our life from now on, Mal, Danny, and me."

Like his nautical neighbors the Bogarts and the Flyynns, Ray's phone will work for outgoing calls only. Hollywood will have to wire if it wants to get in touch. Recently Mal suddenly decided she wanted to sculpt. Amazingly enough, she displayed unusual talent and has just completed her first statue, a reclining nude. For sentiment's sake, she's modeling all the cigarette boxes and ash trays for their new house. Danny's right in there swimming and Ray has never "sat" better in his life. It's a mighty fine world. It has been a fine world, in fact, since Ray won his Oscar in the memorable "The Lost Weekend." Right after that the Millands went to New York. It was their twenty-seventh trip and yet, Ray insists it was the first time he actually felt like a movie star. True, there had been tributes before. But at long last he harbored the little feeling that he had earned the right. He found that the sen-

Satisfaction was both pleasant and gratifying.

Theater managers offered house seats for hit shows. It had never happened before. Evidence that Ray was a better man in their estimation too. Dinner invitations, cocktail parties, gifts of books, records, records. The finest distillers sent him their finest products, with merry little quips about his "not having a lost weekend at their expense." Cops "harrowed" him in friendly fashion. A pink elephant concoction was named in his honor.

Most amusing of all was the American Custom Tailors Guild naming Ray number two on their list of the ten best-dressed men. Ray was flattened, because—"I had three suits with me, an oxford gray, a dark blue and a brown pin stripe. With these I took three ties and enough shirts to last three weeks. That was the extent of my New York wardrobe!"

The night he went to see "Born Yesterday," he and his party went out for a cigarette between the acts. The warning call of curtain sent them scurrying back to their seats. As they edged their way into the center of their row, Ray noticed that half the house was on its feet.

"Churchill left town yesterday. I wonder who's here tonight?" he whispered.

"Why don't you look around and see," was the reply.

Ray looked. It started in the balcony. At first he was sure he was hearing things. Then their cries swept to the main floor. "Ray Milland . . . Bravo!" Then the entire theater roared with applause.

"I can't tell you what that did for my morale," Ray said. Tenderness was in his voice when he spoke. You see, up to now I've never been terribly sure of myself as an actor. I still think I have a long way to go but now I'm not afraid. I've been criticized because I've done so many pictures. People have argued with me for playing opposite unimportant leading ladies in unimportant productions. I've been advised to take suspensions but I never could.

"I've always felt that I was living on borrowed time. Getting well paid for getting away with murder—on the screen. Another thing, I've never been particularly relaxed or happy at Hollywood parties. If I found myself in a room with Cary Grant, Randolph Scott, Gary Cooper—any of our good actors—I felt embarrassed, as if I had no right to be there. I even felt they recognized the fact that I wasn't as good as they. I don't mean they showed it in their attitude, or their behavior. I mean—in their personal estimation.

"Winning that Academy Award meant everything to me. I wish I could have said what I felt that night when I stood up there on the stage of Grauman's Chinese Theater. I couldn't say anything. My heart kept pounding. I felt the weight of that Oscar in my hand. I knew it was mine—that I had won it. I couldn't think of anything else. I just couldn't think. Period. This may sound corny but I have never been more sincere. I've found opposition at last. I am very thankful!"

Quite obvious too is the change confidence automatically brings. Gone is all that silly business, trying to make himself out to be a "character," those Milland stories, told by Milland at Milland's expense. No longer is there need for any kind of an "act" to cover up shyness. Today Ray is completely predictable. What becoming contrast to the unhappy, unpredictable introvert of so many years standing! All of which has great effect and influence on his domestic life. Plans for the future are particularly pleasant.

Pleasing because Ray has lived a lot and learned a lot and now he knows exactly what he wants from life, which is simple to define—it is just what he has.

I Have Learned...

(Continued from page 46) You think—at seventeen, at twenty, and you still go on thinking at thirty—that if you can meet just the right man, or woman, have just the right clothes and just enough money, either earned or given to you, then you will be happy, because that wonderful mate plus those wonderful clothes and all that beautiful cash will bring ecstasy to you. I have learned, through tears and loneliness that that is definitely not true.

Only recently have I learned that. Some people learn it earlier. I hope you will.

Get this through your bewildered head and frightened heart. You—no matter who you are or where you live or how you look—are a multi-millionaire. God gave you your own self, which is like no other person's self on this earth. You can make that self into anything you desire—a sensitive, beautiful, happy personality or something that chills others like a drizzling day. It is up to you, and you alone, whether you live every day or die every day. Those days come to you—God-given, like your personality—whether you will them or not. Whether you turn them into happiness or throw them to nothingness is up to you.

But you insist you want to be happy?

That you'll learn the rules that I've got the nerve—and I do mean nerve—to give you? Well, all right. Here I go, leading with my heart again, as the song says.

I think that's rule one. Learn to lead with your heart. I mean learn to be emotional. Did you think I was going to say, first of all, to use your brains? No. That one thing I've learned. The heart tells us the most. It's our head that puts the brakes on. But in your teens you haven't much to put the brakes onto, have you?

"Pickfair" was what put the brakes on me first. You remember "Pickfair," that beautiful, correct, luxurious estate belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks Sr. I was Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks Jr. and I was so in love and so utterly stupid.

I was doing fine until I hit "Pickfair." I was out to tear up the world—in the fastest, brashest, quickest way possible. Then I saw myself through the "Pickfair eyes"—and every last bit of my self-confidence dropped away from me. Shyness overwhelmed me—a shyness I've lost only recently. I got a terrific inferiority complex which I have lost only recently, too. Immediately I set out to change myself in every way.

I had always known what I wanted and that was beauty. People have often talked about how ambitious I am. I assure you my ambition has always been toward beauty in every form—toward a more beautiful home, a more beautiful life, a more beautiful relationship with my friends. I want to make a distinction from acquiring the mere luxuries of life. Those are rarely of lasting satisfaction—but beauty is. I was ambitious to get the money which would attain it for me. I was ambitious to acquire knowledge that would let me appreciate it more fully. My own love of beauty made me reduce my weight, learn how to dress and to make up. When I saw myself on the screen—saw how I looked to other people—I knew what I must do. Personal beauty became more important to me than the taste of desserts, for example. You are on one of the paths to permanent happiness when you can give up little things—like sweets—for big things, like self-improvement.

Actually I am grateful to "Pickfair" and the hurts it gave me. For without them I might never have started on my "culture" program. I got so laughed at because I... began going about with my nose in big books. I discovered classical music and talked it. I studied it, too. I probably did go overboard for awhile because, being an actress, I'm always mentally extravagant. When I get a new enthusiasm, I don't know enough to hide it or temper it a little.

But I learned this. If you stuff your stomach, you get fat, but if you stuff your mind, with facts, with impressions, with moods—you begin to get free. It's like climbing a mountain. You seem to be getting nowhere and then suddenly you reach a summit. You see the far horizons.

In other words, you are beginning to acquire something you can put the brakes on. You don't have to be all-emotional because you are beginning to be mental. You are beginning to be yourself.

I've learned that hatreds are an awful waste of time and energy. I used to go in for them in a big way. Now I direct my energies toward something constructive. I don't dislike a human being in this world. It isn't healthy to carry hatreds around in you. If you can't lick it, then go to the person involved and have it out.

I've discovered we're all too prone to go to our friends when we are in trouble and not when we are happy. Happiness shared triples in value—and it isn't fair to burden your friends only with your sorrows.

Naturally many of my so-called "sorrows" have been trivial. When I was in my teens and twenties every moment in my life was a dramatic moment, I thought. Now I know they weren't. I only made them dramatic. I had no sense of humor at all. Only the other day I went through a blue spell. I was driving home, with my French poodle, Tonic, on the seat beside me. Suddenly, in a passing car, he saw a wire-haired terrier. They both tried to get at one another. As the windows in my car and the other car were closed, they both banged their heads and yapped angrily at one another. I burst out laughing. I said to myself, "You don't laugh enough." It's so healthy to laugh in the tough spots.

I've learned to make more and more friends. In a way, I think we all have as many personalities as we have friends,

They're Human, Too

Mark recently had a serious operation. A few days after he was out of the hospital he was on his way to a radio rehearsal. "Hey, look," someone in the crowd outside the station yelled, "there's another movie actor. I know I saw him on the screen the other night." The screaming mob descended on Mark tripping him and landing him prone on the floor.

The press agent, who had seen Mark go down, was petrified with horror at what this attack might do to the actor who was still weak from his operation. Unable to get to Mark's side, he called the police to aid the fallen victim.

And, ironically enough, in the midst of this disturbance a voice in the crowd yelled, "Who is this guy anyway? Say Mister, how about an autograph?"

Do you call that sincere admiration? Nonsense. They didn't even know poor Mark's name. He was so unnerved and shaken by his experience that he was scarcely able to appear on the broadcast.

Nor was it sincere admiration that caused a sixteen-year-old girl to keep up a running tattoo on Errol Flynn's door in a hotel in the middle of the night, whispering "Let me in Errol, please let me in."

There's another name for such disgusting performance and it comes close to juvenile delinquency. The parents must share some of the blame for such behavior. It's difficult to visualize a well-bred girl putting herself in such a position.

Because the case of Cary Grant received so much unfavorable publicity I made it a point to ask Cary about his turning on those pigtails enthusiasts in New York and refusing to give them autographs.

"Pigtails enthusiasts indeed," retorted Cary. "Why, there were men and women in that crowd old enough to be the parents of the bobby-soxers."

Then he told me how old and young alike had practically torn his clothes off his back on other similar occasions. "I didn't feel," he said, "that this element represented my sincere fans and friends. There were the same faces in the pushing crowd and I knew most of them already had my signature."

If I hadn't seen the exhibition myself one Sunday when I was at Bebe Daniels' beach house, I couldn't have believed the lengths to which some will go to annoy our stars. That Sunday Van Johnson, who had long admired Bebe, was a luncheon guest. After lunch he, Bebe and Ben Lyon and the rest of us went out to sit on the sand. But Van couldn't sit there for long. Over the wall came a persistent young lady followed by her own coterie of teenagers who made Van so miserable he had to go into the house and spend his afternoon in the upstairs playroom.

I must say for Van he is one of the most agreeable young men I have ever met and it's seldom that these badly behaved youngsters ever disturb him. It's only when they try to pull off his tie or his coat or put a lock on his head, as one young miss did, that he flees for his very life.

Van was in the Good Samaritan hospital the first week of his stay there and he ingratiated himself with nurses, interns and doctors alike. I must give the hospital credit for protecting him as well as myself. No one was allowed near his room without an order from Van himself.

Another horrible example of destructive fans happened to Alan Ladd. I dislike calling such people fans because the original word fan was applied to someone who loved and revered the stars. During the years when material was hard to get Alan had a difficult time keeping a top on his convertible coupes. Twice it was destroyed; once by an older person who cut the top into ribbons and then poured water on the upholstery, another time by some youngster who marked the light canvas top with lipstick, putting down telephone numbers and initials.

Bing Crosby’s white-topped coup also bears 300 signatures or more of names written there when Bing went on a location trip to Canada. Those defilers of personal property did more; they carved hearts and initials on the upholstery, ruining the interior of Bing’s fine car.

And tragic and really sad as this is, it’s not the kids who are the worst offenders. The worst are the half-tipy grown-ups and smart alecks who yell insulting remarks. Humphrey Bogart seldom goes into a cafe outside Hollywood that some drunken customer doesn’t offer to fight him. “Come on you big brat he-man,” Bogie, who is one of the nicest guys in the world, tries to calm the heckler but it has often spoiled the evening for him and Lauren Bacall.

I REALLY believe the greatest offenders live in New York, Chicago and the East, although of late there certainly has been plenty of reason to list my own hometown as having certain people who should visit a psychiatrist. Almost every one of our stars who have looked forward to a holiday in the East have been unable to shop, go to the theater or take a sight-seeing tour because once discovered they are hounded night and day by this same group.

Betty Hutton, visiting in New York, saw a hysterical youngster jump on the running board of her cab and then to Betty’s horror fall down in the crowded street in a dead faint. Frantic with fear that the girl was hurt, Betty, who was on her way to a matinee, had to return to her hotel as she was too unstrung to enjoy a play. Unfair of course after she had come to New York to rest after weeks of making a picture which was meant for the enjoyment of this girl and others.

Ingrid Bergman who loves to walk for exercise can never venture outside of her hotel room in Chicago or New York. Once while shopping in a New York store she turned around and found two hundred or more eyes turned on her. Crowding close to her they pulled her hair, tore her dress and were so unmannerly that the management had to call the police.

Little Diana Powell, gay and happy and loved by everyone who knows her, was in tears one day when she and her Bill went to “21” for luncheon. The same sidewalk standees who seem to delight in being rude and crude called out as Mousie (Bill’s pet name for his wife) stepped from the car, “Look at the bum jewelry she’s wearing! He used to give Carole Lombard better looking stuff than that.” “Those kids,” said Bill, “cannot be real movie fans.”

Never was a truer word spoken. That’s the sad part. They are not real movie fans. And our boys and girls who make up the true admirers of the stars and who love them and respect them and their work on the screen suffer as much from these badly-bred uncouth mobs as do the stars. A shame that men and women, boys and girls who are sincere in their deep regard for our reigning favorites and their screen performances should have to suffer because of the actions of the delinquents who haven’t learned to respect other people’s rights.

And now this is the end of my scolding. Let’s hope some of those who have made our stars so miserable will read this and change their ways.

Autumn beauty:
Lynne Baggett,
an International Pictures starlet

By Mary Jane Fulton

A Lovely Doll

LYNNE BAGGETT, newly signed International Pictures feature player, has that rare combination of sophistication and naiveté which is charmingly disarming. Dressed in a short-sleeved red turtle-neck sweater, gray flannel skirt, Lynne is a lovely doll, with her brown eyes and hair, which the sun kisses to reddish tints when she is outdoors a lot.

Her De-Tanning Tactics

When interviewed in New York's Sherry Netherlands Hotel, she had a rich golden tan. But she said when it commences to fade she'll help Nature get it back to its pre-summer look. This she'll do by first cleansing her face and then applying hot compresses. Next, she'll use one of the good mealy cleansers on the market that not only flakes off used skin, but also helps dissolve and remove pore dirt and leaves her complexion clean and soft.

She Has Know-How

Lynne believes the eyes are the most attractive facial feature—a view shared by women already familiar with the beautifying effect of knowingly applied eye-makeup, plus lots of shut-eye. As a reward for their usefulness, Lynne cleanses and refreshes her eyes by using an eyewash in the morning, before a date, and upon retiring. To keep her loose, shoulder-length bob casual but neat looking, she conceals bobby pins in it. As her mother is an artist, Lynne's first lip brush was a paint brush. For sentimental reasons, she still uses this brush when at home, but carries a regular lipstick brush in her purse.

Her way of applying lipstick is a little different. After putting on lipstick, she then uses the brush, make a lips outline. When the coloring is finger-smoothed and excess removed by biting on a lip tissue, the result is neat and pretty.

Men Notice

Lynne says men dislike seeing an untidy, overstuffed purse, and suggests when you clean out yours you ask yourself, "Is this gadget necessary?"

(Continued from page 59) responsibilities, but when I've forced myself to come out and face them, I've found the thunder far away and the experience fun.

Barbara still has this practical theory. Yet, when you look at this girl who appeared in "Higher and Higher," "First Yank Into Tokyo" and now "Lady Luck," you think that anyone with a discerning eye must see that touch of something special about her. She had it even in the early days in Illinois when she sold frogs at the town drugstore. There was the touch of magic then—there still is. Certainly it was through no plan or thought of hers that she finds herself in Hollywood today on the brink of motion-picture stardom. After all, she started to be a commercial artist enrolling at the Chicago Institute of Fine Arts and working at Marshall Field's to pay expenses. Other students insisted she model for them. Later, Al Seaman, head of the Chicago Models Bureau, sent her photograph to an RKO executive. He stopped in Chicago to see her—and two weeks later, through no plan of her own, she was Hollywood bound—complete with contract. Nor was it any scheme of hers to land a role in "West of the Pecos." That was strictly RKO's doing for which they later paid off handsomely with an exquisite wedding dress. For it was in that picture that Barbara met Bill Williams. Bill had to die in the picture and Barbie, watching him from the sidelines, burst into violent sobs over his make-believe demise, although she scarcely knew him. This called for a celebration. So Bill bought her a soda "to cheer her up" and the next day he bought her another and then he persuaded her to have dinner with him and after that everyone on the lot "knew about them."

T IHEY get along so well! Only points of difference are her light-hearted lack of punctuality and untidiness and Bill's trying to break her of them. She is trying to teach Bill economy. "If you've ever been short of groceries," she says, "you'll know how important a dollar can be!"

But she's not dismayed about it. Nothing deters Barbie for very long and you have a feeling that nothing ever will. Perhaps "blithe" is the word that best describes her. Certainly she was blithe over her wedding, even to the planning.

Rockford was as joyfully excited as any other smallish mid-western town would be if one of its favorite daughters, having become famous, chose to return there for her wedding.

Bill, who has no living relatives of his own (his father died when he was six and a few years later his mother died), was amazed that anyone could have so many. He stood up pretty well under all the concerted scrutiny and the relatives, the friends all seemed to approve of him.

The day came, two thousand or more people assembled around the church... little boys climbed trees and fell out of them... people aimed cameras... they crowded, gossiped, smiled. Barbie was late. She "just couldn't get into her dress on time." Bill mislaid the ring (in the hatch) hunted frantically, produced a small silver number he had brought along for just such a crisis—and then found the ring again.

But Barbie arrived, the rush settled over the little church, the soft music sounded and, in what seemed like mere moments, the simple ceremony was completed. Probably the most "important" people present were her two little nieces, in their very first "formals," who had been permitted to sing a little song before the ceremony.

There followed a wedding celebration with several hundred guests at "The

How thousands who are pale and tired because of this blood deficiency may find renewed energy with Ironized Yeast Tablets

LISTLESS GIRLS—girls who are low on pep and "personality"—can often blame their blood. For medical records show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men—are the victims of a Borderline Anemia, resulting from a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency.

Yes, if you're pale and weary without quite knowing why, you may be a victim of this common Borderline Anemia. Your red blood cells may be too faded and puny to release all the energy you need. If so, build up your red blood cells—your supply line of energy.

Help Build Blood, Energy with Ironized Yeast Tablets

Take Ironized Yeast if your color and pep seem to have faded due to a Borderline Anemia. Ironized Yeast Tablets are specially formulated to combat Borderline Anemia, to help bring your red blood cells back to full size and shape and restore your normal energy and appeal. Of course, continuing tiredness, listlessness and pallor may be caused by other conditions, so consult your physician regularly. But when you have this Borderline Anemia, when you envy others their energy, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They'll help you build up your red blood cells—your natural vitality and charm.

Wagon Wheel," a charming, rustic inn near the church and everyone ate at the traditional chicken and hot rolls. Barbie showed everyone Bill's present to her—a pair of gold earrings which had belonged to his mother. And Bill was ribbed properly about her present to him—a gold key to their new house in North Hollywood. Attached to a wee gold ball and chain! Then something really charming transpired. No less than eight national news services had sent famous photographers and their assistants to cover this event, in addition to the people from the studio. But Barbie, still mindful of her twelve-year-old plans, took the entire wedding party, including parents, in-laws, nieces and so on, to the local "photograph gallery" which is run by an old friend, and there she had wedding pictures made, just like any other local girl.

THEN the hectic honeymoon began. Barbara collapsed momentarily when she went home to change into her pert little black gabardine "going-away outfit." "I felt," she says, "as if every drop of blood had drained from me—as if I simply could not move another inch." But—what she actually did was to pull herself together, get into her clothes—and away they went (part of her relatives accompanying them) to Chicago to another bridal party with another cake at the Palmer House where Stuart Morgan, Bill's erstwhile vaudeville partner, was appearing. Su had served as best man at the wedding.

They occupied the bridal suite at the Palmer House and then they took off for Newport News by air. They were "bumped off" the plane at Washington, D. C., so they rented a car and drove from ten at night until five the next morning to reach the home of their friends at Newport News. This time the little bride actually did collapse and was put to bed for two whole days and allowed to speak to no one excepting Bill—and only briefly to him.

A week or so later they took to the air again, bound for New York. But Washington seemed to be their jinx city and this time high winds beset them and the plane came within inches of landing smack in the water. So they finished the trip to New York by train and there Bill's dreams began to come true.

One of them was a suite at the Plaza overlooking the Park—he had dreamed of that for years and they had had dreams of it. Four days of pinching themselves and wondering whether it really could be true—the night clubs they had read about and which glowed in just the permanency they thought would—a luncheon for the press, with themselves the bemused centers of attention. They found themselves also the stars-of-honor at an RKO convention taking place in the big city and by this time Barbara's incredulous smile, denoting "How nice can people be?" was becoming as much a fixture on her as Bill's had been on him for a week or two.

Then back to Newport News where a new car was awaiting them. As it is written they are probably somewhere between Orlando, Florida, and New Orleans, Louisiana, holding their breaths for fear RKO will be posting Barbara to return to start "Trail Town," opposite Randolph Scott. If that doesn't happen, they hope to visit Rockford again, briefly, in a more relaxed atmosphere which will allow Bill really to become acquainted with his in-laws. And they still hope for a scoot up to Yellowstone Park.

Then home to the little house where they'll begin the permanency that Barbara has always wanted—a permanency touched by the miracle which is their deep young love.

To Take Vitamins!

Take them in fortified food—the delicious Ovaltine way!

If the vitamins you’re taking aren’t doing you all the good you’d hoped, this may be the reason! Authorities now agree, vitamins do most good in combination with other food elements, which are absolutely necessary for best results.

For example, Vitamins A and C need protein. Vitamin B₁ needs energy-food. Vitamin D requires Calcium and Phosphorus, and so on—and you get them all in each glass of Ovaltine made with milk.

For Ovaltine is an all-round supplementary food that supplies—besides vitamins—nearly every food element needed for robust health, including those elements needed for vitamin-effectiveness.

So why don’t you turn to Ovaltine, as so many people are doing? If you’re eating normal meals, 2 glasses of Ovaltine daily should give you all the extra vitamins needed for buoyant health—in a way they can do you more good!

FRAIL, UNDERWEIGHT CHILDREN often pick up surprisingly, lose their jumpiness, when Ovaltine is added to each regular meal. It supplies all-round food values—protein for muscle-building, energy-food, precious minerals—as well as every recognized vitamin a child needs!

"It's pretty bewildering," Don said, looking appropriately bewildered. "I used to sit around and wonder where my next part was coming from. Lately, I wonder when I'm going to have time to be with Marion, Penny and David." Meaning his wife and their own little "Stork Club."

Penny Lu is their three-year-old cutiepie. She has hair the color of fresh country butter, incredibly blue eyes, a gay irresistible little face and a line of dialogue that occasionally takes an alarming turn for one so young and dainty. Penny has a playmate who's slightly creepy in a cute conversation and when little Missy DeFore first introduced Don and Marion to her chum's chatter they were startled out of their wits. With an engaging grin, Penny said, "I think I'll kill myself." Some sleuthing by the disturbed parents disclosed they weren't going to have to call in a psychiatrist after all, but Marion promptly bundled Penny off to a nursery school where conversation is more on the sunny and less on the homicidal.

DAVID ALLEN, the latest DeFore young'un, was born just three days before his father's birthday, August 25, 1945. According to Don, David is a super kid already. "When he was four weeks old he could hold his head up," Don admitted modestly, his eyes shining with paternal pride. "And he looks just like me."

Which isn't bad at all. If he continues to resemble his dad, young David can look forward to being over six feet, huskily and neatly constructed. He'll have candid, round, light blue eyes, a well-shaped head, brown hair that curls slightly and always stays in place. And if he takes after his old man in other respects, he'll have a very amiable disposition with a strong determination to get what he wants out of life. He'll probably want to be an actor, too, just like Pop.

From the time my mother found that the best way to keep us kids out of trouble was to put us in the church plays she directed, I never wanted to be anything but an actor. And I've never been anything else. Except a starving actor," he amplified with that one-sided grin of his. "I'll never forget my first trip to Broadway. Every time I think of it I get a slight pain here," he said, gesturing vaguely toward his midriff. "A bunch of us guys got together in Hollywood and put on a play about fraternity life called 'Stray Greeks.' Dwight Taylor and Oscar Hammerstein decided to produce it in New York under the title 'Where Do We Go From Here?' Brother, were we hot shots! We thought we'd take New York by storm. Instead, New York took us by storm. The worst blizzard in fifty years closed our show in three weeks. By the time we got other jobs we could have..."

WHAT SUFFERING DO A SOCIETY GIRL and SCRUB WOMAN HAVE IN COMMON?

A daughter of the rich—reared in the lap of luxury—a product of the best finishing schools or colleges. Who would think this lovely creature had a care in the world! A little slavery—just a drudge from childhood—an object of pity to the passerby.

Yet there is a common ground of suffering where these two types of women often meet. Because many girls—whether rich or poor—by their very physical nature are apt to suffer distressing symptoms on certain days of the month.

This is something you shouldn't joke about

In case female functional monthly disturbances cause you—such as cramps, headache, backache, nervous distress, and weak, tired out, restless feelings—so cranky no one wants to be near you—this is nothing to joke about.

Start right away—try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve such symptoms. Pinkham's Compound does more than just relieve such monthly pain. It also relieves accompanying nervous, restless, highstrung feelings—when due to this cause. Taken regularly—this great medicine helps build up resistance against such distress—something any sensible woman should certainly want to do!

For over 70 years Pinkham's Compound has been helping thousands of girls and women in this way. Time has proved it one of the most effective medicines for this purpose. Just see if you, too, don't remarkably benefit!

have made about her (and didn't) he called her up, took her to lunch and explained the situation. They're good friends now, but might have been enemies if he'd skipped it.

Don's a bit of a dreamer, particularly about wanting to produce a play. He's optioned several but has always listened to good advice before plunging. He dreams about that oil well of his in Montana, which may produce enough oozy brown stuff to buy him a hunting lodge.

His serious side sends him browsing in book shops for authoritative works on history and politics. He cut corners on education in his hurry to be an actor but is making up for lost time now. When he was in Washington he spent all his free time at sessions of Congress.

Don alibis his passion for good-looking clothes by telling himself he needs a big wardrobe for his acting chores.

Around home, Don dresses comfortably in T-shirts and slacks. For informal occasions he likes smartly tailored tweeds and gabardines, loud but beautiful, and very expensive Argyle socks, equally loud, and costly ties and soft wool sport shirts which are not loud but are expensive. His more formal attire runs to pin stripes, sharkskins and dark blue flannels.

A broad streak of nostalgia is drawing him back to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and the Sinclair Memorial Church, where he hopes to do another play with one brother and three sisters, under the direction of their mother, Mrs. Joseph DeFore. Just who will direct whom, now that one of the DeFore kids is a famous actor, remains to be seen.

Marion isn't sure she shares Don's enthusiasm for large families. Don has two brothers and four sisters and is a firm believer in plenty of kids, so Marion's apt to look a little alarmed when he drags out the plans for their future home, including at least six bedrooms and plenty of acreage for the kids to play on.

One thing she's holding out for is an office in that new house. How could she possibly keep all those kids out of Don's fan mail if he had it spread all over the breakfast room?

(Continued from page 63) Paulette opens a present. It is unwrapped the minute it comes in; is gasped over, exclaimed over with the excitement of an unspoiled child opening his stocking on Christmas morning.

And when she decided, two years ago, to take up French, she took it up. She took up French every single day. We took it up, in fact, but whereas I sort of dropped it, after a bit, skipped lessons, didn't do my "homework," Paulette went straight through. She studied French by day. She, who never utters a one-syllable word in her sleep, talked French in her sleep, at night—so deep was her desire to think in another language, to have this new experience.

Paulette is perpetually engaged in passionate projects. They may be pictures she plans or hopes to make; they may be places she wants to go, or people she wants to meet, or a dress to buy or a book to read. But whatever they may be, they become, the moment she conceives them, imperative "musts."

When we were in Hollywood, just before we made our recent trip to New York from which Paulette flew to London, there were three such projects up there on the high wire with Paulette: One was the desire to get to our farm in New York State, which Paulette loves because to her, as to me, it is home. Another was her excited anticipation of attending the opening nights of the Old Vic Company in New York and the third was her trip abroad, for the purpose of doing some preliminary work on "The True Story of Carmen," the picture she is to make in London for Sir Alexander Korda.

Into these projects Paulette characteristically threw her heart, her hopes, her inexhaustible energy and her amazing capacity for translating her aims into accomplishment. By way of explaining what I mean, when we arrived in New York, a car met us at the airport (Paulette, not to be detoured for one moment from her plan of getting to the farm, had ordered it well in advance) and without delay drove us to the farm.

When we arrived at the theater for the opening night of the Old Vic's "Henry I," we found excellent seats (Paulette having ordered them, well in advance) waiting for us and, whereas most of us would party like mad before taking off for Europe and fall into the plane stupefied, if at all, Paulette turned down parties and went to bed early the two nights before she left. "I want to be rested," she said, "So I'll have a full appreciation of the trip."

The farm, by the way, is a place I'd had for some time before Paulette and I were married, but had never enjoyed to the full until Paulette found it so lovely. Until her enthusiasm for every aspect of the house and land—from the ghost of Captain (Mad Anthony) Wayne, who does his hauntings by day (Paulette making remarkably robust love (so I am told), to every pretty woman who lightens our door, to digging an artesian well, to the birds, the bees and the flowers—enhanced my awareness of the place.

Paulette's only complaint about the farm is that, alone among the women who have lived in or visited it, Captain Wayne has never waylaid her. "To be given the brush-off by a ghost gives me," she says, "a frightening inferiority complex."

While digging for an artesian well which we did during our stay, and while close to our hour by-hour and day-by-day vigil at the well-site, so feverish was her excitement as we went 100 feet down, 150, 200, 250, 300, and so tense her cries of "Oh, why can't we strike water!"

The Princess is devoted to the Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream

The Princess is Guy de Polignac

A zealous worker for the French Red Cross, the Princess de Polignac belongs to one of France's most distinguished old families. Her Titian hair and golden brown eyes give her a unique beauty of coloring.

The 1-Minute Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream is a favorite with her. "It makes my complexion look clearer and feel so much smoother!" she says.

"Re-style" your complexion to a clearer, smoother look—in only one minute!

Spread a cool, white luxurious Mask of Pond's Vanishing Cream over your whole face, except eyes. Leave on for one full minute.

Right away "keratolytic" action of Pond's Vanishing Cream begins! This "keratolytic" action loosens flecks of dead skin and bits of imbedded dirt—dissolves them!

Glamorous results! After one minute, tissue off and see your clearer, brighter-looking skin! So much softer, too!

"Smooth, lasting powder base"

"Just the lightest possible film of Pond's Vanishing Cream makes a long-lasting powder base," says the Princess Guy de Polignac. Make-up stays fresh!
"I might as well have hugged a statue!"

It's true—a statue couldn't be any more unresponsive than Ben was, to my caresses. Yet he'd been such an affectionate husband! How was I to blame? You see, I thought I understood about feminine hygiene. But I'd foolishly trusted to now-and-then care. My doctor brought home to me the truth that such neglect can kill married happiness. And he stressed using "Lysol" brand disinfectant always, for douching.

"Now our love has come to life!"

Our love, our happiness, have found breath and life again! And I can thank my doctor and his good advice about feminine hygiene. I always use "Lysol" now, in the douche, and find it really works! Being a true germ-killer, of course it's far more thorough than salt, soda or other homemade solutions. Then, besides being an effective yet gentle cleanser, it's easy and economical to use! Every wife should know "Lysol"!

More women use "LYSOL" for Feminine Hygiene than any other germicide... for 6 reasons Reason No. 2: NON-CAUSTIC... GENTLE... "Lysol" douching solution is non-caustic, non-injurious to delicate membrane—not harmful to vaginal tissue. Try the easy-to-follow "Lysol" way!

Note: Douche thoroughly with correct "Lysol" solution... always!

For Feminine Hygiene use "Lysol" always! me, "What does Paulette do around the house?" I answered, the literal truth, "Not a thing." Nor does she.

Shortly after we were married, we bought a big house on the beach in Santa Monica. At first Paulette seemed excited about it. Then I found that she didn't particularly get around to fixing it up. There was the problem of servants. They'd come and they'd go. With each new one Paulette would plan the meals, make out the menus (exception: As a menu-maker, she has no equal) for a week in advance. But when the help would ask, "Where do we go to market, Madam?" Paulette said, "I don't know." When a new butler would inquire, "The china, Madame, the silverware—where is it?" Paulette said, "I don't know." She didn't know and, lord knows, I didn't.

Suddenly Paulette was glaring at the walls. Suddenly, I was seeing that Paulette's sense of enjoyment—the sharpest of her senses—was, undomesticated as she is, waning. So one afternoon, with guests coming and servants going, we sold the house to Leo McCarey and, presently rented an apartment where servants, hired by the management, swarmed like locusts and where Paulette was herself again.

Isn't it dangerous, I have been asked, this high-tension quality in Paulette, this altitude which is her natural element? Isn't it very dangerous since those who are way up there must inevitably come down?

Yes—but only because it is apt to give rise to a certain amount of resentment on the part of people who have ceased to enjoy themselves. You see, this girl just loves every least thing she does, or she doesn't do it, so there's bound to be resentment—and gossip. Paulette gets both. She is the magnet for gossip. "You're always followed by gossip," I told her just before we were married. "If we're married, it will stop that?" We were married and, then and there, it hit the columns that we were "breaking up." I feel that Paulette brings this on herself because you cannot be genuinely happy, as she is, cannot really enjoy yourself, as she does, and be left un Otherwise, no—it is not dangerous for there is her philosophy. Paulette knows that, come what may, she cannot get the whole cake. She doesn't expect to. I do not think, for instance, that her ambition, ardent as it is, leads her to believe she will be the world's greatest actress but only that she may do better and better things and be as good as she can be. Paulette suspects that a large number of people and events are not good, but her disappointments, though sharp, are quick, sudden, easily forgotten and leave no scars.

I THINK that if Paulette has a fault (and I could surprise you by telling you how long I have sat here, trying to think of one) It is a lack of caring very much what others think of her and of her actions and way of life. She is quick on the trigger, too quick, in my opinion, in condemning things she doesn't like and not caring who knows it. When people don't do their jobs, for example, she says so and, sometimes, could "say so" more tactfully.

I repeat, I like her the way she is. Because of her beauty (naturally, she is beautiful and beauty in a man's eyes does not fade with marriage) but also because of a million and one qualities in her, which are also beautiful.

Due to the joyousness in her she draws back the bow quite a bit and always, where she is, a small hurricane is going on! Sense-of-excitement rather than sense-of-fun is, I amond, the one word for Paulette.

Hollywood Has Changed

(Continued from page 35) establishment on the ocean at Santa Monica, with so many members of the board of directors decided to have two openings—one a preview premiere, with only a couple of klieg lights through the side of the fancy, full-dress opening a week later. As new as the club itself with its ninety-foot swimming pool, terrace, and dancing to Emil Coleman, was the open-to-the-public-gaze date of Clark Gable and Joan Crawford the night of the preview. One reason for the appearance of the couple just might have been that Joan is one of the many stars who have invested in this beach hostel.

The ocean’s the craze, this year—no doubt of it. Look at what’s happened to the empty sands of Malibu and points north. Where once, a year ago, only the sea lions and the surf could be heard, the air now is filled with the sounds of pre-fabricated cottages going up by the seaside. There’s not a vacant acre of beach nor an un-sunburned star in the town.

Of course you have to get to the beach and that means by car, and of course you can’t drive to your new beach estate in an old pre-war job. So you buy yourself—if you’re so lucky—a 1946 model. And of course there is, according to Hollywood, one 1946 model that shines above the others. That, my children, is the town and country model, the half station wagon, half convertible in which you see Peter Lawford shooting about the town.

THOSE nights you aren’t driving or beaching or ice creaming, you’re eating and the newest restaurant rage is La Rue’s. Though the many fine places are as good as ever—Romanoff’s, Chasen’s, The Players for instance—just now the Goulash at La Rue’s is the topic of the hour.

La Rue’s to eat, Enterprise to work for. Yes, the newest in corporate film under-takings to have the town agog is the combine presided over by my old friend Charlie Einfeld and one of the most liked and respected men in Hollywood, David Loew. The reason for the talk is the cooperative spirit of the new company. A profit-sharing plan for all employees, free barber shop, manicure, steam and massage room.

It’s new in filmland, too, that newest in language which has you holding your ears to shut it out after the first hundred times. The slang is an expression that goes like this: “How much in love are you?” You stand on a street corner waiting for your boy friend and he shows up at nine instead of eight. If you desire to with him, star style, just snap: “How late can you get?”

Here’s another interesting change to be noted. Ten years ago if you went to see Paulette Goddard you called at the imposing Chaplin mansion. Two years ago, you would have found her at her charming Cold Water Canyon home, one year ago at the capacious beach house she and Burgess Meredith bought at Santa Monica. But now Paulette’s California roots are a rented apartment.

It’s charming, to be sure. Landlord Mitchell Leisen, Paramount’s ace director of such pictures as “Frenchman’s Creek,” “Kitty” and “Suddenly It’s Spring” bought The Shoreham so he would have a place to live. Then Mitch, who was a set decorator before he became a director, redecorated the apartment and took in two of Paramount’s homeless waifs, Paulette Goddard Meredith and Olivia de Havilland.

The Meredith apartment he re-did with a modern Chinese decor in soft green, yellow and pink as a background for Paulette’s valuable collection of paintings.

Olivia's is a modern classic design in shades of pink and she dons it. The living room has squashy custom-built furniture. Livvie's bedroom, in dusty pink and green, has a headboard which reaches the length of the entire room with the twin beds foot to foot against it, instead of jutting into the room, complemented by night stands and green and ivory striped satin chairs.

Olivia, who has no flair for cooking or housekeeping, profits by the fact that the building is staffed for maid and porter service which includes keeping the fireplaces laid with fragrant eucalyptus logs and outside coops to prepare a trout caught in the mountains that very day or a turkey dinner with all the trimmings. "It's wonderful," she says, "to have a home with no responsibility!"

I heartily subscribe to the sentiment. But not so do a growing group of stars who welcome the work and worries of ranch life. Latest recruit is Alan Ladd who is starting an ambitious project in the Valley. Alan found his new enthusiasm for houses when he started to get himself in trim for "California," the super-Western picture which marked his temporary partition of the ways with Paramount. He didn't make the picture but if it hadn't been for "California," Alan wouldn't be the proud a..

Bringing up Lana

(Continued from page 55) Connecticut, as you might have supposed. It was Hollywood. Specifically it was the gray and rose dressing room on the M-G-M lot belonging to one of Hollywood's most spectacular stars, Miss Lana Turner.

"She kills me," said Miss Turner, referring to her three-year-old daughter, Cheryl Christine Crane. "She walked in the other day and inspected me from head to foot, then said, 'Hello, Lana Turner.' I think she's found out how I earn my living. Evidently she approves, because that's what she calls me now, except when we're being formal. Then it's 'Good afternoon, Mrs. Crane.' With a British accent no less."

"A born actress," was our comment as we thought of the big step along that line Lana took in her latest and very dramatic role in "The Postman."

A born hool!" corrected her famous mother. "She picks up everything she hears and mimics everything she sees. Since I've been back from South America, Cheryl has picked up just enough Spanish to use against me when I try to talk French to her. We're both lousy but we have a lot of fun!"

No doubt of that. The Turner is famous for never doing things by halves. When she puts her heart into something it's an all out gesture. And she's really put it into this motherhood department. There's nothing of the professional mother about her. She is of the active, on the job variety. Cheryl's nurse, Nana, an elderly little Scots woman who has donated her burl to the baby's bag of tricks, was quick to learn that her lovely little charge had a mother. Lana spends her free time with Cheryl, unhampered by the usual rules and regulations imposed by the nursery boss. She gives Cheryl her bath, or her lunch. She goes into the nursery at night to make sure she is covered. Nana is, as Lana puts it, a blessing—but Lana is Cheryl's mother, and both she and Cheryl know it.

Lana has had, since the beginning of her career, that spectacular quality that made everything she did, from what she ate for breakfast to the men she did or did not marry, news. How, then, had the spotlight failed to penetrate to the place where Lana was a very warm heart and boundless enthusiasm had found a real home? Perhaps because the picture of her was such perfect casting for a successful movie star that it seemed a shame to disturb it. Perhaps because that life seemed so exciting, so gay and full, people were content to believe there was nothing below that surface layer. But if you are guided by that, you will miss completely the girl herself, the warm, loyal, intensely tender person who is occasionally a little sad and a little lonely; you will miss all these things if you are content with the glimpse you get of her in her playtime.

The other girl has been there right along. The girl who is Cheryl Crane's mother. The parties for Cheryl, the birthday parties, the rides in Central Park, the excursions to the playground, and on the merry-go-round, the race horse they own together, are more a part of the real Lana than her dancing nights. Her pride in her little girl is immense. Pride and a kind of awed wonder.

"We've done a lot of traveling, we two," says Cheryl's mother. "But no home. We're going to find a home—somehow—and sink roots. Deep ones. The kind I've never been able to have."

"But Cheryl's life must be pretty glamorous as it," we objected. "She probably..."

must wait on the mysteries of finding 'the right story' and the long task of getting ready the production. Sometimes it's a long wait.

Lana thought of taking some college courses. She was persuaded against it. They might give her a F for effort—and mob her. Or write it off as just another publicity stunt.

"But I must be busy, somehow," she told me. So she has turned to her small daughter for help. She will give Nana a vacation. Granny, Lana's mother, who has always lived with her, will go to Central America to visit friends and Lana will assume full charge of Cheryl. They will leave the "cracker box" and go to Carmel—and Lana will wrestle with Cheryl's washing, see that she eats her spinach and takes her nap.

They are great company for each other. Cheryl is little girl to the tips of her lovely fingers. She loves to help Lana dress, to watch her make up. At the age of three, she had mastered the art of the lipstick brush, or believes that she has. The effects, according to her mother, are original and wild.

She has a gratifying appreciation of clothes, whether they are the lovely little things her mother dotes on buying for her, or something new Lana has. She's very professional in her approval. She looks at the seams, runs the material with her tiny fingers, then she pocks her dark head on one side and says, "My, that's smart!"

Cheryl receives gifts and flowers and phone calls from her mother's admirers and she loves it—but she is beginning to consider such things a bit frivolous. She has encountered the word "death" for the first time recently and when Lana puts it, "She's teaching me how little I really know. However, I don't believe in brushing off her questions with a vague and trite answer, but it's no cinch to put your finger on the right one, let me tell you."

"Take the word 'why'," said Miss Turner. "They ask it, and it forces you to pause and consider. You take a really good look at the thing or situation, probably for the first time, and you begin to wonder 'why' yourself."

"It keeps you busy. Every day it's something new—and the things get bigger and bigger. We found out that dark rooms could be frightening the other day—from a little girl who has been taught to be afraid. The cause of the little girl's fear was the idea that if you do anything beside sitting perfectly still and prim in a chair you die—the whole of feeling Cheryl gets into that one scares even me. Well, we dropped that particular little girl from our social list, of course—but now I'm smacking up against the problem of teaching her caution—and not filling her with fear."

So the two of them are learning together. With each new problem faced, with each step in Cheryl's development, Lana grows too, and she becomes closer to her beloved daughter. It is a process of unfolding for them both and it is teaching Lana new and more wonderful meanings for her own life.

Lana Turner is like a highly charged dynamo, literally so full of warmth and generosity that the desire to live fully that it overflows. Before Cheryl appeared on the scene the overflow scattered in all directions. Diamond On Her Finger

She was beginning to be allowed to have dates along about then and it was the most tantalizing thing to see her at Mocambo, escorted by Bob Walker or Gay or of a dozen other eligible young men and be able to think of no excuse to ask to be introduced.

Diana recalls, "I began to notice this man who was always looking at me. He looked nice and finally I got so that I'd fix my face in that sort of half-smile you put on when you aren't quite sure whether or not you've met someone and you want to be nice about it. That evening I was conscious of a slight face-flicker.

When a magazine wanted a pretty girl to pose for pictures with Henry's own, personal protégé, Guy Madison, Willson bluntly suggested someone had another idea, he gave in without a murmur. You can see the state he was in by that time!

"Heen for goodness sake... and how I absent-minded can a man in love get... it dawned on him that another of his discoveries, Jim Brown, not only knew Diana but had played opposite her in "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay" and "Our Hearts Were Growing Up." The time he had wasted. He didn't want to go any more. That very evening the Browns were tried protestingly from their three young children, and perspiring too where to go. The introduction was duly accomplished to the relief of everyone... even the headwaiters, who sometimes get to brooding over things like that.

And the next evening the Browns were uprooted again to have dinner at Henry's house... Diana being a special guest... and to go dancing again. But first—and how impossible they dropped in at the wedding reception of a friend of Henry's.

Diana remembers that she wore a pink and black tie silk frock and a big black hat and that Henry liked the hat, adduce that he practically, never liked women's hats. This made her feel very nice. "Then," she says, "I discovered that he was the most marvelous dancer. Simply wonderful. And then I began to look at him... really look, you know, the way you do when you're beginning to wonder about someone. I thought he looked like a sensitive person, not the sort who would have his feelings hurt easily or anything silly like that, but the sort of person who is sensitive to important things, who knows and understands the people, and it could be.

The courtship was unconventionally conventional. They did not have a favorite drive-in or quaint Italian restaurant down an alley and they did not go riding on roller coasters or bicycles. They dined and danced at fashionable Hollywood spots and the most sensational thing they did was to park the car and take a walk in Beverly Hills.

On this occasion Diana was rather late returning home and her mother pointed it out to her. "But, Mother," Diana gasped, "I spent this extra time being proposed to!" Mother didn't seem a bit surprised. "What did you say?" she inquired mildly, to which Diana, almost as surprised at her mother's attitude as she had been by the proposal, stammered, "Well... I... I pretended it was joking and I guess he must have been... uh... don't you?"

Two dozen roses were delivered to her the next morning with a card which read, "To celebrate my first turn down." Her mother's dry comment was, "He wasn't kidding."

Diana couldn't quite trust herself to de-

Decide something which seemed so terribly important to her.
She was still in her teens but she had been working in pictures for a number of years and marriage seemed a precarious business to her.
"I think I wanted as much to be certain that I was the right person for him as to be sure he was right for me. When a man is as talented as Henry is... and when you know he's going to be more and more important as the years go by... it is dreadfully important that his wife be right for him.

A little later she was cast in an important role in "Easy Come, Easy Go," and she was frightened about it. On the first day of shooting more flowers were delivered to er dressing room with a card, saying,
"Don't worry about a thing. If the picture is a flop, you can marry me and we'll both go into vaudeville." This struck her as such a completely ludicrous idea that her fears melted. "What an alternative!" she kept telling herself.

HENRY had a ring made to order in New York, a beautiful white-blue diamond in the daintiest of settings. "I thought I'd have it on hand... just in case..." he explained, when she showed it to Diana.
She tried it on... for size... and "just in case..." and, although it was too large, and although she hadn't said, "Yes," it was so lovely and she was so feminine well, she wore it that evening. "I wanted to see how it would feel to wear anything so enchanting."

The ring went back to the jeweler to be made smaller and of course, rumor-hungry Hollywood had it that there had been an engagement, complete with ring, and that it had gone platinum. It hadn't happened. Diana still didn't say, "Yes," let alone saying, "No!"
Diana, you see, comes from a solid, sound American family which has nothing in common with what is expected from people in show business. Her father is an oil company executive, Louis Willson Loehr.
Her mother, Mrs. Louis Loehr, was at one time considered one of the West's finest actresses. Diana was in demand as a child pianist by local musical organizations before her little feet could reach the pedals.

She was discovered by Paramount when that studio was holding auditions for gifted childhood for a picture called "There's Magic in Music." She has been under contract to that studio ever since. Show business, you see, chose Diana. Her home is in View Park, a suburb of Los Angeles, and she was reared as any suburban girl, despite her accidental encounter with motion pictures.

Henry, on the other hand, chose show business—and no mistaking about it. His father is H. L. Willison, retired president of the Columbia Phonograph Company.

Henry was born in Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, attended Eastern private schools and spent his vacations abroad with his parents. Before he was twenty he was invited to spend six weeks with the actor, Tom Brown, and his parents in Hollywood and that really did it. Henry determined to write about Hollywood for magazines... and he did, too, despite the fact that he had sixteen rejection slips for his first article about movie personalities before he finally sold it.

An actors' agent, impressed with his enthusiasm, hired him to discover and develop young talent.
He came through with such personalities as Dawn O'Day (who turned into Anne Shirley), Marie Wilson, Joan Fontaine—and the next thing you knew he was with the Zepplin Marc Agency with the impresive title of vice-president, and everyone in Hollywood remarking about how young he was for such a post. It seemed still more remarkable when, three years ago, he joined Vanguard Films, Inc., as assistant to David O. Selznick.
College girls lead the way

Why are college girls such originators? Why are they usually ahead of other women in ideas and customs? Is it because they are away from the fixed patterns of life at home? At any rate, a great many of them are discarding belts and bulky pads for monthly sanitary protection—and are turning to the modern Tampax method. This is proved by the record of Tampax sales in women's college towns!

Tampax is truly a modern product, invented by a doctor to be worn internally. No external pads. No supports. Nothing to hamper or chafe. Made of pure long-fiber cotton compressed in easy-to-use applicators, Tampax is invisible and unfelt when in place. It requires no sanitary deodorant... Changing is quick and disposal trouble practically disappears.

Active, busy women find that Tampax leaves them free and unhampered. Also stops worry about bulges and edge-lines. Sold in 3 different absorbencies—Regular, Super, Junior—at drug stores and notion counters. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

So Henry, too, although in show business, was not, in the beginning, of it. Perhaps that explains a little, their attraction.

They had adjustments to make before Diana could make that decision.

"Henry is always on the telephone," she says. "At first it annoyed me. It seemed to me that whenever we were going anywhere... or even after we arrived there... he was constantly being called to the phone. It seemed inconsiderate of him to keep me sitting somewhere while he talked on the phone. You see, I hadn't been accustomed to an executive. I guess I'd just gone around with school boys or with actors who, if they weren't actually at work, had nothing to do but improve the sultan and make with the sparkling dialogue. It finally dawned on me that it was because Henry was considerate of other people and their problems that he was constantly interrupting his own relaxation to talk with them. I liked him for it. "And don't think he didn't have allowances for me! I'm moody and I know it. I wish it weren't so. Henry understands just how to take it. He knows when to be sympathetic, when to ignore it and when to try to laugh me out of it. He's nearly always right, too. That takes an understanding person."

Old, of course, Diana finally said that big "Yes!" The beautiful ring gleamed on her finger. Henry was shopping for a new house... a "married couple house" to replace the ideal bachelor establishment which he now has. It will be a house just big enough to accommodate two career people, so they won't stumble over one another. Big enough to entertain a variety of friends...

"We must have different kinds of people, so that we shan't get into a rut..."

Henry is insisting that Diana "express herself" in the furnishing of this idyllic haven and Diana gasps, "I have so much to learn. All I can tell you that I want is that it shall be simple and—and...easy... without being too cute. Surely you can have a really American sort of house without having chintz roses leap at you from every wall and nook and cranny!"

Wedding plans are indefinite at this moment because Diana is going into "Little Women" for David O. Selznick and the picture may be long in shooting.

Would you like to know what she said when Henry asked her if she'd like to go to Bermuda on her honeymoon? She wrinkled a brow and said, "But I'm afraid we couldn't find anyone there we knew. Don't laugh at me, darling... I know you well enough by now to know that you aren't happy unless there are people around... at least near enough to telephone you. I want you to enjoy our honey-moon!"

There speaks an understanding heart.

IT'S LIKE THIS WITH Harry and Me

Sometimes silly...
Sometimes sensible...
But always very, very sweet...
Let Betty Grable, our November cover girl, tell you the wonderful details NEXT MONTH
Second Chance

Trust her to know that that grin was startling. That's the type of personality Garson is—wily as a white Persian cat, with the grace of a Chinese philosopher.

"I am receiving a re-education in being glad to be alive," Greer said. "I am suddenly aware that I am living in a golden age in a God-given climate. I can't exaggerate how grateful I am.

The last time we had seen Greer was on the set of "Adventure." There she had been all taut nerves, for she hated her role just as much as Gable hated his.

Before that, when she was making "The Valley of Decision" and "Madame Curie" there had been the war days of worrying over her husband. Prior to that—prior even to her marriage—before "Mrs. Min- ver" or "Pride and Prejudice" or any of those hits, Greer had been a lonely, bewildered, intellectual beauty. She wasn't a Photoplay Gold Medal Winner for the most popular actress in America then, no First Lady of Flinmill, no Queen of M-G-M.

Around Hollywood they used to-wise-crack about Garson at that time. They said, "Garson's idea of a good time is to go to bed with a good book." Of course, that wisecrack got back to her and she was hurt and bewildered. For that was one of her ideas of a good time. It still is.

So, seeing her this late-summer afternoon brought the realization with a pleasant shock that Greer was quietly happy.

"This contentment—this absolute appreciation of life for life's sake that I feel now is the result of my being swept off that rock and into the sea at Carmel a couple of months ago," she said. "The whole accident was perfectly fantastic and I had never expected I'd make newspaper headlines in that manner again.

"One moment I was standing there, with my back to the camera, about to be the great artiste, and the next, the ocean had sideswiped me, and I was floundering around in those crashing waves. My legs were being torn against crags, my back was scraping against some monstrous jutting point. For practically the only time in my existence, I realized must keep my mouth shut. The waves washed in and out over me, and I did not have time, nor any impulse, to review my past life in the way books say one does. I only remember thinking that it was an easy way to die—to give up my being just for a more exciting shot for a movie—and that, wildly, passionately, I wanted to live.

"Then, like a miracle, I felt an arm around me, a gloriously strong arm—and the next thing I knew I was being lifted out of the water. I heard one of the camera-men crying, 'Did you get the whole action? Did you get you?' I knew, from his voice, that he was in a kind of hysteria. But all I could think of was that I was actually safe. I wasn't dead. It wasn't until next day in the hospital that I began to come back to any sort of well-mannered consciousness and began to wonder who had rescued me."

The man who had saved her was Vincent Solemto, a member of the Abalone Fisherman's Association up at Carmel. He had been working as a technical adviser on the film for M-G-M and for a little while after the accident he thought too, might become an actor.

"Vincent's very handsome," Greer said. "He's got a tremendous personality, and he might very well have been a good actor. Naturally the studio was so grateful to him that we would have done anything for him, but I was very happy when..."

he finally decided he wanted to go on being just what he was, a fisherman living in a small village with his nice family.

"But as for me—well, look at my legs. They're all scarred and my back really looks like a relief map of India. When we had gone up to Caroline, I was very concerned over Robert Montgomery's walking out of 'Sacred and Profane.' I was a bit worried over Richard Hart replacing Mr. Montgomery—just because he hadn't had any previous part in the picture. I was fussed up over bad notices I had received on 'Adventure.'"

Greer shrugged and grinned again. "In the hospital I realized not one bit of that mattered. The moment I came into my own home, I realized how cluttered up with unessentials my life was—and my mind, too. Here it was summer, the first summer of peace. Here was my husband back, absolutely unharmed. His career was hitting on high again. Here was my mother, suddenly assuming a career of her own, no less than Mr. Montgomery's production—even if he wouldn't be in mine. Well, I suddenly became aware of the very great, good fortune that is mine.

"What's more I knew the things I was wasting energy on didn't matter in the least. What I did first was to go upstairs and read those bad reviews on 'Adventure.' I still didn't like them, and I didn't feel at all sadly about those critics, but nevertheless I came away from those reviews and knew I had learned a thing or two."

Richard Ney and Nina Garson came in at that moment both on their way to dates—Nina to a matinee with her fiancé, Richard to Twentieth Century-Fox and a test.

"In case Lana Turner or Betty Grable call, you know where to get me," Richard said.

His wife gave him a mocking, unrefined look as he went out toward his car.

"One of the things I shall be doing more of in the future," she continued, as though we hadn't been interrupted, "is spending more time up at our place at Pebble Beach. It's such a simple little house, but Richard and I have such fun there. We do our own housework, including cooking. We paint the fences, we put down our own garden walks. And I garden. I've a 'Green Thumb,' you know. There are enough 'names' up around Carmel and the Beach that no one gives us a second look."

"Right now, Metro wants me to sign a new contract—ten years straight, no options. They have been so good to me. It is, of course, the only company I've worked for—but ten years—that's such a long time to think ahead. And I seem to be too completely lazy to think hard. In two or three years, Richard and I want to do a play together or on Broadway or in London. Richard had very fine stage experience in 'Life with Father' and in London I did all sorts of roles—entirely different from anything I'd done on screen."

Without questions being asked, Greer has already replied to those rumors of a Garson-Ney split-up, and she was, you may be sure, perfectly aware of the Beaumaris link they had.

"One thing that ocean dip did to me," she said, "was to make me feel very responsible to try and give other people a sense of happiness. Do you know that when I came home from the hospital, I found a medal here, sent to me from Belgium and another gift, from Tel-Aviv. Think of honors coming to one from trouble lands like these! It is to say, 'thank you!' for such lovely gestures that makes you want never to make anything but the finest pictures, expressing the most permanent truths, and to see that you, yourself, live up to them—even on a second chance, like mine."

THE END
Shadow Stage

Continued from page 28. An undercover game that goes into the making of a governor, the powers-that-be chose instead to let this degenerate into a second-rater in which politician Sylvia Sidney thinks as much about her hat as about her campaign, more about sitting on a sofa in a sweater with Mr. Ace, George Raft, than about ending up in the governor's chair.

Margaret Wyndam Chase, as played by Sidney, given to striking tragic poses, turns into a completely unsympathetic character; with the role of political boss Raft has a chance to employ all his usual gangsterish tricks. The political convention is passed over lightly, as is all the rest of the meager episodes, in favor of would-be sullty looks between Raft and Sidney.

Canyon Passage (Universal)

HERE'S the West again—great but not so glorious, what with Dana Andrews giving the mean Ward Bond a lusty beating-up, Brian Donlevy gambling away miners' gold that has been entrusted to him and Indians burning cabins and scalping settlers with wild abandon.

The Technicolor background is Oregon in the Nineteenth Century. Dana Andrews as the earnest young colonist, Brian Donlevy as a plusher sort of fellow and Susan Hayward as the feminine foil go about their business of making this a colorful, rousing Western story. There is much of murder, fist fights and an Indian raid that will make you thankful you didn't travel in covered wagons. Andy Devine plays a straight role as a pioneer; Hoagy Carmichael strums out some tunes; Ward Bond is the heavy-weight who tries to knock Andrews right out of the picture.

Without individual to point it up, the film remains a true-to-form Western.

Your Reviewer Says: Solid stuff for Injun fanciers.

Night Train to Memphis (Republic)

YOU can get aboard this if you're a rooter of Roy Acuff and his Smoky Mountain Boys; otherwise, let that night train steam right through your station. In this episode Roy plays the good honest soul with the heart of gold and the bad brother who has to be made to see that the railroad company didn't frame him after all. Since Acuff is a railroad president's daughter, brother Allan Lane eventually stops scowling and sees the better side of things—that is, after everyone keeps double-crossing everyone else over a strip of land everyone wants.

Your Reviewer Says: If this is your ticket...

The Big Sleep (Warners)

BOVIVIOUSLY designed as a great big murder mystery, this is full of action, full of Bogart and Bacall. Unfortunately, the vehicle is not big enough to hold everything, that gofers wander off over the side until the audience is not sure who is killing off whom and why.

Bogart plays a hard-handed detective, hired by old General Sternwood to straighten out his affairs. This turns out to be some assignment, even to a capable two-fister like Humphrey, since the affairs are all mixed up by two daughters—Lauren Bacall, who is beautiful but enigmatic and Martha Vickers who has a tendency to throw herself into strange men's arms, bite her finger and get involved in murder during a thunderstorm. Bogie does his best to find out everything, dashing about from corpse to corpse, meanwhile keeping off to pass the time of day with Lauren.

It is during these periods that you will begin to feel it's a pity Hollywood thinks the Bacall-Bogart team must talk in double entendres.

The question of the talents of Miss Bacall is still debatable. While she is not miscast in this as she was in "Confidential Agent," her acting power still seems to be her ability to look the ways the boys like her to. Whether this is due to the confining nature of this particular role, or her own limitations, is something that may be settled by her next film.

Your Reviewer Says: You won't sleep.

Down Missouri Way (PRC)

SHIRLEY takes the lead in this—Shirley being a mule who's been to college and whose educated mind sometimes seems to be balking at the general proceedings, as well as her hoss. O'Doole is Shirley's—professor—where she's wearing her horn-rimmed glasses; otherwise, she's a goner for the smooth looks of Hollywood producer William Wright who's come down to her farm in the Ozarks to shoot a motion picture.

John Carradine lets his hair grow long and way to be miscast as an artistic Hollywood producer. John and his wife and Todd make strictly rustic love; and Roscoe Ates talks hill-billy through his beard and corncob pipe.

The motion-picture company has quite a bit of trouble convincing Martha that Shirley should act in the picture and convincing Shirley's college associates that all this is really cultural stuff. Every five minutes Shirley goes up a string while the cast is munching turnips, some crooned romantically by Martha into Shirley's twitching ear.

Your Reviewer Says: Not our alfalfa but the corn belt could love it.

Her Sister's Secret (PRC)

"HER Sister's Secret" belongs to the good old nickelodeon days when folks liked their melodrama "meller." It presents Nancy Coleman and Margaret Lindsay as sisters who share—guess what—a secret. The secret is a curvy-headed designer to pull at you breastfully, and whether the sign works or does not upon your mood.

The film opens in New Orleans with Nancy Coleman masqued Mardi Gras gal who flirts with handsome soldier Philip Reed. Within ten minutes they are attracted to each other; another ten finds them riding beneath the moon fatly in love. The gold-digger sails away; Nancy turns to her sister for help in keeping her secret. The sister adopts the baby and then the tug begins.

It's P. Neon's most effortful date to date and, as such, it's step in the right direction even though there's considerable distance to be covered yet.

Your Reviewer Says: For sentimental females only.

Lady Luck (RKO)

WHETHER you are addicted to the gambling tables, or the horses or just the odds on human nature, ten to one you'll get some uninhibited laughs out of this unpretentious little picture.

Much of the joyousness can be laid down as the "Lady Luck" of the title, and this is no "Dark Victory" for Erol Seberg (who plays the role) and it's no "Down Missouri" for Shirley. It's just a case of a girl who can't resist the boys, and that's all.
OH, THESE HORRID PIMPLES

Those ugly facial blemishes, pimples, blotches may be dermatothrophilosis—the medical name for certain external skin irritations caused by the higher fungi. Such infections are often very stubborn and annoying.

A common-sense way to combat them is with a fungicidal preparation such as Ting. Ting is both fungicidal and antiseptic. It is a dainty, pleasant-to-use, non-greasy cream that kills certain types of fungi on contact! It may be just what you need to help clear up the skin condition that is bothering you. Night in Paradise
(Wanger-Universal)

It couldn't be sillier. How an intelligent producer like Walter Wanger and an intelligent actress like Merle Oberon could lend their talents to such a turkey remains one of the unfathomables. The story was undoubtedly meant to be one of those oh-so-clever satires whereby modern conditions are superimposed upon ancient times. The results in this case are not oh-so-clever.

The story has Turhan Bey unhappily playing a juiced-up version of Aesop, the fable teller, who falls in love with the Princess Merle Oberon. Greedy for fine things, the Princess is about to marry Croesus, who in turn is greedy for gold. Aesop throws a monkey wrench into the works by revealing to the Princess that he is a handsome young man, not the hoary graybeard he appears (that's just make-up to fool the world into accepting his wisdom). Well—you get the idea.

Too bad this had to be Turhan Bey's last picture before his long-term service in the peace Army. Even Technicolor couldn't rescue it.

Your Reviewer Says: Paradise lost.

AWAKEN AND THE KING OF SIAM—20th Century-Fox: An unusual, fairytale story of an Englishwoman who becomes an integral part of the Siamese court of the Nineteenth Century. Irene James, who is beautiful, is chosen by the king to be his mistress. She becomes the palace of the king of Siam to teach his harem and his children the ways of the outside world, and Rex Harrison is excellent as the King. (Aug.)

AVENGER—PRC: Bruce Cabot, shrew from the Treasury Department, arrives at a ski lodge to discover the girl in the tax income of a gangster. Then snow slides lead in the guests at the lodge and murder begins. It should have been more exciting, but the credits of the have been freed by the story g" (Vivian.)

BADMAN'S TERRITORY—RKO: Randi Scott totes his gun around in the lawless West again. Ann Richards and her brother are a pair of Western cowboys, and the James boys, the Dalton's, and Belle Starr are all present. (Sept.)

BEHIND THE MASK—Mono: Another of the shockers of today, as the plot thickens with each scene. Those who have feared to watch the Westerns, can rest assured that the picture will not be a bore. (Sept.)

CENTENNIAL SUMMER—20th Century-Fox: A round of lighthearted fun set in a Philadelphia 1876. To the delight of Walter Brennan and his two daughters, Linda Darnell and Jeanne Crain, who become engaged to Englishman for England's caste system. Richard Haydn will kill with his portrayal of the village chemist, and Peter Lawford is seen in love with Helen Walker. (Sept.)

CLUNY BROWN—20th Century-Fox: An absolute laugh of a movie, with Jennifer fashions at the house in the English home of Reginald Owen. Charles Boyer is the husband and the lying-columnist, and he is as much a liar as the cluny brown. (Sept.)

COLORADO SERENADE—PRC: Although too long, this offers all the essentials of the time-proved Western—love, adventure, the beautiful scenery, and the customary fight to the end. (Sept.)

COUPLAGE OF LASSIES—M-G-M: A Technicolor account of a golden calf whose adventures are many and memorable. Elisabeth Taylor is his young mistress, and when he finally succeeds in eventually see combat as a war dog in the Aleutians and prove himself a hero. Frank Morgan and Tom Drake are also in the cast. "She's even more exciting than Scarlett O'Hara, Amber or Kitty!"

Could any man master this madcap? "Impossible," said her blue-blooded lovers...then she met a new kind of man—Tom Ligonier—ambitious young journalist. For Tom was the first man who said "No" to Percy and meant it—even while her kisses were still warm on his lips.

With him she plunged into the center of a plot that included riot and murder, threatened her life and wealth...and thrust her into a whirl of devilish intrigue—as the great figures of high society used even their servants to discover each other's secrets of business and boudoir.

GIRL: Don't be an idjit, midget! Who wants some boy hanging around all the time? Eating your food, keeping you out late, who wants—

CUPID: You do.

GIRL: I? Why I—

CUPID: And you'd have one if you'd just remember even plain girls go places if they go gleaming! Sparkling! Smiling!

GIRL: Sure. But my smile's a brownout. I brush my teeth but—

CUPID: No sparkle, huh? And "pink tooth brush" too, I bet!

GIRL: "Pink tooth brush" means something?

CUPID: That's for your dentist to decide . . . because that "pink" is an urgent warning to see your dentist! He may say it's serious . . . and he may say it's just another case where today's soft foods have been robbing your gums of exercise. If so, he may likely suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

GIRL: Is that all?

CUPID: Dearie, that's plenty! Sparkling smiles call for sound teeth; and sound teeth for healthy gums. And Ipana's designed not only to clean teeth but, with gentle massage, to help gums. If your dentist suggests massage with Ipana when you brush your teeth, take his advice, Baby, and . . . you'll be started on a smile that'll set men wishing!

No excuse, no alibi, no reason for not going to see "No Leave, No Love."

M-G-M, of course, Makes Greater Musicals!

When you see "No Leave, No Love" you'll say a lot of "what-a's."

What a story. What a cast. What a score. What a hit. And what a man...

Van Johnson, who is now in the van of all male screen stars, adds to his reputation in this one.

And Keenan Wynn wins a new title: F.M.I.P.—Funniest Man In Pictures.

There's a newcomer to the screen—curvaceous Pat Kirkwood, with an infectious voice and incandescent lamps.

Two orchestras. Count them—two—Xavier Cugat and Guy Lombardo provide the irresistible melody.

And in addition the film offers Edward Arnold, Marie Wilson and Leon Ames.

"No Leave, No Love," was produced by Joe Pasternak, outstanding musical picture creator. This one has the Pasternak knack.

Directed by Charles Martin who, along with Leslie Kardos wrote the screen play, "No Leave, No Love," fulfills all anticipations of good entertainment.

Incidentally, you will notice Marina Koshetz, the "countess" from Texas.

And hear some tunes that are hummable humdingers, such as "Love on a Greyhound Bus" and "All the Time."

"No Leave, No Love"? The answer is very definitely "Yes."

A LIFE story with plenty of life to it, this is going to leave a happy glow all over American audiences. It starts out with Asa Yoelson, played earnestly by Scotty Beckett, as the small son of a Jewish cantor, takes him as an adult, played magnificently by Larry Parks, through a great career—and all to the tune of the well-remembered Jolson songs.

Everything is there in spirited Technicolor—Al’s great ambitions, his great trouping, his great romance with dancer Evelyn Keyes. It is all bound up in a gold-papered package of good songs and good music. Contrary to most films of this type, it has you hoping the plot won’t interrupt the tunes too much. Larry Parks is Jolson; he performs with a punch, a sincere verve that captures his audience. Furthermore, he does an uncannily good job of reproducing a living man. Even the voice seems to be Jolson’s. His supporting players are splendid and right there with him—William Demarest as Steve Martin, Ludwig Donath as the cantor, Tamara Shayne as the mother.

The first half of the film is a masterpiece; it is only in the second half that a slowing-up becomes noticeable. It is doubtful, though, that even this will hinder your complete hand-clapping for a motion picture that gives you everything you want in entertainment—and what’s more, gives you Jolson back again.

Your Reviewer Says: Hats in the air!

The Killers (Universal)

The Jolson Story (Columbia)

JANE POWELL sings; Jose Iturbi plays; Xavier Cugat directs his orchestra; Roddy McDowall looks very, very British and very lovesick; Ilona Massey is beautiful; Walter Pidgeon, suave and a competent cast goes about the business of providing real entertainment with an entertaining plot. Net result: One of the best musicals of the year.

Against a storybook Technicolor background of the American Embassy in Mexico, Jane Powell plays the daughter of Ambassador Walter Pidgeon. She aspires to run the embassy and also her hopelessly infatuated swain, Roddy McDowall. In the process of arranging a party, she meets musicians Iturbi and Cugat, does some truly extraordinary singing herself and gets involved in some droll romantic monkey business. Supposed to be a fifteen-year-old, singer Powell looks and acts a little more, a point that is minimized as soon as her voice takes over.

The plot is light but sufficiently active to support some breath-taking music; a big bow is given to humorous episodes and to their chief progenitor, capable Roddy McDowall; the whole is full of color, full of interest, full of melody, full of fun.

Your Reviewer Says: This hits a high note.

Black Angel (Universal)

WHO has the jeweled heart pin? That's the big question in this murder mystery stewed up by Universal. Dan Duryea, the husband of slain singer Constance Dowling, doesn't know; John Phillips, the poor fellow who walked in on the corpse, says he saw it; but the police are inclined to think there just wasn't any pin. Sometimes the audience thinks they're having hallucinations, too, especially when suspects start piling up.

The plot is simple: Constance gets murdered; John gets convicted; John's faithful wife, June Vincent, starts pitching. With the help of Dan, who has a "Lost Weekend" too, about him, John gets a job singing in the club of her own private suspect, Peter Lorre. Of course no one recognizes her—even though the murder has been front-page news for weeks. Everything goes along delightfully with things getting more involved by the minute. But both the law and Dan were smarter than you thought, so the right man gets done in after everyone else is practically worn out.

Since the picture revolves around June Vincent, it's too bad she does not carry it more successfully.

Your Reviewer Says: Dark clouds around this angel.

No Leave, No Love (M-G-M)

The name Van Johnson is enough to make the lines start forming to the left, so they say; but unless the Johnson admirers are strong enough to sit through ninety minutes of film and still worship their hero, this picture is going to make everyone, including Van, suffer.

Your Reviewer Says: For Johnson worshippers only.

The Invisible Informer (Republic)

A DOG grows menacingly, ominous a music swells and presto! There's another body in the bayou. The prop men must have had a wonderful time hanging all that ghostly moss about; the purpose was probably to scare the living daylights out of the audience. But as it is, what with insurance investigators Bill Henry and Linda Stirling making a sorry mess of try...ing to discover whether the Baylors' emerald necklace really was stolen, the gross total of all this is boredom.

The Baylors are an old Southern family living on a gloomy old plantation with a dog that's a grand hiding place for bodies and a dog that bares his teeth every few minutes. This, as you can see, is a ready-made setup for villains and the same have a dandy time doing dirty work.

Linda and Bill are just helpless before them; someone else obviously should have been given the job.

Your Reviewer Says: Somebody had a bad dream.

C.I. War Brides (Republic)

There is one adjective that is sure to be tagged to this—and that is "timely." The film starts off on a nice fresh angle—British war brides and their babies sail from England to a new life in America. Among them is a stowaway, Anna Lee, anxious to get to San Francisco where a romantic captain, William Henry, awaits his lady—or so she thinks.

Carol Savage is a young lady with handsome husband James Ellison waiting for her in California, too, but she's not quite so anxious to get to him. So she hands over all her credentials to Anna, who sails blissfully off with the brides and babies. Since there's a suspicious reporter trailing her, she puts everything into her reunion with her supposed and somewhat bewildered husband. In fact, she puts so much into it—well, you've guessed what happens.

This is a spotty film—an attention-getter in some parts, a deadhead in others. But you won't feel cheated if you happen to line up to see it.

Your Reviewer Says: All right for a fill-in.

Step by Step (RKO)

Step by step, this gets more and more implausible. A great big haunted-looking house is the scene for mysterious goings-on, such as the disappearance of a blonde, the impersonation of a senator by a bad man and a corpse on the sofa. Everything is covered with dust, including the plot: Laurence Tierney, driving along the highway, spots the blonde, Anne Jeffreys, taking a swim, traces her to the house, finds her not and, being a most discerning fellow, feels in his handsome bones that something is amiss.

He's right, of course—a gang of crooks is trying to get a list of names important

Blonde for a Day (PRC)

THERE'S a lily-white hand with a big ring; then there's a shot; then there's a murder. Enter Michael Shayne, private detective, carrying on with his peanut-chewing and his mystery-solving in whimsical fashion. This time he's looking for a blonde who's methodically killing off some chaps who have won money at the gaming tables.

This search leads him right into a nest of crooked gamblers, tough-talking trigger men and fast-talking blackmailers. Hugh Beaumont, as Shayne, is helped along by his Girl Friday, Kathryn Adams.

In the end, of course, he finds the blonde and gives her to the police. If you happen to be a Michael Shayne addict you may not mind viewing these proceedings.

Your Reviewer Says: The least of the Shaynes.

If I'm Lucky (20th Century-Fox)

If THE trumpet of Harry James and the songs of Perry Como "send" you, you can risk seeing this and probably not have too bad a time. But if you're cold to crooners, just let it pass by.

James plays a bandleader; Vivian Blaine a singer; Como a guy who just wants to be with a band. He gets there via his song, "If I'm Lucky." Not only does he have a hit on his hands, but he finds himself running for governor. His backers are crooked, of course, just using him as the proverbial tool of their organization, but Perry is such a good boy and so in love with Vivian he doesn't catch on until it's too late. But when he does—well, give us more politicians like Perry.

Carmen Miranda struts plenty of her stuff and the music is right there all the while, providing it's for you.

Your Reviewer Says: Don't try your luck too far.

Never has the screen known greater, deeper, more stirring drama than this TRUE STORY of the nurse who turned her back on all that most women hold dear...to write in glorious deeds one of the most moving and exciting chapters in all human experience!
All aboard—with beauties Esther Williams, Laraine Day and Bunny Waters steering three vets. Boat took off from Malibu pier, was one of trips sponsored by business men—this one was arranged by Harry Karl, shoe manufacturer.

Guest of honor Susan Peters was right there to contribute her share of fishing and fun! Vets are from Birmingham General Hospital, Van Nuys.

Center of attraction—the live bait in the center of the deck. The biggest fish caught—a ten pound halibut—won veteran Frederick Smead a ten-dollar prize donated by the skipper. The boys, Susan, all agreed, it was a day they'll never forget.

Chow time is interrupted for Stanley Den Adel by Esther Williams. First halibut caught was fried on board. Mocambo supplied rest of food.
Spotted: Rita Hayworth was reported too ill to make a Hollywood Bowl appearance but the real truth is, she was too frightened and nervous to speak before so many people. That very night she startled diners at Romanoff's by appearing on the arm of Orson Welles and this was the first hint the town had of a reconciliation's being in the wind. The hint became a full-blown fact when Rita and Orson told their closest friends that they were going to give their marriage another try. Nobody's taking any bets that this will take, but give them a hand for trying.

A letter to Cal from Turhan Bey reveals the actor is on his way home after an overseas stretch all over the Pacific in the Special Service Division of the Army. And what's more—the actor will report back to Universal for his first post-service picture in November. His heart, incidentally, is free.

Cornel Wilde is so devoted to his Pat, he has taken over the job as his wife's agent. If the elaborate test Cornel arranged and supervised for her at Twentieth does not result in "The Black Rose" lead, Cornel confides he will arrange to have the studio loan his wife out for a picture. After "A Song to Remember" for Columbia, Cornel knows the value of a loan-out deal.

June Allyson's illness that held up "High Barbaree" was due to the fact the little star didn't feel her role in "Green Dolphin Street" big enough and the studio's "high pressure" methods "wore her out." So beauteous Donna Reed may step into one of the best roles of the year—co-starring or no co-starring billing.

Party Parley: This was party month in Hollywood with Cal spinning from one to another like a whirling dervish. Perhaps the most spectacularly beautiful affair was given in the enormous gardens of Kay Williams and her husband Adolph Spreckels with stars galore in attendance. Joan Crawford, after another spat with Greg Bautzer, came with Fred de Cordova of Warner Brothers. Bob Hutton staged it, but Lana joined him later after her stint at the Bowl. Van Johnson spent most of the evening with the Gary Coopers. Naturally the Wynns were in attendance.

Dancing under the great green canopy were Tyrone and Annabella; Hoagy Carmichael executing a fandango step with Roz Russell; Joan Fontaine and her groom, Bill Dozier; the John Waynes; and Richard Ney without Greer Garson, dancing every dance. Crawford confided that after a visit to New York, she’s taking herself off to South America for a rest. Vision the Latins permitting la Crawford to rest!

Head man Louie B. Mayer of M-G-M again proved himself the best dancer on the floor and from the way he admired the very lovely Patricia Morison, don’t be surprised if she lands an M-G-M contract. Ann Sothern and Bob Sterling, both tanned from golf and swimming, had dinner with George Burns and Gracie Allen at one of the beautiful flower-decked tables that surrounded the garden dance floor.

Another important event from the glamour standpoint was Sonja Henie’s soiree. Sonja, who has been doing everything in a big way for the past couple of years, took over the Crillon Restaurant, which is strictly for dining—and had a tiny dance floor put down in front of the small bar. The place was jammed—but nobody minded the crush, it was so very gay. Lana Turner, pounds overweight, was “wearing” her new light brown hair out in public for the first time—and it’s very becoming and softening to her (Continued on page 16)

mop of white she's been carrying around for so long. Sonja managed to be a perfect hostess and find time to coo all evening with Stuart Barthelness too. These two get off in a corner no matter where they are and seem to be oblivious to the fact that there's even a party going on! Van Johnson and Cary Grant (with Betty Hensel) were there—and both, you know, are ex-beaus of Sonja's. (See the pictures on page 26.) Sonja said this was her "small party." The big one that she gives on the grounds of her home in Holmby Hills will be along in a few weeks. And know what? She and Stu spent the entire afternoon before the party at the restaurant, tasting everything that was to be served. That gal really works for fun!

Gene Tierney played hostess to about two hundred for what she said was the first really big formal party she's ever given—and she was so glad to be returnning all the hospitality that just about everyone at the soiree had shown her during her years here. Gene had just the top of a tent strung over her big terrace—because the night was balmy. A big dance floor and a small band kept things hot until about five A.M. Good thing the party was outdoors—because there is practically no furniture in the house yet—the living room, for instance, is absolutely bare except for the wallpaper, an antique mirror and two chairs that Gene's already chosen via her decorator. She takes weeks and weeks to make up her mind about anything she wants to put into her new dream house—and then she changes it! Her mind, we mean!

Lots of people were gossiping Linda Darnell and the Tierney into a big "feud" because Linda snagged the Amber role that Gene had her heart set on. But were the gossips faces red when Linda walked into Gene's party! So that ended that! Linda is about twenty pounds too heavy—and it all showed that night—her gown being white, no less—and trimmed with sequins. But she'll diet before starting Amber. There were more stags than we've seen for years—and not enough unattached femmes to go around!

Nuptially Speaking: Diana Lynn returned from New York with some beautiful bits of finery for her trousseau. Diana plans to wed Henry Wilson in January after she completes her role in "Little Women." Her best friend Gail Russell may not wait that long to wed Guy Madison. In fact, Gail has confided to friends that she and Guy will elope when they marry, as neither one of them wants a fussy wedding.

Recently Guy presented Gail with a gold bracelet with a gold heart attached. "Have whatever you think would be appropriate engraved on the heart," Guy told her. Gail insisted that the little word "Tiffany" was all the engraving she needed to render the gift a priceless possession. Plus, of course the implication in the attached heart.

Wishing to return the compliment Gail purchased a blond cocker puppy as a gift for Guy. It was several days before Guy could claim the puppy and one look at Gail's face told Guy it was too late—she'd become too attached to the dog. So Guy pretended to "persuade" Gail to keep the pup and she couldn't have been happier. A week later she purchased the mate for her blond boy friend.

Tale of the Hat: Turning the pages of a fashion magazine, Barbara Stanwyck spied a hat that instantly held her interest... Now we all know there is nothing unusual in a woman's falling for a pretty hat but what makes this little episode unusual is that Barbara doesn't like hats, never buys or wears one. Even in pictures Barbara always tries to avoid wearing hats and when she must wear one, she won't even cast a second glance at herself in the mirror before facing the camera. Well, she fell so hard for this chapeau she secretly sent for it and, waiting until the moment arrived to wear it, she told husband Bob Taylor to be prepared for a surprise. Tenderly placing the hat on a chair in the dressing room she went to the bedroom to pat her hair in place and when she returned, there lay the beloved hat on the floor, a tattered wreck. From behind the chair the Stanwyck pooch peeped out guiltily.

"Where's the surprise?" Bob asked a few minutes later.

"I'm not wearing a hat and don't look so confused," Barbara said. "I almost wore one." Bob still looked stumped an hour later.

Stock contract at Twentieth was the best he could wangle and so for a year Gene danced in chorus numbers unnoticed by the studio. But one night at a benefit June Haver saw the boy dance and complimented him to such an extent that the youth, about to give up, decided to stick it out.

Several months later June noticed a lad sent over to the set of "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" to teach Mark Stevens several dance routines and recognized the dancer she'd praised before. Gene almost wept when June said she did indeed remember him and what's more she spoke so highly of him to the bosses, he now has three featured numbers in the picture.

Young People: Dinner at Kurt Kreuger's hilltop home, with the lights below glittering like diamonds and the azure swimming pool reflecting the moonlight, reminds again that movie sets are not really exaggerated when it comes to beauty. It's found here in Hollywood every day. Dining on Kurt's patio, the conversation of the guests also reminded us that the town is full of eager young working people anxious to make good in their jobs and meeting frustrations like every other group of young hopefuls.

Richard Derr, for instance, had returned after three years in the Civil Air Transport flying between Brazil and Africa and had just finished a splendid role with Claudette Colbert in "The Secret Heart" when suddenly he was summoned before his draft board for a physical examination. Those three years of hazardous work mean nothing, it seems, and it looks as if Dick may once more be back in the fold.

Oliver Thorndyke was taken from a successful stage career in New York, signed by De Mille and placed in the role of the blind boy in "Doctor Wassell." That was two years ago and Oliver has been given nothing since. As he and Buff Cobb said, "How do people in pictures get into pictures?"

Cue-line for laughter. Betty Hensel regales Jimmy Stewart with the latest laugh-yarn at Anita Colby's Conover party, gay get-together at the Beverly Hills Hotel...
nesakes: Model Marie Hayden and actor Sterling Hayden, who have more than a last names in common, add zest to marriage rumors, dining arm in arm at Ciro's.

Andrea King, her blonde hair worn in a simple knot, had returned from a New York vacation still on suspension for her disagreement over "Stallion's" "Shadow of a Woman," which she made almost two years ago, still sits release.

Handsome Carl Esmond was being the fact he plays only unrealistic villains these days and no one will remember him as a personable leading man. The host had learned only that day his studio had refused to loan him for a Paulette Goddard film and a New York stage play, although his last picture was "Dark Corner," released months ago.

But for all this, you never met a more cheerful group of young people determined to stick it out and wait for the clouds to clear.

Shorts: Dotty Lamour will be wearing the last gasp in hats—and a lot of 'em in "My Favorite Brunette." Now that she's only working with Bob Hope, minus Crosby in this one, she only aches half as much from laughing when she gets home nights . . . Bill Eythe writes his pals from London that he's been having a lot of fun with Reggie Gardiner's sister . . . Hurd Hatfield was not so lucky as Bill who is finishing a British picture. Hurd went to France to do a film that was called off after he got there because of production difficulties . . . David Niven cut his vacation in Rhode Island short to come back and play the lead with Barbara Stanwyck in "The Other Love." And his best pal, Bob Coote, always cast as a comic, is having his first sympathetic role in Doug Coote Jr.'s, first production, "The Exile" . . . Peggy Cummins went to Atwater Kent's party with Charles Russell—that's pretty steady dating now . . . Marsha Hunt waited for months to get her first swimming pool finished. And the day it was completed, she had to leave for New York to star in "Carnegie Hall" which is being made right on the premises.

PRETTY CUTE TRICK, this Emma-Jean. Under ordinary conditions the boys would be tumbling over themselves paying her court.

But tonight she's got two strikes against her. She's getting no place fast. And she, herself, would be the last to guess the reason why.* That's one course they didn't teach her at college.

You Never Know

Unfortunately you, yourself, may not be aware when you're guilty of halitosis (unpleasant breath).* The very night you think you are at your best you may be at your worst. You've got two strikes against you from the start.

Isn't it foolish to take such chances when Listerine Antiseptic offers such an easy, delightful precaution against off-color breath? Isn't it just common sense to be ever on guard?

Before any date where you want to be at your best rinse the mouth with Listerine Antiseptic. Almost at once your breath becomes fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend. So many fastidious people, popular people, never, never omit this first-aid to charm.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

Beauty Treatments
THAT SPARE YOU AND SPARKLE UP YOUR HOME

1. Furniture appreciates a facial as much as you do—to keep it beautiful! A daily treatment with famous O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish gives grand results. And it's easy. Just pour a little on a dampened cloth and do your dusting with it. This triple-acting polish cleans, shines and protects—all at the same time!

2. Give floors a "quickie" by putting a few drops of O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish on your O-Cedar mop. Keeps dust down, cleans with a gleam—whether your floors are painted or varnished or waxed. Cleans, polishes and protects all at the same time, too, just as it does on furniture!

3. Try this same All-Purpose gleamer on water spots and minor scratches. It's grand for sticky smudges, too—leaves a dry, gleaming finish that's a beauty to behold! (For deeper rings and scratches, try O-Cedar Touch-up Polish.) O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish is used in more homes than any other brand.

4. Hint for woodwork: Try adding a little O-Cedar All-Purpose Polish to your cleaning water, together with your favorite soap or cleaner. Removes fingerprints and grease like a breeze—leaves a lovely luster which helps protect the paint. Remember, it's O-Cedar—"the greatest help in housekeeping."

Lund in Luck: John Lund, the dashing hero of "To Each His Own," was downcast when Paramount suddenly shelved plans to make "The Wayfarers"—it meant a starring break for him with Veronica Lake and Eddie Robinson. But the powers considered the plot too gloomy. But hang on—couple of days later Lund was handed the plum role in "Blaze of Noon," the Ernest Gann novel, which will be a super-special—so not only his future, but his grin, is bright again.

South America—Take It Away: A few days before his take-off for Mexico Central and South America, Tyrone Power dashed over to pick up Cal for a spot of lunch. Because we were both in old clothes, we stopped at a drive-in for a sandwich and farewell chat.

Just that morning he'd received pictures of the plane he will pilot himself—and very beautiful it is. Ty will pilot the two-motored Beechcraft plane in company with co-pilot and navigator John Jeffreys. Publicist Jim Denton, Ty's secretary Bill Gallagher, and actor friend Cesar Romero will accompany him on his two months' tour.

We both howled over the prospect of Casanova Cesar with those beautiful Chilean girls. "Since Cesar speaks Spanish fluently and I don't know a word of it, I'll never know just what is going on," Ty laughed.

Annabella left for Europe after Ty's departure, but expects to be here to greet him on his return.

UNCLE REMUS

RUTH WARRICK
LUANA PATTEN
BOBBY DRISCOLL

What this new Disney musical drama is like:

For the first time Walt Disney turns his talents to the creation of a romantic live-action picture. Photographed in Technicolor, it's a wonderfully heart-warming musical drama of the Old South. You'll meet new stars—Bobby Driscoll, Luana Patten, James Baskett and a host of others—you'll hear 10 new song hits, including "Everybody's Got a Laughing Place."
Delightfully woven into the real-life story are the famous tales of Uncle Remus—told in typical Disney fashion. These are among the funniest episodes ever to appear on a screen—thanks to your new friends, Br'er Rabbit, Br'er Fox and Br'er Bear. "Song of the South" is an unforgottably heart-warming picture you'll want to see as soon as it arrives.

World premiere, in the home of the original Uncle Remus, Atlanta, Georgia, and Broadway premiere, this Fall. Nation-wide presentation early in 1947. Released through RKO Radio Pictures.

Dinner with Fun: Judy Garland, after a serious illness, seems well and happy again. At Romanoff's, Judy and her husband, Vincente Minnelli, innocently began what they called a progressive dinner and were having an enormous amount of fun out of it. It all started when the two were placed at a small but conspicuous table in the main dining room, where waiters and customers had to pass and repass. "It's like Hollywood and Vine," Judy laughed as they finished their salad and moved into the small room for their entree.

Soon they spotted Don Loper and to keep the progressive dinner going, they moved over with Don for their dessert.

Sight of the Month: Bing Crosby, in white tie and tails (for his role in "The Emperor Waltz") out on the Paramount studio "lawns" at high noon, practicing golf strokes and showering golf balls madly in all directions.

Incidentally, he won his point with the sponsors and will put his new air show on records—so he can have more time to go places and do things. He should be able to do a lot of things with that new salary—they're only going to pay him thirty thousand a week! But of course he pays his company and musicians, etc., out of that. One of the people he'll pay is Skitch Henderson, whose fingers fly over a piano like nobody else's—and whose "heart belongs to Anita Colby." And speaking of Colby—she had dinner with Clark Gable the first night he got back from New York, and they'd never have gotten past the soup course if it hadn't been for Cary Grant. So many people stopped to say a word and tried to stay, that Cary finally "stood guard" over the two—and kept table-hoppers away!

A GREAT motion picture has been made, so rare in its imagination, so breath-taking in its sweep of camera and so inspiring in its use of language that Photoplay urges its readers and their families to go to their local theaters as soon as the film is shown there.

The picture is William Shakespeare's "Henry V," produced, directed and starred in by Laurence Olivier. It was made during England's war years—a miracle of production that surmounted all the insurmountable walls of shortages.

Its significance is not, however, in the fact that it was made during the time of crisis, but in what it can mean to those of us whose world of entertainment is centered in motion pictures. It can mean more films that will dare, as "Henry V" does, to break out of the conventionalized prism of Hollywood to follow inspired producers' dreams, though they be through fields of dramatic form entirely new.

Already Hollywood discounts "Henry V," calling it arty, non-commercial, best fitted for showings in high school and college auditoriums. It won't, argue Hollywood's leaders, make money.

Photoplay predicts that it will make money, predicts that movie-goers will be caught up by the film's grandeur and enchanted by Shakespeare's words which, as spoken by Olivier, open new corridors of poetic meaning.

It is important that Hollywood be given such a demonstration of public desire for films that reach out beyond the norm. If "Henry V" becomes box office, as well as the acknowledged critical success it already is, pictures such as the current "Notorious" and "The Green Years," now thought of as Hollywood's finest product, perhaps will be made as truly great films rather than as the conventional slick product they now are.

It is never enough to follow public tastes. Today's film producers are in large measure doing only that, attempting to give us motion pictures they know we'll pay to see because they've already made the same kind before. These makers of movies must do more. They must lead us, educate us to better, finer films. If they fail, we will find another world of amusement where the fountain-head of inspiration runs as fresh as it does in "Henry V."

Clark, by his new convertible, in foreground of his ranch

It was one hour before midnight when the sleek green Cadillac swung up the driveway of the California Cabana Club and stopped at the brightly lighted doorway. Out of it stepped the bronzed man with the silver tipped temples and the woman with copper hair whose gown matched the green of the car.

He was smiling as he helped her to alight. Was he thinking with amusement of his own maroon town and country convertible station wagon parked at her Brentwood home because obviously her new green dress had been designed to complement her car?

She was smiling too. At life, perhaps. For it was odd her new picture, "Possessed," carried the identical title of a film they once had made together with sensational success.

He took her arm and guided her through the throngs of dancers to Emil Coleman's music, all celebrating the christening of Hollywood's latest and most exclusive club, steered her toward the table at which the maitre d' hotel waited to seat them.

Their appearance had an electric effect. The signals started flashing, "Look! Clark's with Joan!" To be sure, the signals would have gone out had Crawford arrived with Cary Grant or (Continued on page 85)
LINDA, WOMAN

Linda Darnell speaks frankly — the end of marriage, the — making her Hollywood's

By LOUELLA

The girl of the minute, the hour and the year in Hollywood is Linda Darnell who, this time last year, couldn't stir up enough interest to ruffle the edges of the gossip columns.

Almost in one stroke of fate, sultry-eyed, voluptuous Linda parted with her cameraman husband, Peverel Marley, and was handed the most cussed and discussed picture of the day, "Forever Amber." As though this were not enough excitement, busy Hollywood whispered she had said adieu to marriage because of millionaire Howard Hughes. That rumor started perhaps because Linda was one of the few of Howard's women friends who talked privately to his personal physician, Dr. Verne Mason, right after his plane accident.

That all this should happen to a girl who was just another pretty leading lady less than a year ago was meat and drink to Parsons, the type of inside story which I just love to go after.

Obviously the only person who could give me the right answers was of the two breaks in her life start of a new career as Amber most discussed woman

O. Parsons

Linda herself. When I called and said I wanted to talk with her, she came over to my house immediately.

I've always liked this twenty-three-year-old beauty from Texas. I was the first writer to interview her when she came to Hollywood, a gangling Southern belle of sixteen, not particularly polished as an actress and with little more to recommend her to a Hollywood career than a lushly beautiful face.

Seven years later she is still breathtakingly lovely to look at, still honest and direct, but with a new coat of glamour. Her "figger" has filled out—some say too much, but the day I saw her I thought she was just right. She's lost weight since she made "Anna and the King of Siam."

Not one to quibble, I put the most important question straight to her. "Linda," I asked, "are you going to marry Howard Hughes?"

Not one to quibble herself, she came right back with, "He hasn't asked me." And then suddenly she put back her pretty dark head and laughed heartily. "That's the silliest thing in the world. When Howard was so ill, Pev suggested that I go and inquire about him at the hospital. He is a good friend of both of ours—and that's that.

My garden made a pretty background for Linda in her cool, white suit. She wore no hat and her skin was not suntanned. Her coloring is a rich amber—which is fitting, you must admit.

"You know, at this moment," she went on, "I am more in love with Pev than any other man. I'm having cocktails with him tonight. He's the best friend I have in the whole world."

"Come, come, Linda," I said, "if you feel that way, why did you leave him?"

"We just didn't have fun together any more," she answered. "I never saw him. I was away a lot, and he is in such demand at the studios. He is busy all the time."

"You're sure the difference in your ages had nothing to do with it?" I queried.

Her eyes flashed. "Please don't think that for a minute. Pev is as young as any man I know. It's true he was married three times before he met me and he is forty-six to my twenty-three—but I was always the one who wanted to settle down and stay home. Often he would say, 'Come on, let's get dressed up and go out.' I would say, 'What, put on my girdle and high-heeled shoes and go stepping when we are so comfortable at home?' I don't like night clubs."

HOW often have these girls told me their dislike for night spots and how often have I seen them whirling about in one of the much publicized cafes! Yet, it's true—I haven't seen Linda lately at any of the favorite Hollywood spots.

"If Pev is still your dream man, let me repeat, why have you parted? Do you want your freedom, is that it?"

"Pev is my good friend, but we never had any time to be alone," she said, "We never had a real honeymoon. We went to New York after we had been married two years, and then the studio sent for me. Our second trip together was with Howard Hughes on the initial flight of the Constellation, and this time Pev's studio sent for him. That caused all sorts of rumors and talk and nasty gossip that he had walked out on me in New York when it was nothing more than a hurry-up business call.

"The things people say!" she frowned, shrugging her shoulders. "How unkind they are. Just today I read that when I left Pev he insisted that I leave the furs and jewels he (Continued on page 152)

She's electric, she's luminous, she's Lizabeth Scott of "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers" LIZABETH SCOTT is a girl living on a pendulum. It's not the sort of pendulum that swings gently from side to side; instead it flings itself backwards and forwards, notching its way a little further ahead with each beat.

But until the night she walked on her new mink coat, “just to show it the contempt I felt for it,” the throaty-voiced young star had never been aware of the role her likes and dislikes had played in her life.

It was the luxurious coat which brought her to the realization of the strange trait which has swung her to the top rung in the ladder with just two pictures under her belt, “You Came Along” and “The Strange Love of Martha Ivers.”

“For years,” she said with a depreciatory laugh, “a dark, rich-skinned mink headed my list of wants. To me it spelled success. Without it I should never feel like a movie star. The excitement of buying the one I wanted was one of the biggest thrills in my life. All day I paraded back and forth before the mirror while I rehearsed the lines for a radio show I was to do the following day. I was so thrilled about the coat that the dialogue I was trying to learn hadn’t much meaning for me. Then, suddenly, I got the feel of the play and the words began to come to life. I’d always hated radio broadcasts. They terrorized me. But all at once I was eager to give this performance. Eager! For goodness sakes, and only a week before I’d had to drive around the block a dozen times to get up sufficient courage to go into the broadcasting studio, and when I finally did confront that mike I lost my voice!

“The difference lay in the fact that on the other occasion I’d had to talk about myself in an interview. Now I was to do a play, a good play, and it was up to me to give a fine performance.”

It was then that the supreme (Continued on page 76)

Keep a smile on your face, a song in your heart and "just keep pitchin'."

That's the rule he lives by... this Buckeye Buckaroo. And it brought Roy Rogers from the farming community of Duckrun, Ohio, where he rode a plough and wrangled with sweet potatoes, to top film fame as the Western star who's so fast on the box-office draw now.

"Used to bury 'em in the ground with straw," he says of the sweet potatoes. "Then in the spring when you got short on food you'd dig 'em out. They're mighty good that way."

Back in Ohio Roy lived in a house he helped his father build on a little knoll overlooking a point where two creeks met. His dad worked in a shoe factory in nearby Portsmouth and Roy was the "man" of the farm, taking care of his invalid mother and three sisters. He cut down big trees, hauled them out of the woods with chains and chopped up wood for the winter. He drove a team of mules cultivating the crops... "the doggonedest, orneriest mules... although you shouldn't talk about any animal that way."

Feet That Danced

BY

DEERE

For generations Cansinos had danced—up to the time of Eduardo and the dark-eyed girl who danced beside him, Marguerita—who was destined to become Rita Hayworth

In the spotlight a girl was dancing. An exotic bloom of a girl with blue-black hair and full red lips, swaying from a slim, scarlet stem of a dress. A sensuous gust of music swept her now toward, now away from the man who followed her there on the floor. A man who danced with arms outstretched yet with eyes that showed no expectancy of ever holding her . . .

The tango ended and applause broke from the spectators ringed around the swank Club Agua Caliente's floor for the Dancing Cansinos, Eduardo and Marguerita. The men clapped thunderously, their table partners, with that more reserved tribute women pay to another woman.

Rita Cansino, even at sixteen, was already long-legged and Latin-eyed and very, very lovely. The measure of that loveliness was in the glances of the customers who watched her. The measure of it, a vastly different measure, was in the eyes of Eduardo—dancing with his daughter for the last time, there in the smoke-filled air of a night club in Tiajuana.

For some twenty-five months now they had been partners. Before that, in Los Angeles, they had been teacher and pupil— (Continued on page 110)

Any mention of horseflesh for the past year—or ever since Alan was cast in “California,” even though he didn’t play it—sets him off. Two Girls and a Friendship

When two girls put their “Best Foot Forward”—and one of them is

Junie Allyson—this is the rollicking result

I STILL remember the very first time I saw Junie. It was at the Y-Ellen-Bornstein Music Publishing Company and she was draped over a water cooler, her big blue eyes going flippity-flippity-flop very fast. And I remember my very first reaction to her: “Golly, she’s cute. She’ll make me look like a cow!” You’d have thought we were two kindergartners sparring for time the way we blinked and gave sick little smirks. Junie, being five feet two inches, probably felt she had the edge over me and my four feet eleven inches, so she was the first to get talkative.

“I’m June Allyson,” she beamed. “I’m here for a song rehearsal for ‘Best Foot Forward.’”

And that did it. We could hear Gene Kelly, our dance director, stomping around in the next room, and once someone yelled, “Where the blankety, blank are those two kids? Is this a song rehearsal or a sewing bee?” By the time Gene finally got us dragged into rehearsal, I’d heard all about Tommy and the blue convertible she was going to buy when her ship came in and Muffins, her dog, who thought he was a person.

As we were having a last drink, Junie flippity-flapped those lashes a little bit faster and whispered, “You know, I like you.” This time I wasn’t even ashamed that I couldn’t dream up a nifty comeback. Because all I wanted to say, and did, was, “Say, you know—I like you, too!”

It used to make me laugh (Continued on page 129)

It's definite — now. Gail and Guy will be married, maybe before you read this.

a GUY named BOB

If you want the true key to Guy Madison, search for the boy from Bakersfield—Bob Moseley

BY HOWARD SHARPE

The point about Guy Madison is that you'll never get a full picture of him from the guy himself. Not that he'll refuse to answer you—he has too much intrinsic courtesy for that. But he can't quite get used to the fact that Madison or what he does is of any importance to people. What's more, he hasn't had much time to know the man, Guy Madison. The one he knows far better is the boy from Bakersfield, Bob Moseley, which was his name before his Hollywood friend and guiding spirit, Henry Willson, changed it for marquee appeal.

So to fill out the missing measurements of the man, you search out those who are close to him. Gail Russell, for instance, the girl who has his heart and practically his hand. In fact, even as you read this, they may be Mr. and Mrs., for an elopement hangs alluringly in the air as soon as their two busy schedules can be pushed aside in the interests of a little gold ring.

It requires no vast scope of the imagination to understand how these two would be attracted each to the other. They'll make an eye-filling couple, Gail who has been hailed as the new Hedy Lamarr for her dark, brooding beauty, Guy who is the embodiment of strong sunlight. Yet it was not the physical appearance that drew the two together. Says Gail, "It's the way he gives you a straight answer, come what may. You learn not to believe a lot of things you hear around this town but when Guy looks at you in his quiet, square way, that's it—and you know it. It's like coming home to a warm house after you've been out in the rain."

Gail's words about the "square way" are well borne out by a near-catastrophe Guy once had while he was still a life guard at the station (Continued on page 118)

"WOMAN'S intuition," someone wrote, "is usually just man's transparency...."

Being a woman, I know this to be a nice, simple statement of truth. Being a wife, however, I wonder why no one ever seems to write about man's intuition—especially as possessed by husbands? For they have it, you know—at least, some of them. It took me a while to realize that part of the thrill of being Mrs. Harry James was in being one of the best "understood" wives in the world. . . .

I remember, for instance, two years ago when my daughter Vicki was staging her reluctant and torturous entrance into our lives. She was a Caesarian baby. There was a time when I was dimly conscious that the doctors and nurses weren't at all sure Vicki's mom (me) was going to make it. And then I remember Harry bursting into the hospital room and into my half-drugged mind. His face was chalk white but grinning—and in his hands were a dozen crossword puzzle books.

"Of all things—at all times!" I could hear a well-medicated voice in the haze around me protesting as Harry waved them foolishly in front of my face. I'm not sure whether I managed to laugh or not. I only know it was a great kick, a brand new surge of strength to know that he thought I’d be able to use them. You can’t let a man like that down—which is probably why I’m still around, still unable to resist a crossword.

After I was home again, he liked to brag about how “cooperative” I was, having the baby on Friday instead of Tuesday or Thursday, which would have interfered with his broadcasts. And then one day he quit joshing, gave me a straight look out of those ultra-blue eyes of his and said, “Look, kid, you’re getting fat.” Until then, I had been fondly considering myself as just a slight bit plump. A lot of men might have come up with something gallant like—“All the more of you to love, my dear,” but not Harry. He understands me well enough to know I’d rather hear it from him than from the studio, or maybe from the fans.

Six feet one, slim as lightning . . . Rex Harrison,

Rex, the king of Siam, is not Siamese but he is a king.
A few years back it would have been enough to call him a prince but now with inflation we must rate him a king. Besides, “Rex” means “king.”

For a decade he has been the far-flung favorite of the British Empire.
Indeed the sun never sets on Mr. Harrison. Yet there is no sense of royalty in the man whatsoever. English aristocrats and American mid-westerners are the most democratic folks in the world today. Snobbery has become the property of the proletariat.

At this point Rex dawned without trumpets on the terrace of the Beverly Hills Hotel for the purpose of assuming what is known among crowned heads as the feed bag.

Mr. Harrison is modern, post-war British as distinguished from old guard Hollywood British, whose empire accents were ofttimes thicker than Bea Lillie’s doing of a ginned-up duchess. Mr. Harrison has no sense of empire whatever.

“I have been a laboring actor twenty years,” he said, sagging chair-ward cheerfully.

“You still fail to look like one.”

“Discouraging, isn’t it?” he chortled.

He started barnstorming out of Lancashire at seventeen, so he must be around thirty-eight now according to my fingers. He looks barely out of his twenties. Discouraging, isn’t it? (Continued on page 137)

Million DOLLAR Lullaby

BY ELAINE ST. JOHNS
You're a lucky baby, Miss Minnelli, for who but you could go to sleep to Judy Garland's songs?

What pretty dresses the pretty baby has!

The girl in the charmingly sophisticated house that terraced down a mountain high above the Sunset Strip was looking anything but sophisticated herself at the moment. Her brown velvet eyes were fastened raptly on the page of an open magazine. The picture that pinned her attention was of a trained nurse holding a dark-haired baby with big brown eyes and a heavenly toothless smile.

Carefully she clipped the picture from the magazine and that night when her husband came home she showed it to him.

"Vin," she cried, "if only our baby could look like that!"

Vincente Minnelli, the talented young director, regarded his wife with infinite affection and smiled indulgently. He was to smile even more indulgently in the weeks to come as he glimpsed the picture in her bag, saw her take it out now and again to dream over, watched her tuck it up in her mirror at night.

But such was the force of Judy Garland's thinking that the first pictures of Liza Minnelli actually look like Judy's dream baby.

Looks, however, weren't really the important thing with Judy. Her great fear was that she and the baby might not like each other, or that she might not have any maternal instinct.

"You know, you have to realize from the beginning that they're people. Well, Liza and I met in the hospital and—well, everything was all right. We loved each other. She's quite a little person," she said (Continued on page 161)

I AM amazed more and more by Ingrid Bergman for, despite her glamour roles and the glamour yarns about her, she always appears as a plain person to me. Which is, you must admit, amazing ... Cary Grant is one of my favorite actors, and I easily understand his viewpoint about autograph hunters. Often they can be obnoxious or tiring. This does not mean that I do not like or favor autograph hunters, that would be absurd. But they, too, must realize that there are bounds and boundary lines ... Bellamy, to me, is the man who doesn’t get the heroine in the movies, which is strictly an indication of what the movies have done to me . . . I generally don’t go for slogans but this one for a horror picture amused me—“It scares the hades out of you.”

I THOROUGHLY approve of the clause in Keenan Wynn’s contract which states that he can run old movies once a week in a Metro projection room. It is interesting to sit there with Keenan Wynn, Mrs. Wynn, Van Johnson and look at an old film, of say Garbo, and not only enjoy it, but enjoy their enjoying it . . . I HAVE often wondered what certain actors and actresses think of themselves when they see themselves on the screen, and I guess you have also. The best way to find out was to ask them and so I put this question to various players and here are some of their answers. Dorothy Lamour replied, “At first it seemed like catching a glimpse of yourself in a mirror when you’re wearing underwear. Later, you start wondering what you’re doing. Finally, you decide it would be better if you worked harder at your work.” . . . Veronica Lake said, “When I see myself on the screen, I am always far removed from that person. A QUIZZICAL eyebrow, coupled with his aversion to “standing in line,” has been miscasting Robert Mitchum since childhood.

Even today in Hollywood, where he is one of the most talked-of personalities of the year, the popular impression of Mitchum slants towards the cynical. The unconventional. One slightly off-beat.

You read a lot about the more colorful chapters in his life. Riding the rods, sipping java with hoboes beside campfires, the occasions when he’s been detained as the overnight guest of a city—at the request of the city, that is. Yes, you’ve heard all this. For Bob brings out all the family skeletons and shakes them a little defiantly in your face.

Actually these were but brief stopovers—in his life travelogue. And just as he himself loves to stick pins in false balloons, we’d like to stick a big one in the common conception of one of the most fabulous fellows in Hollywood.

In some respects Mitchum is a little like his four-year-old son Josh, who tells you that he shot a “huge wildcat up at my house,” and then adds hurriedly that he buried it, before you can ask to see it. So does his famous dad say, “I’m a cynic,” then sits back daring you to question it.

But any real cynic would curl his lip at making a fraternity brother out of him. He despises regulations, yet lives by his own abridged version of the Golden Rule. He has at times been called a “trouble-maker,” because he refuses to kow-tow to anything else (Continued on page 148)

Headlining your hair! Greet the exciting winter with this casual, comfortable coiffure, the alluring answer for your night and day rounds

BY ANITA COLBY

Do you have the new post-war look? If not hurry, hurry, hurry! It begins with a short hair-cut, this look. And goes on, of course. For breathes there a woman with soul so dead who can have a new hair-do and stop there? The instant we restyle our hair we begin to dream about new hats and new necklines; until our friends insist even our personality has changed. Sheer nonsense, and we know it, but still heavenly fun.

This new post-war hair-cut is reminiscent of the bobbed-hair fad that followed the first World War back in the roaring Twenties. However, offering a halo effect as it shapes softly about the face, it produces a smarter and more graceful look than the Twenties' shingled, spit-curled flapper coiffure ever did.

The new styling requires that your hair be thinned, especially at the lower and center part of the head where it is likely to grow thickest. Then it is cut short all round; from eight to ten inches long, depending upon the size of your head and the length of your neck. But even in the back where the hair remains longer than on the sides it must be at least two and one-half inches above the shoulders.

Because of a popular misconception of our sex that cutting the hair is a step more irrevocable than getting married, I hasten to assure you that this hair-cut does not add up to any "if you don't like it you're stuck with it" routine. Actually it offers the greatest versatility. It can be worn sleekly, in a bang, fluffy, or pulled tightly to one side and fluffed out on the other side. It can be parted in the center, on the side or not at all. It permits you to add braids or a chignon. Actually it is the great adaptability of this coiffure that has influenced so many glamorous members of the movie colony to have their hair cut this exciting new way.

Among the converts are Ida Lupino, Ingrid Bergman, Maria Montez, Gene Tierney and Laraine Day.

Laraine Day, an exponent of the fresh girllish look, parts her naturally curly hair on the side and brushes her curls out softly at the ends. This, she says, is the ideal all-round coiffure, as perfect with party dresses as it is with the most severely tailored suits.

Ingrid Bergman, the epitome of naturalness and health, arranges her cut simply; in a variation of the old Dutch cut really, except that she pins her golden hair in a fluffy little roll on top and curls the ends under. Thus her hair requires little or no primping yet is always casual and well-groomed.

Maria Montez brushes her hair back from her forehead and ears sleekly, confining all soft curls to the back of her head. And, doing this, she becomes the essence of smooth sophistication.

Ida Lupino's reddish hair is very fine and soft; baby hair really. She brushes the front of it in a soft bang sometimes. At other times the front, too, is brushed upward with the ends loose and fluffy.

Gene Tierney combs her cropped brown locks to one side, holds her hair in place in the back with two combs, and turns up the ends of hair in soft curls that are quite plushy.

My short hair—to which I am so devoted that I hate to think of any new trend ever causing me to wear it longer—I do in what you might call a Janus coiffure. For it makes me as two-faced as a Janus mask; on one side sleek and a little severe, on the other very, very soft and fluffy.

To achieve this coiffure have (Continued on page 147)
Dear Miss Colbert:

My first marriage was so completely perfect that I am afraid to give myself entirely to my second husband. I was just twenty when, after a year of marriage, Bob was inducted into the Army. I followed him around the country until he was shipped overseas. It was a continual honeymoon without a single argument. Seven months after he had shipped out our little girl was born, and four months later Bob was killed in action. For several months after his death, there was actually some fear for my sanity, but very, very slowly I recovered from the shock. My baby became the very center of my existence. Last September a fellow I had known since kindergarten days came back from service and showed me every attention. We were married in February, but instead of entering on a life of contentment there is serious difficulty between us.

This is not my husband's fault. He is kind, considerate, affectionate and deserves the best in the world. I know that I am surely breaking his heart, but the reason is this: Every time he embraces me I have a stabbing sense of guilt, as though I were "cheating" on my first husband. I have explained this to my mother, and she has said that I am being morbid and should see a psychiatrist.

Jeanette L.

To judge from your mother's reaction to your problem, I would say that she understands you very well and can be of more assistance than I. Someone near at hand who loves you and will counsel you wisely is of great help in unraveling these emotional tangles.

I do not doubt in the least that your love for your first husband was a dynamic and exciting thing. First love, when free from the misunderstandings and personality adjustments that sometimes occur, is the sweetest thing in the world. However, you should regard this experience with gratitude and use it to enhance your stature as an understanding human being. Under no condition should you over-dramatize your loss, or should you allow your first marriage to cast a dark shadow over the rest of your life and remember, too, that your child deserves a balanced life.

Your mother's idea of a psychiatrist is an excellent plan, and if you can afford it I would suggest that it could be helpful.

HER RING—Five star-bright diamonds set with distinctive beauty in white gold.

She's Engaged! She's Lovely! She uses Pond's!

The New Blush-Cleansing” Marjorie Carolin uses for her smooth complexion will give your skin —an instant clean-sweet look —an instant softer, silvier feel —and bring up a charming blush of color

This is how to “Blush-Cleansing” your face just as Marjorie does.

You rouse your skin by pressing a face cloth drenched in warm water against your face.

You "cream-cleanse" while your skin is receptively moist and warm. Spin your fingers full of snowy Pond’s Cold Cream upward in circles, as if drawing engagement rings over your face and throat. Pond’s demulcent action gently loosens dirt and make-up as your fingers swirl. Tissue off.

You "cream-rinse" with a second thick Pond’s creaming. Spin 25 little Pond’s Cold Cream engagement rings up over your face. Tissue off.

You tingle your clean, clean face with a good splash of cold water. Blot dry.

That’s All! . . . "And my face feels so soft, looks smoother, glowier, right away," Marjorie says.

Every night—give your face the complete “Pond’s Blush-Cleansing.” Every morning—a once-over "Blush-Cleansing": a warm splash, quick rings with Pond’s, tissue off, then a cold splash. Dip your fingers deep in a big jar of Pond’s night and morning—every day.

I love this Pond’s new Blush-Cleansing,” says Marjorie

Five days after Olivia de Havilland became Mrs. Goodrich—in a New England garden

It's a lady's privilege to change her heart—as Olivia did—when the man is Marcus Goodrich

BY ROBERTA ORMISTON

"You have bad judgment about men," he told her. He was gentle but firm.

Much that he told her she had heard from friends before. But for the first time she accepted it as truth.

"If you really wish to reorganize yourself, Olivia, to stop making a mess of your life," he continued, "marry a solid, level-headed business man..."

Olivia de Havilland pictured the type of business man he recommended. And shuddered. However, because she was amazed that anyone should understand so much about her and because he, Marcus Goodrich, was the author of a novel like "Delilah" as well as being the most intelligent man she had ever met, she was convinced she should cultivate a business man at once.

They were in his car, returning to Manhattan. He had driven her down Long Island to East Hampton to see the John Drew Theater where she was to play Maggie in J. M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows" as soon as she had completed her engagement at the Country Playhouse in Westport, Connecticut.

The headlights illuminated patches of goldenrod and wild asters. The crickets' chorus increased with the chill that followed midnight. Suddenly the car swerved, with a warning thump.

"It's a flat," said Marcus Goodrich.

Carefully Olivia held the bolts and nuts. Carefully she kept the flashlight aimed at the wheel on which he worked. For a few minutes all went well. Then the Goodrich voice boomed out, "And for God's sake, whatever you do, beware of writers!"

It was after three o'clock when they reached the Hampshire House where Olivia and Phyllis Loughton, director of "What Every Woman Knows," were living during the two weeks the company rehearsed in New York. Marcus Goodrich was an old friend of Phyllis and her husband, George Seaton. On the train coming (Continued on page 83)

Intensely, Liz Scott

(Continued from page 43) desire of her life revealed itself and stood sharply defined before her. The yearning to be a fine actress. This was so all-important that it relegated to the limbo of trivia such material things as a mink coat.

Then I knew,” Lizabeth stated simply, “that this coat was purely a mark of achievement, like an A on a term paper. It had no value of its own. So I laid it on the floor and walked on it, just to show how meaningless it was for me.”

In the beginning, Lizabeth had no ambitions concerning the stage or an acting career. It was not until she had worked in summer stock in her home town in Scranton, Pennsylvania, that the instinct was awakened. It was like handing a cup of poison to Borgia. Now, acting is both a vocation and an avocation with this intense young person. She wants to work all the time. No sooner had she finished “The Strange Love of Martha Ivers” than she went in to see her film boss Hal Wallis.

“I’ve heard of a play I’d like to do, this summer,” she told him. “I used to love summer stock and it’s been years since I’ve even thought about it.”

Wallis, whose concern is to see that his star mixes in a little play with her acting, shook his head, “I don’t think you’ll have time,” he said. “You’re going on a long trip first to New York. Then you’ll fly to London for the opening of ‘Ivers.’”

That settled it. Lizabeth forgot again about summer stock.

But she hasn’t forgotten about England, even though she has had a busy time since her return, going into Columbia’s “Dead Reckoning” with Humphrey Bogart.

“I thought the trans-Atlantic flight would be very chic,” she said, “I thought I would fly with famous names, with statesmen and writers, with movie and theater people and such. There were one or two—but all the other passengers were simple people who worked at trades or in domestic service who were going home on holidays. The airplane companies encourage this travel above all, I understand. They want all people to use the sky lanes.”

In London Lizabeth did all the elegant things a visiting movie star is expected to do. Garbed in her Greek white crepe dress encrusted in gold beads, she went to the great dinner which preceded the premiere of “The Strange Love of Martha Ivers.” She posed for pictures, in her arms a load of roses, by her side the handsome young British actor Stewart Granger. She gave interviews to the press. She visited the Shakespeare country and Eton.

But at that wasn’t all. Intent upon learning what life in England really is like, she shopped for the weekly meat supply for a family she knew. Ration coupons in hand, she stood in the long patient lines at counters, joined in little exchanges with other standees and, impressed with the scant amount of meat her friends had for a week, left the shop humbled.

“There are black markets in London,” she said, “but they do not flourish.” Her speech intensified with the emotion she felt as she added, “No self-respecting Britisher would risk his reputation by having more food or clothes than the current rationing allows. They’re a wonderful people! I adore them!”

Again that pattern of intensity!

The design of her intense likes and dislikes and how she’s lashed herself back and forth against them is best recognized when you hear her order a meal. “I’d like a salad,” she says, “but no dressing.”

Lizabeth shook her head and smiled, "When I was a child, I had to take cod-liver oil. I liked it then. But now I can't bear dressings because they have oil in them. And when I was little, I couldn't get enough fried chicken. Today I never order it."

There are any number of things like those that Lizabeth, now, at twenty-three that I had at fourteen," she admits vehemently. "I used to love pretty clothes so much that it amounted to practically a hunger. Now, I have more blouses than anything else in my wardrobe."

When she was understudying Tallulah Bankhead in "Skin of Our Teeth," and didn't much money, she used to walk up and down Fifth Avenue, gazing at the beautiful gowns, suits and hats in the shop windows, hoping desperately that some day she would have enough money to buy all the clothes she wanted. Now she doesn't even own a hat, and wears the simplest of suits, or a skirt and blouse wherever she goes.

"When I was in New York last year," she recalled, "I'd been on salary for months, and it no longer was a question of money, but—I never went near a shop. I didn't buy a solitary thing the entire time I was in the East!"

In the early days of her career, B.H. (Before Hollywood), Lizabeth worked as a contract model for a fashion magazine, and one of the reasons she liked this job was because it gave her the chance to wear elegant clothes. Today, her only concern is that the skirts and suits be well fitted and her lack of interest in fussy frocks and dinner dresses is startling.

During this same period of fashion modeling, she made an endless round of night clubs. "I practically lived in the Stork, El Morocco and '21,'" she acknowledged. "If I wasn't at one I was at another. But I've only visited two night clubs since coming to Hollywood and both of those dates were made (Continued on page 80)

Lizabeth's contralto voice is warm; it dances in the room, grows still at the slightest movement of others. For she never has to move, words alone else is saying—and she has a surprising habit of analyzing everything that's said. Her interest in everyone else, in the problems of others, is as warm as her voice.

To really know this young, half-Russian, half-English, all-American girl you have to know about the four words she uses most frequently. Words which echo the beat of pendulum . . . adventure . . . color . . . love . . . progress.

Every hour of every day spells adventure to Lizabeth. For there's always something new to interest her. Now it's knitting. Yesterday it was making lamp shades. Someone suggested that she ought to have a hobby, so she started a "glass menagerie," and collected glass animals with all the intensity of feeling that she puts into everything she does. Her two most recent additions are a pair of playful pink elephants. Each new interest is taken up with keen delight, analyzed, and then discarded or kept—according to its value.

She is fascinated by color, and her apartment and clothes echo this fascination. All of her clothes are gay and bright with color, but her ability to combine various hues is an artistic triumph. And the minute you step into her apartment with its gay draperies, the bright prints upon the walls, and the vivid bits of pottery—like a final dash of paprika on creamed chicken—you recognize the bond she's had in decorating it. It's a rented apartment, but it's Lizabeth's because of her use of color.

As for love—a here's a girl to throw her heart upon the wheel and let it come up odd or even, black or red. "I've always been in love with music," she declared. "I've romanticized every man I've ever gone out with, but I haven't found the right one yet.

"I want to get married," her sincerity made the words tremble a little. "No life is complete for any woman without a man, a home and children. When I fall in love, I want to do so with my whole heart. But, I've never found a man to whom I could open up my heart and soul—yet. I guess I'm still seeking someone to inspire.

Next to love, Lizabeth's main hope is for progress. She would hate bitterly to stand still. Never to be a better actress than she is now. Progress. That's the word which slips most frequently into her speech, and that's the mainspring of the pendulous pulsation. All of her life her adorations and abominations have added up to progress.

"When I was a very little girl," she recognized, "I was a very chi-chi little girl. Then, I turned into a tomboy. And I remained a tomboy until my first year at college, when I went into chorus stock. Then, when I started work in show-business, I became clothes-conscious. Fine clothes meant more to me than anything in this world. Now, I know that it's ability not clothes that counts.

There is something violent in Lizabeth's yearning for ability.

"Oh, I want to do great things!" she cried out. "I want to have ability. I have to be a really fine actress."

There's no room for half-measures in the tempo of her life. Self-discipline amounts to virtually a mania with her. Again, it's an extreme. If she goes on a hunt and eats six bars of candy at dinner time, she denies herself even an ice at luncheon next day. Not in order to diet, purely a matter of (Continued on page 82)

"If things are simple," she laughingly admitted, "I add the touch to make them tough. Life itself is a struggle. I never coast along the easiest way."

And one of the easiest ways to make Lizabeth mad is even to suggest that she take the middle road. She doesn't drink and someone once suggested that at a party where everyone else was drinking, it would be easier to accept a glass of ginger ale than to turn a drink down flatly. "But I don't want ginger ale," she vetoed. "That wouldn't be honest." So she continued to say to her host or hostess, "Thanks, but I don't drink."

This terrific belief in honesty and self-castigation may have its roots in her Russian ancestry. Her mother, Marie DePenok, who was born in Russia and came to these United States as a small child, had some pretty decided ideas on rearing children. And though her mother never intended that it should work out as it did, it was she who started Lizabeth in show business.

"Mother believed that young minds should be active," she related, "and didn't want me to waste my summer vacation. So I tried to get a job as a counselor at a girl's camp. Then, I tried for the position of playground director near home. When I didn't land that, Mother suggested that I might find some sort of work with the summer stock company. This third attempt was the charm, and I worked with them all summer—mostly as a script girl, though I carried a tray across the stage a few times. I was fascinated by the lights and the color of the sets and the costumes. That's when I first knew that I had to be an actress."

"If a fairy godmother had suddenly appeared on the scene, complete with wand, and offered you one wish," someone queried, "would you have asked to be a movie star?"

"If I could have but one wish, at any time," she repeated, "I'd wish to have led exactly the life I've led, to have known a bit of hunger, a bit of fasting, a few moments of exhilaration and moments of longing, to have had a little sadness, a little gladness, and—a chance someday to be great."

"I met him about five years ago," Olivia answered, "at a party at Arthur Horn- blow's. I liked him very much, I remem- ber. The next night I saw him again dining at Romanoff's."

"Since then," Phyllis said, "he's been fighting in the Pacific. He was a com- mander—at Salerno and Okinawa."

The first evening they spent with Marcus Goodrich he reminded Olivia that he had been about to take her home from the Hornblow party when her gentleman of the hour had belligerently insisted on his prerogative, "Marcus Goodrich is not to see you home, I will!" He enumerated several telephone calls he had made to her house only to be informed she was not at home when he knew she was; whereupon he had put a pox on whoever had given her a bad report about him. He quoted her exactly the night she came into Ro- manoff's while he was dining and said, "Oh, there you are!" That could have meant anything, of course. But Olivia is certain now it was a prognostication.

It was on a Friday night that Marcus told Olivia to beware of writers. Four days later, on Tuesday, he arrived at her hotel in a state of great excitement, having decided that what she needed most in the world was a writer, specifically a writer named Marcus Aurelius Goodrich.

"I'm asking Phyllis to dinner," he told her. "You've appointed her your mother while you're here. I'm going to tell her, 'I am in love with this woman and want to marry her.'"

Olivia did not immediately give him his answer. She knew she was being swept off her feet; but none of the men she had ever been "in love" with before had ever meant anything in comparison to Mar- cus. They were together every waking moment that they were not working; she at rehearsals, he on his new novel about Mexico. They talked about Jung and the atom bomb, about publishers and movie producers—about J. M. Barrie and the superiority of kidneys cooked in red wine. They talked too about life in a big house in California, with walnut trees and a library wing soundproofed so even the noise of five or six young children would not disturb a writer at work. And at long last, two days later to be exact, Olivia gave Marcus his answer.

Rehearsals over, Marcus drove Olivia and Phyllis to Westport, Connecticut, saw them installed at the Inn, arranged to rent a cottage for himself for the week they would be there, then returned to New York to meet George Seaton, who was arriving from California, and to buy Olivia's engagement ring.

"I'd like an old ring," she told him.

He found it at the Hammer Galleries where they specialize in such treasures: two bands of yellow gold set with two heart-shaped Siberian amethysts and tiny diamonds.

"It came to us," the clerk told Marcus, "from the estate of an old lady. She was a very happy person."

They planned to be married in about two months, when Olivia finished her enga- gements in summer theater and on the radio and he had had his long-planned holiday with his eighteen-year-old daughter.

"What climate do you like best, Mar- cus?" Olivia asked as, together with Phyllis and George Seaton, they pored over maps.

"A warm climate," he said. "But I work..."

"RC's best for taste!"

better where it is cool." Straightway her hand made its way across the map to the California mountains. "We'll be there for the first snow," she said.

As they looked at the maps, deciding where they would be married and where they would honeymoon, George Seaton burst into loud laughter.

"I can't help thinking," he said, "of the thousands of people in California who are saying, 'Let's go to Westport, Conn. It's ideal!'" It was that precise moment on Saturday night that all Olivia's and Marcus's practical plans went glimmering. On Monday Olivia was opening at the Playhouse. Could you arrange to have the five-day "law waived?" they asked Lawrence Lange, director of the Theater Guild, when they reached him and his wife, Armina, dining at Edna Ferber's. He was sure he could—provided he got Olivia away and she was married in their garden.

They agreed upon a Church of England ceremony with two rings. "It's beautiful," Olivia said. "And both Marcus and I come of Episcopalian families."

WHEN Marcus first suggested that Olivia, in the traditional manner promise to obey, she thought, certainly not! "A year ago," she says, "I could not have made any such promise and retained my self-respect. When Marcus, however, it was different. He is a man of judgment and great kindness. Therefore if ever we could not agree I would know that I, as the woman, should say, 'Your way will prevail.'"

At three o'clock Sunday afternoon after their medical tests. Early Monday morning, they went to the next town of Weston, where the Langners live, to get their license. At eleven they returned to the lim to meet the Rev. Mr. Leventon who would marry them at high noon on an island in the Langner garden pool where the Chinese Goddess of Happiness sits beside a little pagoda. In her was the morse of honor. George Seaton was the best man. Irene Selznick and Armina Langner stood by.

Olivia wore a paisley silk print of bright green and blue, with red predominating. The pearls Joan Fontaine gave her years ago furnished something old. A handkerchief from Irene Selznick was new. Phyllis's gloves with a finger cut for the ring were borrowed. Olivia's big hat was blue. And she used a Roosevelt dime for the sixpence in her shoe.

At five minutes before twelve, while Marcus waited beside the Goddess of Happiness, Olivia put an emergency call through to her mother. "Be thinking of me during the next twenty minutes, Mummy," she said. "I'm being married. Marcus and I didn't go to wait." Armina Langner had brought out a harpist from New York to play the wedding music. "And," says Olivia, "when Phyllis and I walked into the garden we heard 'Lohengrin.' That was my thought. It was most solemn and strange."

"I couldn't keep up. So I just ran across the little bridge to Marcus who was waiting." Her wedding ring is the old-fashioned gold band she wears in the play. There was no other in Westport to fit her finger. Later Marcus will find her a ring of gold as yellow and soft as hers. His similar ring came from a village jeweler.

There was a wedding luncheon on the terrace of the Langner century-old house. Everyone in white gowns and white from the garden. There was a wedding cake which the village caterer had stayed up all night to bake and decorate. There was champagne. There were flowers from Joan Fontaine and her husband, Bill Dozier. Mrs. Goodrich Sr. telegraphed, "Blessings, my children. Mother." Oscar Serlin, the theatrical producer, sent them two feathers to wear in their caps. And those were happy laughter. For everyone there agreed with Nunnally Johnson, the Hollywood producer and a devoted friend of the bride and bridegroom, who wired, "We'll be there for the first snow." Speaking of her theater premiere that evening, Olivia said, "I couldn't have done it without Marcus. I was in a panic. The job seemed too big but he kept me from thinking too far ahead. Olivia, she said, 'now pretend you've just one act to do and no more-like one act play.' In the first intermission he said, 'Now you're going to do another one more-one act play.' In the second intermission he said the same thing. When he came back for the third intermission he said, 'Fifteen minutes more and I'll take you home.'"

"Had he not kept me from thinking too far ahead of the effort as a frightening whole, I don't know what I would have done. As it was I got through!"

SHE did indeed get through. One critic who had seen the greatest actresses as the Barre character wrote: "Olivia de Havilland is the most understanding and understandable Maggie I have seen." It must be strange for Olivia, who has mothered every man she has ever known—not part of the time, which is fitting, but one thinking of the time which can be ruinous—to find herself protected now, even indulged and pleasantly spoiled. Marcus Goodrich is forty-eight, with four previous marriages. She is thirty and never been married before. None of which disturbs her. She is convinced Marcus is what she really has been waiting for. And she says, "There's an old-fashioned way of thinking that a husband should be all men to a woman—a father, a brother, a beau. . . . Marcus is all those things. And, being young of heart, he's a child, too." With a tell-tale glow in her eyes she tells of the night Marcus left to pay the promised visit to his daughter at Olivia's insistence. "When I came back after the theatre, I found this under my pillow. Opened so . . . ."

In her hands was her wedding certificate. In flowering script it read:

```
Be it known that on the 26th day of August in the Year of Our Lord 1946
Marcus Aurelius Goodrich and Olivia Marie de Havilland were by me
United in Marriage.
```

"He left me this too," She picked up a new copy of "Delilah" from the bedside table. It was inscribed, "To Olivia, with all my love, forever, Marcus." She's rereading it joyfully. "To familiarise myself with the style," she said. "So I can listen intelligently at night when he reads to me what he has done. For I know it is Marcus's work that's important. Not even sure that a husband's endeavor must come first if it's to be a good marriage, but also because his work will endure . . . ."

"He left me his laundry, too, with a little note, saying it will be ready when he returns. He saw to it that I wouldn't forget I was married, even for a moment. As if I would!"

She laughed. And her laughter came from her heart.

Nunnally Johnson was right, it seems, when he wired, "What a wonderful idea!"

Return of Romance?

(Continued from page 37) had Gable appeared with Rita Hayworth. But there wouldn't have been any such quickening of emotions, such stirring of memories. Because Crawford and Gable had once been Hollywood's greatest potential romance and the town would love to see them together again.

By the time the two reached their table the photographers swooped down upon them. Joan, briefly searching her companion's face, caught the knowing grin, the imperceptible shrug, and straightway invited six of the lens experts to join their table.

The banter between flash bulbs flew thick and fast, Clark interposing good-naturedly whenever there was a lull, "What's the matter, boys, out of film?"

Joan paid him off in kind. When a friend dropped by the besieged table to observe that for two people to be seen together in Hollywood once to be called a two-some and that Joan had better keep away from Errol Flynn, she countered, "I will. He's much too young for me!"

Gable feigned indignation. "I beg your pardon!"

In this vein the evening rolled merrily along.

But the next morning the tongues began wagging, the presses began rolling, the radio began chattering and those who followed Hollywood happenings suddenly sat up and asked, "What's this? A new romance for Crawford and Gable?"

"New" is hardly the word. Joan and Clark have been special to each other from the day some years ago when they met and tested for their first picture, "Dance, Fools, Dance." At that time Hollywood was a furore over Clark because of the uncompromising gambler he had played in the film version of Adela Rogers St. John's novel, "A Free Soul," which starred Norma Shearer. "He comes from the stage," they said in explanation of his instinctive timing.

Stage experience! Joan was impressed. Jittery too at the thought of working with him. Clark also was impressed and jittery at the thought of working with Joan. On all sides he heard a brilliant career predicted for her.

"Miss Crawford!" He acknowledged the director's introduction with a formal bow.

"Mr. Gable!" She rushed the words together in the fierce little way that then even more than now betokened her refusal to let it be known how shy she really was.

She was wearing a cotton house dress and low-heeled shoes. Clark towered above her, so far above her that, surprised out of her jitters, she cried: "My God, you're big!"

An experienced siren couldn't have conceived four words more likely to make a man remember.

Throughout the picture their friendship grew. Sitting on the sidelines of the set they used each other as a sounding board for all their thoughts. They talked about the theater and books, about the bouquet of wines and all the things they didn't understand about life. No doubt anyone overhearing their conversation would have thought them incredibly corny. But they also had realized they were wholly sincere.

For in their highly competitive town, with fame and fortune at stake, they dared not seem young or inexperienced or searching. So only with each other could they take off their masks; could Clark appear otherwise than a slightly politer facsimile of the tough guys

Arabian Nights
EXCITING FRAGRANCE

A lingering, luring, woody blend of rare amber and sandalwood... warm and heady... a perfume so delightfully subtle, distinctive and erotic.

Joan and Clark were in love. They knew it probably before Joan or Clark did themselves. Then items began appearing in the columns. But where Joan once had laughed down similar rumors she now was enraged and denied everything.

"Can there be no friendship in Hollywood?" she demanded emotionally.

Those who knew Joan and Clark best then insisted they never saw each other except at the studios and at parties. At parties, however, you always found them on the same side of the room, on the same side of a discussion or rushing excitedly to each other to share something amusing; an inevitable sign that a man and a woman are important to each other; more so sometimes than either one of them yet realizes.

This was Joan's and Clark's time, of course. But neither of them was quite ready for the divorce and publicity they both faced later on.

There was, so far as anyone knows, no grand renunciation between them. They simply and gradually moved away from each other, back into the shelter of their marriages.

The romanticians will tell you—and they may be right—that this was a great pity, that Joan and Clark then were made for each other and, had they followed their hearts, would be two different people today, two happier and more fulfilled and secure people. And there is no doubt in the minds of all who have observed them through the years that there never has been a time, even when they have been emotionally involved with others, that they haven't paused instantly at the sound of the other's call or voice or even at the casual mention of the other's name.

Joan was in New York when Carole Lombard Gable's plane crashed. For years her path and Clark's had not crossed.
except in the most casual manner. Married to Franchot Tone in the meantime, Joan also had become somewhat the smooth sophisticate she once only had pretended to be. Nevertheless, her grief for Clark was something she did not even try to hide.

It was just before Joan married Phil Terry that gosips once more began noticing Clark's car parked in front of her house in Brentwood. But in this story of frustration again the time was not right. Clark was top man on the screen. Joan was in her slump. Above all, she needed to re-establish herself and to be with those who worshipped her blindly and so soothed her ego. Of all which is understandable. For it is not in the human pattern not to be hurt and not be determined to prove yourself all over again when you've looked upon as a glamorous queen one day and the next you're kept waiting outside producers' offices while newcomers are given parts you would cherish.

earlier, of course, when both Joan's and Clark's positions were dominant and strong, it had been all right for them to confess to each other their underlying sense of insecurity and their sensitive fears.

Not now.

So Clark went away. Again, inevitably, the distance between him and Joan widened. She had her greater absorption in her career, her delightful adopted children with their pretty manners, her beautiful white house with its exquisite white drawing room. Clark had his definitely lesser interest in his career and his informal life on his ranch. And when he said farewell to Hollywood to fly in enemy skies and Joan married Phillip Terry the distance was even greater than before.

Not too great, however. For again their paths were destined to cross. It was after Clark returned to civilian life and Joan's marriage to Phillip Terry was on the rocks. This time Louis B. Mayer provided the springboard by seating Joan and Clark next to each other at a dinner party he was giving. That gentleman has been known to foster romance more than once.

For a while it looked as if the friendly hypno might be taking, for thereafter the Gable car was seen on occasions making its way over the hills from the Valley to Brentwood. And it would make its hard-boiled over the heart affairs of its fellow citizens, really rooted for this one. Hadn't the right time arrived at last for the big guy who had known tragedy, made a fine record in the war only to return to an empty heart, and the woman who alone won top acclaim for her courageous comeback?

Then came the opening of the California Cabana Club when Joan and Clark created a social climber by attending together. An answer had to be given and Joan gave it. "I'm amazed Clark and I caused such a hurry by appearing together at the Cabana Club. I thought everyone knew we saw each other occasionally."

This could be another one of those evasions out of the mouths of Hollywood stars. It could be—but is it? Theirs is not the romance Hollywood would like to have it—not as things stand at the moment. Again it's a question of the wrong timing; Gable fed up with pictures despite the financial success of "Adventure," his future course unclear even to himself; Joan, with her feet firmly on the road to perhaps a second Oscar.

But who is to say that the timing might not one of these days be right?

Ranch Warming

(Continued from page 49) never doubted for a moment that Alan was anything more than a mere delivery boy. Item two: She obviously didn't know that Chet is an extremely well-heeled gentleman who runs an antique shop for the absolute fun of it. His wife, who used to be pretty little Lois Ransom of the screen, infected her husband with the antique bug, she being an "early American furniture" addict.

Mr. Alan Ladd, the delivery boy, observed the sparkling lake cupped in green mountains with live oaks, sycamore trees and fertile fields dotting their slopes, beheld the splendid brood mares, stallions, foals and yearlings grazing there, and nearly went flat on his famous face. In fact, he would have dropped his end of the priceless old couch if Chet hadn't cautioned, "Watch your step, dope."

Alan quickly addressed the lady customer. "Is there any land you know of for sale around here?"

She turned to Chet. "As a matter of fact," she said, "there is a ranch for sale within a mile or so. There's no house on it. That burned down. But the four-car garage is still there, a very wonderful stable for horses and there's a half-finished swimming pool." Then she laughed at the idea of a delivery boy thinking he could buy such a place.

So that's just what Alan did. He purchased it that afternoon. That was the beginning of Alslana Acres. Susie didn't shatter when Alan confessed to her what he'd done. Being Susie, perfect wife, she told him that was wonderful, but being Miss Carol, business woman, she pointed out one or two facts.

"You can't just build a house these days," she said, "You have to wait and wait. And it will be a round trip of more than a hundred miles to the studio when you're shooting." "Tomorrow's Saturday," interrupted Ladie. "We could take our two horses down and have a perfect weekend. All we need is a little straw to bunk them down in the stable. It's such a big stable, Susie, we could even bunk down in the other end of it or maybe the garage."

"I think the garage would be wiser," said Susie, not batting an eyelash—acting, in fact, as though they were discussing something completely sensible.

They were off at the crack of dawn the next morning in their car with the two horses in the horse trailer, and stalks of sandwiches, jugs of coffee and a couple of air-filled mattresses beside them.

That was the first weekend. The next one Alana went along. By the third weekend, they'd hired a stable hand, and they'd decided that the garage, plus a lean-to, could actually be converted into a house. So that weekend they had guests: The Roots. By the fourth weekend they had the Bill Demarestes besides the Roots and after that, they just lost count. Life at the ranch was one continual picnic.

Never once did Alan's enthusiasm waver. He moved a mountain—but literally—to improve the view—which was plenty spectacular to begin with. With the help of his groom and a Mexican field hand, he soon had the stables in shape.

Susie, the while, was turning that four-car garage plus lean-to, not into a mere shelter but into an actual little jewel of a house. The first thing she did was to turn the lean-to and the space for two cars into a kitchen-living room. From the space for the other two cars, she evolved two bedrooms and a bath—one bedroom for her and Alan, another with four bunks for Alana and guests. In the wet cement of one doorstep, Alan scratched "The Ladds' Welcome" in very (Continued on page 90) and Laddie, January 9th, 1946 which was the first date the doorstep was there at all.

Of course, with Lois and Chet always among those present, it became unthinkable that the ranch house should be furnished with anything less than genuine old pieces. So Susie and Lois went prowling and began coming back with treasures, while back on the ranch Alan and Chet were overseeing the remodeling of the old swimming pool (with a shallow end for Alana and a deep end for the rest of the family). The fan public of Alan's began to get in on it, too, and "Alsulana Acres" was a name suggested by a fan.

But, actually, Alsulana Acres didn't have its formal opening until late this past summer at what Sue called a "picnic." Dottie Lamour came with her brother and sister-in-law. (Dottie's husband, Bill, couldn't get away from his work long enough to be there.) Betty Hutton and her husband, Ted Briskin, were there too, and the Demarests and the Roots and Photoplay's photographers to catch all this merriment.

Alan showed the men—from horseback—his homegrown apricots and the rifle range he had laid out, all unassisted, and the swimming pool he was helping on. Susie showed the girls every space-saving corner of the house. She was justly proud that, with today's shortages, they hadn't used any new lumber—but had adapted what was at hand—like the pergola they found going nowhere at one end of the ranch, which they forthwith made serve as an outdoor porch.

It was Dottie who told Sue she'd send her slips of all her wonderful geraniums to plant around the ranch and Betty who said she'd make Ted send the Ladds the newest electrical gadgets, which Ted is able to get because of his business connections in Chicago. As for Sue, she had us in giggles describing the latest Ladd gifts.

For example, for this year's wedding anniversary, Sue had given Alan two hundred feet of the best copper piping—which was what he most wanted—to irrigate the ranch. Alan had given her a station wagon, which was most certainly what she needed to get to market some twenty miles away. (But both gifts were a far cry from the usual jeweled splendor that had marked their other anniversaries.) What's more, Susie told how Alan, on her birthday, had given her "Marijuana," which is a mare (who will get her name changed) and is in the same delicate condition as Susie. Susie was really thrown when "Marijuana," with colt, appeared, for the simple reason that she had already had "So Sad," another mare, bred for Alan for Father's Day. There was nothing to do about that but confess to Alan—so there they were, not with two horses but suddenly with four that were about to become six. It was just like them—living in a four-car garage for the first time in their lives—and increasing the size of their family.

And yet it was all like the Ladds' idea of a "picnic lunch" that wonderful day. The guests expected something like sandwiches and hard-boiled eggs. What they got was baked ham and two kinds of potatoes and chicken casserole and corn on the cob and two different kinds of salad and hot biscuits and heavenly homemade hot apple pie. All this was served by the host and hostess out under the trees, overlooking that unbelievable (and improved by Ladd) view.

It just goes to show, you see, what can happen when a man goes to deliver a couch. The End
The perfect gift!

Everything was in readiness to photograph Dolores Moran for this month's fashions. It was an Indian Summer's day. But the rooms of Ben's New York studios were refreshingly dark and cool. Dolores came in from the hot street gratefully. She was chic and slender in one of the suits she loves to wear—a new cutaway suit, very sleek and hip moulding with a black and white checked attached vest. She's very blonde and blue-eyed, Dolores, with a translucent, flower-petal complexion—strictly for Technicolor. And you're surprised at her five-feet seven-inches; perhaps because it carries only 118 pounds. She patted powder lightly over her face, added lipstick. Nothing more! Then she combed out her hair which she wears long and loose. The side hair she fastens with tiny combs and lets the top hair fall softly over them.

Her gift of natural friendliness makes conversation fun and easy. Immediately there was talk of clothes and New York, which Dolores was visiting for the first time.

She loved the green swagger coat in which she posed, turning before the long pier glass to admire it from every angle. She seemed as delighted as a child at discovering how becoming this bright color was on her.

"I have to discipline myself," she laughed. "Every time I try on anything I like I want to buy it. I especially can't resist dance dresses. They're so romantic. Besides, I think a girl should look different when she's going to a party than when she's going to the movies. I can't resist suits and colorful blouses either. Or bright accessories."

Dolores found New York exciting, especially at five o'clock in the morning; for over and over she talked of the skyline at dawn as seen from her hotel suite.

She's back in California now with United Artists working on the Benedict Bogeaus-Burgess Meredith picture, "A Miracle Can Happen." Later, however, she hopes to come back East and do a musical. She loves dancing and practices ballet regularly. "It makes you graceful," she says.

Watching her you're sure of it!

Fashion is Fun
and makes you lovelier

Here are a few highlights of the exciting fall fashions:

Necklines are either high, giving a swathed, wrapped look, or very decollete (and we really mean low). Sometimes the decolletage is a softly draped cowl with tiny rows of net under the low edge of the neckline — giving a terrifically daring look while the net keeps you the modest little lass that you are.

High riding belts for nipped-in waist are exciting when they glitter with sequins or nailheads. Casual leather belts with important buckles and interesting lines do things for sport dresses. Twisted and Manning chain belts give soft dresses a siren look ...

Gloves point up the new sleeve silhouettes in many clever ways. Long sweeping gloves worn with a low decolletage gown are the perfect covered-up contrast. Shortie gloves are so right with long-cuffed sleeves, or worn with tailored coats and suits. And the wonderful colors these gloves come in add spice to any wardrobe. For a real dash of glamour try sequin-trimmed gloves; in either the long or shortie length.

Splash a sequin monogram on a black sweater or blouse. It's easy to sew this on yourself even if it does take a little time to get that perfect hand-made look.

This is the year for collars and berthas. Add a pair of matching cuffs — the bigger the better; for big cuffs are not only fashion wise but make your hands look longer and slimmer.

Does your suit jacket have a high round neck? If so be sure to wear the collar of your blouse out and high around your neck. This collar outside your suit lends a very new note. If your suit is a basic color add a black satin bow under the collar.

Our feathered friends are not the only ones to sport feathers this winter. You'll find feathered muffs, scarves and hats lavishly trimmed with multicolored plumes for this dressed-up season of 1946. Trim a hat with curled feathers lying around the brim. Place a few quills strategically on a beret. Or (this is our favorite) sew a feather.

The Hollywood belles have fallen en masse for the wonderful new fall shade called "Black Tulp." It's a color that does things for any shade of eyes as it varies and shimmers from duchess to navy. Lange created a cocktail suit in this new shade for Irene Dunne that's a dream. The slim skirt and the peplumed jacket that dips low in the back combine to give a mermaidish silhouette. The jacket is collarless and long sleeved. The waist is tiny; pinched in for terrific figure flattery. And a bunch of black silk tulips are attached to the back of the peplum to give a bustle effect. With this Irene wears a draped turban of black tulle.

The new hats are bigger, better, and more exciting than ever. Your ma will say they remind her of the early twenties. Alexis Smith, tall enough to carry it, wears an enormously large cartwheel of black felt with long slinky dinner suits and dresses. It's laden with pink ostrich plumes and black glycerine wisps spray out from the crown.

Gail Russell caused a sensation in the new "suit hat" she wore for luncheon at the Brown Derby. It was a bright pink felt bowler draped with a wine-colored jersey band long enough to be brought around the neck as a scarf. Gail's wool suit, of the same wine color as the jersey, made this hat doubly effective.

Something really new, yet as old as the art of Cleopatra, is a striking hat worn by Maria Montez. It has practically no crown but two bage white doves with their beaks crossed at a perky angle and their wings swooshing out on either side to dip over her right eye. Maria can wear this hat with almost any costume and be very fetching.

June Allyson, at the Greek Theatre, wore a short black crepe dress with a very full skirt, a fitted bodice and puffed elbow-length sleeves. Her coat was a black Persian lamb with a flared back. And her braided hair was caught and held with a huge black velvet bow. She looked half-way between a demure fille and a woman of utter sophistication. In other words, just right for the attractive young matron she is.

Strictly in the glamour department is the gorgeous new white evening dress of Lana Turner's. Her passion for white never wanes. It is molded to the figure, this dress, with long simple lines and a band of large dead white paillettes about five inches wide around the neck which is cut low both in the back and the front. With this Lana wears a tiny diamond choker...one diamond bracelet, her new diamond cluster ring and, of course, white sandals.

Virginia Mayo's new bi-length double-breasted coat of off-white tweed with navy blue revers is really stunning. She wears it over woolen skirts of dark red or navy blue. Regardless of her skirt color, however, a turtle-neck jersey blouse of navy blue always shows above the coat neckline. Navy pumps, pigskin bag and gloves are her perfect accessories for this striking ensemble.

New gadgets seen around town include the real tiny flowers wired in the shape of a bow that Dotty Lamour wears. Dotty pins these bows on her dress, on her purse or in her hair. It's most alluring.

How jive talk brought two young lovers back on the beam

BY ESTHER WILLIAMS

Esther Williams, who next stars in "Fiesta," and her mother who turned the trick

RISE to the defense of slang. There are thousands of people who will take issue with me on the subject, but I insist that it has a unique place in our contemporary life. Even the longhairs must admit that it is often pungent, not just a slipshod substitute for some jaw-breaking, two-bit phrase.

Perhaps I should preface my argument with the admission that I use slang. Often. But I’ve also heard some very dignified and highly respected persons use it on occasion, to good advantage. I know of one case in which a well-turned slang phrase prevented a divorce.

It happened at the American Institute of Family Relations, an extension branch of the University of California at Los Angeles. The institute does just what you’d think: Tries to salvage broken families, prevent divorces, establish understanding through application of psychology and a liberal sprinkling of sound, old-fashioned advice.

One of the counselors is a tall, matronly woman with a kindly, understanding face that mirrors her kindly, understanding nature. She was in her conference room one day recently when a couple was ushered in. They were nothing more than kids. The husband was twenty, the wife eighteen. They stated their case simply but sullenly. They just couldn’t get along and wanted a divorce.

The arbiter started to give them some heartfelt motherly advice. It didn’t take her long to notice a total lack of interest from these two young jitterbugs. She was well versed in psychology, knew how to handle people and realized she had to jog them out of thinking she was an old fuddy-duddy and appeal to them on their own grounds. She stopped her lecture and told them bluntly:

"You’re not listening. I’m trying to help you and everything I’m saying is going through your minds like water through a sieve. You’re wasting my time and yours. Now—get off the dime and tell me what your problem is, or hit the road!"

The kids snapped to attention. This was talk they understood.

"Now," continued the arbiter, "you don’t seem to have much wrong. Let’s talk it out."

An hour later, reconciled and teeming with good intentions, the couple left. The husband’s parting remark to the advisor, in most sincere praise, was: "Gee, we’re glad you’re on the beam!"

"Well I guess I’ve picked up a little slang from my daughter and sometimes it’s useful," she answered.

Who was the counselor? Mrs. Bula Williams. My mother.

Feet that Danced

(Continued from page 47) Eduardo tis proprietor of a famous dancing school at Marguerita, a pupil whom he must alwa keep in the back row of the class because she must not be given more attention th other, paying pupils. And then, one nigh there had been the prologue at the Ca thay Circle Theater in Hollywood with ti pupils of the Cansino school perform profesionally, and himself in the audience. On the stage Marguerita had danced wit her tall young cousin Jack and, watchin them, Eduardo had suddenly known tv things about that daughter of his.

"Rita is growing up," he told hiselhe "She is growing into a beauty."

For generations every Cansino had bee dancer. Before vaudeville had breathe its lingering last, Eduardo had headed ti greatest Spanish dancing act of its day, four Cansinos, all related. Now, this new est Cansino, with the blood of dancers gi her fire and with the blood of her mother's forbears, who were dramatic actors, to give her motion as well i motion to temper the fire.

"She is part of all of us—and still lik none of us. She will, if she is watche and helped, go farther than any of us thought her father.

Later, he had come upon Jack and 'Rita in the wings. Jack with his black eye snapping, his feet still nervous from debut he feared was not just right. Yo ruined it, you did our spin all wrong he was saying. And 'Rita, saying nothin taking it the way all her life she ha taken scoldings or squabbles with her brothers, with the hurt inside her an only her lips trembling.

"He is young and excitable—he is mea to her," decided her father. "I will t her dancing partner from now on."

And so Eduardo and his talented chi became a team. In the United States, a gi of fourteen cannot legally perform in cafe, even if it is as natural to her a breathing. Below the border, in Tiajuan things were different. The engagement a Agua Caliente, originally for four week had stretched into more than two years.

IN THE meantime, there was the hous at Chula Vista with the sun-blasted roc and the flower-drenched garden, and mit mother and brothers Vernon and Eduard Jr, to help fill it. Rehearsals during th day and performances at night, and i between, lessons in diction and stag deportment from her mother whose an cessor, Joseph Haworth, had done Shake pear with Edwin Booth.

"But it must not all be work. She must have fun," said her mother.

"Yet, she is too young, too pretty, t be left here in a gambling town to hav her fun alone," said Eduardo. Heedin the Latin custom of vigilantly chaperon daughters until they are married, it was h who played tennis with her, swim and rod horseback with her.

Night after night, while he was danc ing, Eduardo had scanned the ringside a the Agua Caliente for personages who would be important to Marguerita's future Agents, producers, the big stars themsel they would say knew just the picture it his daughter could dance.

"Certainly, she can dance," Eduard would tell them. "What we knew when she was four years old, dancing around our feet backstage at the theaters.

"But she will not go to Hollywood un less you are interested to see that she can also act."

And then one evening, to one of th ringside tables had come Winfield Shee han, who was head of Fox Studios. He went her to

And so on this night, Eduardo did not dance with his daughter for the last time. Tomorrow night the neons of the Agua Caliente would flash just as blatanly, but they would spell out the name only one: Cansino. Marguerita was going up from the border—135 miles to Hollywood, the road maps called it. Edwar knew far better than she that there is a way of reckoning the distance one me have to go to reach the movietown.

The house at Chula Vista was sleepier when they reached it, except for one corner of the patio where the breeze was blowing down the mountains and the Bougainvillea.

"Sit down, Daddy," said Marguerita "just for a minute."

"It is late," said her father. "You have an early start for tomorrow—"

But I am not going tomorrow. I am not going anywhere that takes me away from you," she said quietly.

"But Rita querida, you are going. It was the chance we have waited for all these months—and now, suddenly—you say thing like this. You are tired—tomorrow you will go as we have promised. It was a wonderful thing that you, a newcomer will play this Indian girl the whole world knows and loves."

"The test will not be right—nothing will be right. Because I will be unhappy. I am going to stay."

From necessity, Eduardo made his way to the horse before morning had come. "Why, he said, shorty, as if it were a fuel" Look—I will show you. Stand up again this pepper tree, I will mark the top of your head on the bark. Now, my own hand! Why, you're with your father. Is this the order that for a man, a girl who is ready a full inch taller? It is awkward for me, I tell you."

Her lips, the soft and tremulous lips showed their hurt but he pretended not to notice her. "Nor do I wish to stop dancing now, that I have started again. I am not still young, still famous—why should we stop dancing and grow fat and old? Yo will go— and I will stay here."

MARGUERITA’s eyes were beginnin to be rimmed with what was left of the night’s faint purpel, but the answer was still the same. "You are going with me—somehow—I said softly.

Marguerita Cansino—whose name did not change Rita Hayworth until many months later—went to Hollywood the next day, but not alone. Standing ringside when she went before the test cameras, was her father—but a small, dancing director’s contract for Fox in his pocket. The test, turned out, was a producer’s dream—Rita was Ramona, and vice versa. But Rita, as it was turned out, was not to be a star in her first picture.

One day the Cansinos were celebrating their happiness—and the next day, Mar garita was sitting on the studio step weeping her young heart out. In the interim, Fate (which sometimes disguise itself as studio politics) had lifted Mr. Sheehan from the executive chair and dropped one Mr. Darryl Zanuck into it instead. Mr. Zanuck had never heard of Rita, which was understandable, but he had heard of Loreta Young.

Although, several years later, Mr. Zanuck was Mrs. Darryl Zanuck, Rita Hayworth from Columbia to star in his super—super "Blood an Sand," there was nothing on the Fo lot for Marguerita Cansino but a bitter succession of B’s. And nothing important at Columbia at first. Until the evening while dancing at the Trocadero, she at racted the attention of Harry Cohn and Howard Hawks. (Continued on page 114.)

by WOOD

LOOK FOR "Art-carved" WITHIN THE RING
(Continued from page 112) a couple of gentlemen who turned out to be president and top director of Columbia, respectively. Mr. Hawks had been looking everywhere—except in his own backyard—for a Rita to play second lead with Jean Arthur and Cary Grant in "Only Angels Have Wings."

On the set of "Angels" came that moment when Rita, herself, began to take wings. The handsome Mr. Grant found himself studying that sensitive face of hers and coming to a decision. "Has anyone ever told you that you have one of the loveliest mouths in the world?" he asked seriously.

"N-no—I can't remember anyone ever saying that—"

"It's because of that white part you wear in the middle of your black hair," said Cary. "As long as you wear it, it will draw attention away from your face. Why don't you lighten the color of your hair and give that unforgettable mouth of yours a chance? It will make you famous."

And so, Marguerita Cansino of Chula Vista and Agua Caliente was fully metamorphosed at last into Rita Hayworth of Hollywood and the world. The Rita whose hair is now a dancing flame around the white oval of her face, and whose long, slim hands have the grace of waving flowers, and who will shortly be seen as the Goddess of Terpsichore come to life in Columbia's "Down to Earth..."

There is still a good measure of the little dancer who refused to entirely outgrow her father left, however. Hayworth pictures—photos, and portraits painted by Pettet and Varga and other famous "admirers," adorn the Cansino Dancing Studios from end to end, giving inspiration to the pupils of Eduardo, still slim-hipped, sleek-haired and still dancing. And during those days when the unhappy ending of Rita's second marriage added a new curve of poignancy to that lovely, vulnerable mouth of hers, they were again very close, these two—Marguerita and Eduardo.

Yvonne De Carlo, star of Universal's Technicolor Production, "SONG OF SCHEHERAZADE," portrays the "luxury comfort" that's yours with Beautyrest.

A timely suggestion to those who need NEW BEAUTYRESTS:

1. While we're making more and more Beautyrests now, there still just aren't enough to satisfy everyone. So the quicker you see your dealer, the quicker you let him know you want a Beautyrest, the sooner you'll enjoy the "luxury comfort" of this fine mattress too.

Don't delay! See your dealer today—and settle your comfort problems for another 10 years!

2. There are two different kinds of inner-spring mattresses. In the ordinary kind (top) the coil springs are joined together, go down together, forming hollows.

But Beautyrest's 837 coil springs are independent. Not joined together. Each separately cushions your hips, shoulders, legs... gives you glorious "luxury comfort"!

3. Your most important purchase! No other household purchase can mean as much to you as your mattress!

That's why, when you buy a mattress, it's wise to buy only the best—a Beautyrest! Remember this: Beautyrest still has the same fine quality, same superior workmanship that made it so famous before the war!

4. Little more than 1¢ a night—that's all it costs to enjoy Beautyrest comfort. Beautyrest is guaranteed to last you at least TEN years! What other mattress is as grand a value as that?

See your dealer and order your Beautyrest NOW. If you do have to wait a short while, it will be worth it—to get a new Beautyrest!

CROSS MY HEART: The new Betty Hutton-Sonny Tufts Paramount pairing gives Dinah Shore the best record she has had in months. The Tennessee thrush warbles the film’s love song, “That Little Dream Got Nowhere.” Composers Burke and Van Heusen can rack up another hit. For good measure Dinah croons “Two Silhouettes” from Disney’s “Make Mine Music” on the reverse (Columbia).

IF I'M LUCKY: Perry Como’s next 20th Century-Fox musical, in which he shares stardom with Vivian Blaine, Carmen Miranda and Harry James, is also responsible for Victor’s next Perry Comoditty. He records the picture’s two best tunes, “One More Vote” and the title song. The Satisfiers and Russ Case’s orchestra supply the customary accompaniments.

CANYON PASSAGE: Walter Wanger’s exciting Western differs chiefly from most horse operas because it possesses a brand new Hoagy Carmichael song you’ll soon be humming. It’s called “Ole Buttermilk Sky.” Danny O’Neil has grooved it for Majestic and has teamed it with another movie melody, “Remember Me” from “Never Say Goodbye.”

DOWN MISSOURI WAY: From time to time a hillbilly tune has its own peculiar way of developing into a full-fledged hit rivalling Tin Pan Alley’s output. The likeliest candidate is this picture’s “There’s A Rose That Grows in the Ozarks” and Eddie Dean (Majestic) has recorded it.

JIMMY DURANTE: Good news to all is the return to the waxworks of The Great Profile. His first recording (Majestic) has the inevitable Eddie Jackson helping roll out the hilarious “G’wan Home Your Mother’s Calling” and “There Are Two Sides To Every Girl,” both performed by the great man in M-G-M’s “Two Sisters from Boston.”

THREE LITTLE GIRLS IN BLUE: When a movie has a sure-fire score like the one Myrow and Gordon whipped up on the Steinway for this 20th Century-Fox musical which teams Vivian Blaine, George Montgomery and June Haver, the nation’s recording stars are all in there grooving its tuneful wares. Harry James (Columbia) and Jo Stafford (Capitol) are represented with “This Is Always.” Jerry Colonna (Capitol) gargles “A Farmer’s Life Is A Merry Life” and Frank Sinatra (Columbia) and Martha Tilton (Capitol) turn to the standout Hit Parade nominee, “Somewhere in the Night.”

BLUE SKIES: Her Nibbs, Georgia Gibbs, turns out a stand-out version of Irving Berlin’s beautiful ballad “You Keep Coming Back Like A Dream” (Majestic) that can well serve as a model for all other distaff side diskers.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: Aaron Copland’s monumental “Lincoln Portrait” played by The N. Y. Philharmonic with baritone Kenneth Spencer as narrator is a reverential and rich recorded tribute to The Great Emancipator ... The silver-voiced soprano, Lotte Lehman, has just recorded an interesting album of Schubert’s song cycle of the lovely miller maid set to the poems of Wilhelm Muller that run the gamut of emotions ... In a lighter vein are the shimmering Andre Kostelanetz, Fritz Kreisler and Jerome Kern albums ... For a stirring collection of dances, including Dvorak’s Slavonic Dance and Johann Strauss’s gay and lilting “Wine, Women and Song,” try The Philadelphia Orchestra’s album of dances under the baton of Eugene Ormandy ... A set of operatic arias, featuring immortal melodies from Faust, Manon, and La Boheme, has just been collected by soprano Bidu Sayao ... If it’s Wagner you want, don’t miss the N. Y. Philharmonic’s flawless interpretation of the Siegfried Idyll, from the third act of that intense music drama, Artur Rodzinski conducting. All the above musical gifts by Columbia Masterworks.

A Guy Named Bob

(Continued from page 52) pool on San Diego's North Island. The officer of the day, a lieutenant, posted a work order from the senior officer's house. These were usually chances to referee basketball games at $5.00 a night. Thus Guy said to the Lieutenant, "What's the job, sir?" And the Lieutenant, who was cordially disliked by everyone on the base for his habit of pushing enlisted men around, replied, "Get on over there. And fast."

But when Guy got to the Lieutenant Commander's house there was no refereeing job. The Commander had two children he wanted someone to stay with while he and his wife did the town.

Now Guy has always liked kids, and these particular children were attractive and well behaved, so he didn't mind romping with them for an evening. But he did mind being treated like a servant. More especially he minded the manner in which he was handed the sum of $1.75.

Guy handed it back. The Commander thrust it into his hand again. "That's an order, Moseley," he said jovially.

So Guy bought some toys for the kids with the money and went fuming to Hollywood on his next liberty. "I'll take treatment like that again from anyone," he told Henry Willson.

It was obvious that he meant it. Willson, who had sudden and horrifying visions of his new million-dollar discovery languishing in the brig for insubordination, thought fast. He handed Guy a stack of shiny magazines from his desk. "When you go back take these with you," he said, "and I'll tell you how to use them...."

Two days after Guy had returned to his base the same call came through from the Commander's house. Guy snapped at it. When the officer and his wife came home the living room was cluttered with magazines and the children were bright-eyed with excitement. "Look, Daddy," the little boy shouted, "look who Bob Moseley is! Bob Moseley's really Guy Madison and he's a movie star!"

"Perhaps," said Daddy with heavy sarcasm, "Mr. Madison will autograph these things for you." Mr. Madison played it straight. "Certainly," he said and whipped out a fountain pen. P.S. The Commander stopped using him for a nursemaid.

The stories and photos in those magazines were the opening gun in one of the most spontaneous press campaigns to create a star that ever happened. At that time Guy Madison had appeared in exactly 450 feet of film, and he was already one of the biggest names in the picture industry. By a sort of automatic infusion process you began to learn that he sent checks instead of gifts to his fans in Bakersfield, so they could have the pleasure of buying their own presents, things they really wanted; that he hoped someday to have an Oregon ranch; that he found Hollywood strange and wonderful, but that he disapproved of the Hollywood costume; that he preferred little places like the Villa Nova to big ones like Ciro's. These were the things that told you how he behaved. They did not tell you why. So, to see for yourself, you ask him to lunch at Lucey's.

Your immediate impression is that he is the most refreshingly good-looking chap you have met in months. He grins, and you know you like him. He is dressed the way Hollywood men are dressing this year, a mixture of quiet reserve in the tweeds and of flamboyance in tie and shoes. He orders ham and scrambled eggs and milk, explaining that last night there was a whooping party and this is his breakfast. You marvel that he can look so fresh and healthy.

He is surprised at you. Healthy, indeed! Why, just before he got out of the service he misjudged the size of a wave down at San Diego, dived out of a surf dory and went crashing on the hard sand, ripping loose shoulder tendons. There followed a long time in the hospital, during which he lost considerable weight. "It's those tonsils," said the doctors, and removed them; and he went right on losing weight. He is still down to a measly 180 pounds, and has been working so hard he hasn't had time to build himself up again.

You remark that while all this is certainly too bad, it probably seems more rugged to a person who has always enjoyed perfect health. His eyes cloud for a moment, remembering. "That's the point," he says. (Continued on page 120)

He was just eight, that day, and he had come home from school on his bike as fast as he could pedal, just as he did everything. Burring into the little frame house he rushed nervously through a closet for a bat and glove and then took off at a trot for a nearby vacant lot. But he had forgotten the ball. He came back, not noisily this time, pausing in the hall to find out who the visitor was. In the living room, from his seat on the mohair sofa, the doctor was raising questioning eyebrows at Mrs. Moseley.

“Is he always like that?”

“Why, yes.”

“The reports from the last examination show he's decidedly underweight,” the doctor said.

But he eats what the other children eat. Not as much, perhaps. Still, plenty of meat and vegetables and milk.”

“I'd say it would take about a year of controlled diet. There's a place in the hills, a so-called preventorium. We could send him there.”

Out in the hall, the little boy stood quietly, waiting. He heard his mother say, “If it’s a matter of Bob’s health there’s no question. He'll go, of course.” Then he went to the closet, put his hat and glove away and went to his room. He had never been away from home before and now he was to be sent alone to something called a preventorium. For a whole year—or a century. When you're eight, there is no measure of time; but there is of security. When you're eight, security is home, insecurity anywhere away from it.

THAT is the year he will remember for the rest of his life. For the first two weeks he was especially lonely, homesick. He cried all night and believed utterly in his doom. Then, slowly, his adjustment began. He learned the art of making friends. He learned the value of discipline. It was the time and the incident that most profoundly colored everything he would ever do or think afterward because he emerged from it with the conviction that there is nothing better than people. He came home with character, but with not a single additional pound on his thin body—because he had played so hard, there was no time for getting fat.

But he understood now what was the matter. He could resolve that if he had a strike against him he would conquer the situation twice over. He would build up a better body than the one he might have had as his birthright. He would do whatever he had to do to accomplish this.

It took him the years of his teens to create the kind of physique that would make the Navy take him a life guard and swimming instructor, when the time came. There were a couple of things greatly in his favor. He just didn't have the money to spend on indoor amusements, so while his friends played pool or sat in movies, Guy was riding a bike twenty miles into the country, hunting quail on foot, swimming in lake outdoors, and, because this was California, he could do it twelve months of the year.

When he was ready, when his own sense of superb self-being told him he had succeeded, he began to come out of his shell, to have fun. Bakridge is an oil town and a rancher’s town, built on the floor of the great San Joaquin Valley. You have to drive only a hundred and twenty miles and cross one of the highest passes in the country to get to Los Angeles. You can do that in a couple of hours and go dancing in Hollywood and still be home by 2 A.M., with time out for a milkshake and a hamburger on the way.

Or, your pal with the jalopy can come by for you early, and you can pick up your girls and streak for Santa Monica. You can rent a surfboard there, and put on your water fins and ride the breakers.

Small wonder that oversophisticated, nerve-wracked, disenchanted Hollywood has envisioned him as a kind of perpetual Eagle Scout, who drinks nothing but milk, and would rather shoot his bow and arrow than do the night club circuit with the most beautiful women in the world. This, however, is anything but a completely true picture, because you have seen him take a social cocktail as casually as the next fellow. And as for the bow-and-arrow business, it is becoming increasingly the thing in Hollywood.

On this subject Rory Calhoun has a word to say. Rory, as dark as Guy is blond, is a tall, husky chap whom Henry Wilton is grooming for stardom, but that isn't all they have in common.

The first time they made an engagement to go hunting together Rory appeared with the usual rifle and a few rounds of ammunition. All that Guy tossed into the car was that famous bow of his and a quiver of arrows.

“What’s this, a gag?” Rory asked.

“I never could see hunting strictly as slaughter. This way it’s more of a game—the animal has a little chance, anyhow.”

The animal would have more than a little chance if I were using the bow.

"Suppose you try it?"

So Rory tried it, and now when they head for the hills there are two bows in the car and no rifle.

It was with Rory that Guy went house-hunting when he had got tired of bolting in at a beach hotel. They found exactly what he wanted in Beverly Hills, a cottage with one bedroom, a big den, a bar and a patio, furnished with a nautical flavor which couldn't have suited Guy better. The owner was a sea captain who had been transferred to an eastern station.

In the first two weeks of running his own household Guy hired a maid to cook his breakfast and swab the decks. Then one evening he and Rory came barging in from a day of deep-sea fishing. They brought with them a number of sea bass and, since they had done a little diving off the Catalina Isthmus, some abalone. "You know what to do with abalone?" Guy asked the girl.

It appeared that she certainly did, for heavens sake. She was left to her kitchen while the fellows had showers. They were ravenous and reached the table with high expectations. Abalone is a gourmet's delicacy, if it's properly done. The trick is to slap the steaks into a very hot pan sizzling with butter and give them just a minute or two on both sides.

What the maid brought in, eventually, was a platter of something that resembled GI shoe soles. After a moment of shocked silence Guy said, "Thanks. We can clear up the table if you want to go home now."

When she had left he took the platter, went into the kitchen and emptied it into the garbage disposal unit. "Now then," he said, "I'll make us some abalone."

Later, while they were playing records and digesting the excellent dinner, Rory found a large chair in his way and pushed it aside. Where it had stood was a little pile of ashes, match covers and debris, swept there over a period of days.

"That tears it," Guy said, "I'll take care of this place myself." And he does.

He is an elusive personality, this Madison guy, and you have to do a bit of digging through top soil to get down to the solid stratum of him underneath. Geoffrey Morris, a sensitive photographer who has interpreted Guy in a number of brilliant portraits, has discovered this. Morris wanted more than a well-lighted, well-arranged picture of a handsome young man. He wanted to capture the arrangement of Guy's personality and any inner lighting from whatever mental or spiritual source he could find. He discovered that Guy has built a hard, defensive shell around the character who is still, and will always be, Bob Moseley. Desperate, Morris dressed him in casual sport clothes and drove him far out to where the fields were yellow and the Sierra Madres stood purple against the north sky.

He set up his equipment while Guy wandered silently about, and then Morris began to talk. He talked of the land, of stacks, of the talk of hunting; he talked of the pleasure of sailing into an untouched, forgotten inlet along a deserted shoreline and the kind of clean beauty there is sometimes in loneliness like that. He is easilyfall, for he is something of a poet as well as an artist; and presently it happened. Guy Madison disappeared and a straightforward, unreserved, clean-cut, decent young American named Bob stood before him. This fellow was not from Beverly Hills but from a little cottage in Bakersfield, and for that there was pride in his bearing and even something of vainglory in his eyes.

Then Morris reached for his camera.

How thousands who are pale and tired because of this blood deficiency may find renewed energy with Ironized Yeast Tablets

Thousands of women have lost the fresh glow of youth while they're still young in years. Thousands look “washed out” and weary—frequently feel “ready to drop.” And so often, a blood condition may be the reason they're listless and worn...a Borderline Anemia, resulting from a ferro-nutritional deficiency of the blood.

Results of medical studies show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men—have this common Borderline Anemia. Their red blood cells are too pale and puny to release all the energy that they ought to have. They need to build up their red blood cells—supply line of healthy vigor.

Ironized Yeast Tablets
To Help Build Blood, Energy

So if you look and feel “old before your time” due to a Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are especially formulated to combat this Borderline Anemia, to help bring red blood cells back to normal size and color and in this way restore the energy and the appearance of health.

Continuing tiredness, listlessness and pallor may be caused by other conditions, so consult your physician regularly. But when you have a Borderline Anemia, when you envy others their energy, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. Let them help you build up your red blood cells—win back your natural vitality and attractiveness!

Definition of Durante: A nose that’s news, a heart that’s gold, East Side, West Side Jimmy . . .

He's

COLOSSAL!

BY SARA HAMILTON

THE heart is bigger but the nose gets the publicity. The seven spiral hairs that adorn Jimmy Durante’s crown have grayed with the years but the soul has grown younger. The vocabulary has mellowed and the grammar climbed into unbelievable horizons beyond mere split infinitives but Jimmy went marching at the head of Yale class 1913 as proud as Punch and looking not unlike him.

Jimmy, who’s the comic glee of “It Happened in Brooklyn,” vaguely remembers a third grade somewhere in his life, in spite of which he was chosen for that honor by the president of Yale himself for their annual 1946 reunion because during the thirty years as an entertainer Jimmy never became smutty or off color. Bankers, doctors, lawyers, bricklayers, women, children and boysboys alike adore him. He stands as a symbol of American humor and American democracy. From New York’s East Side, where he was born, he climbed to the top by way of a piano that suffered outrageous indignities. Jimmy not only played it but amongst it, during the living daylights out of it while scattering the parts to confounded audiences. “So he ups to him,” he says, and off comes the keyboard. He was walking along mindin’ his own business,” and the top falls off. The customers love it.

At seventeen he was playing his piano in Diamond Tony’s on Coney Island. At eighteen he was accompanying a singing waiter called Eddie Cantor at Terry Walsh’s Beach Club. A few years later he organized a five-piece Dixieland combination that moved from Harlem to mid-town Broadway. Along the way he gathered up another singing waiter Ed Jackon and a dancer Lou Clayton. The trio became the sensation of Ziegfeld’s “Show Girl.” “Roadhouse Nights” and “The New Yorkers.” When Jimmy came to Hollywood, the trio broke up but Clayton remains his manager and Jackson his partner at cafe benefits and fellow actor in every picture Jimmy makes. He never forgets.

When the wife to whom he was married for twenty years became ill, Jimmy forgot the stage, the screen, the life he knew—to nurse and care for her. When she died two years later, Jimmy returned to Broadway for “Strike Me Pink” and back to Hollywood for more movies. He calls two fellow actors Ethel Merman and Bob Hope in the Broadway success “Jumbo” but he isn’t quite sure “wot become of dem.”

He detoured from his own radio show to guest star on Information Please, scattering knowledge like a miser.

SEVERAL months ago the New York show world paid Jimmy a memorable tribute. They reclaimed and redecorated the old Silver Slipper Cafe where Jimmy, Lou and Eddie shared frustration for so many years to so many “noive-racked” customers who relaxed under Durante’s spell like a pre-war garter. For that one night Broadway appeared in droves to pay tribute to a man whose thirty years of show business finds him only beginning and leaves him an example for others to shoot at. “The ting I liked about it,” Jimmy says, “nobody made speeches sayin’ wot a great guy Durante wuz. Everybody enjoyed each other and had fun. It wuz revivifyin’.

He writes his own songs, composing the music and occasionally asking help on the lyrics. It comes hard to him, he claims. He has to “woik” at the idea of telling a story in every song. Recently he sold his Beverly Hills home and bought another because the first house held too many memories of the wife he loved.

When a contractor took Jimmy to the tune of $9,000, he felt sorrier for a guy misusing his talent than the money lost. His faith in, his genuine love for his fellow man, his joy in livin’ and givin’ and doin’, finds instant response and everlasting lodging in every heart. It’s warmin’, that’s wot it is.

Through steel-rimmed spectacles he’s too busy spotting the youngsters scattered about the M-G-M commissary to eat. “Stand up and look this way,” he’ll say. “Now you can see Gene Kelly’s little girl. Ain’t that somethin’!”

His table becomes a mecca, an old home week reunion, a clan gathering for high and low, producers, directors, actors, prop men, children and just plain people. Waitresses greet him with outstretched hands. He knows them all by name. He’s one of them. He’s Jimmy, the "eyetalian," Durante, the Umbraglo of America who loves everybody. And friends? He’s got a million of ”em. And he ain’t kiddin’.

Of course, the reason you're taking extra vitamins is for keener vitality, better all-round health!

So why not get your vitamins this newer way that can do you more good? Why not get them in fortified food—the delicious Ovaltine way?

The reason is simple—science knows vitamins don't work alone! They work best with other food elements—Vitamin A and Vitamin C with protein, Vitamin B1 with energy food, Vitamin D with Calcium and Phosphorus, and so on—and you get them all in each glass of Ovaltine made with milk!

For Ovaltine is an all-round supplementary food that supplies—besides vitamins—nearly every food element needed for robust health, including those elements needed for vitamin-effectiveness.

And note—when you drink Ovaltine you not only get vitamins a preferred way—you get much more! High-quality protein, vital food-minerals, quick-acting energy food—things many people need as much as vitamins for vigorous buoyant health.

So if you are eating normal meals, 2 glasses of Ovaltine daily give you all the extra vitamins and minerals a normal person needs for robust health.

Then why take chances with merely vitamins alone? Why not change to Ovaltine—and get your vitamins the way they can do you more good, along with all the other essential food-values Ovaltine supplies!

That's Hollywood for You

(Continued from page 67) I never think of the girl up there as me, but someone different. That's because I never played myself, Constance Keane. When I wore my hair over my eye, I used to yearn to reach up and push it back out of that poor girl's face, . . . Ray Milland, who has an Oscar for a performance, said, "When I see myself on the screen, boy, I shudder!"

Maria Montez didn't hesitate when asked how she liked herself on the screen. She said, "Mrs. Natalie Kalmus calls me her Technicolor girl because I photograph beautifully. I get so angry with myself I cry sometimes when I see myself act. I say, 'Montez, you have lots to learn. Looking beautiful for the camera is not enough! So I work harder the next picture to be better. Someday, I will be a good actress, I think." . . . Frank Sinatra's reply was, "I'm not trying to be funny, but this will describe it. When I saw myself on the screen, I swooned."

The first thing Rita Hayworth does on getting up in the morning is to take a shower. But when she wants to relax she takes a tub, for it is in the bathtub that she reads—and even eats . . . I like B. Kaper's description of Lucille Ball on seeing her with ribbons which she usually wears. He said, "She looks like a wrapped Christmas present."

I can't help wondering if sometimes when Harry James is out for a stroll with Betty Grable, he turns to look at another pair of gams. . . . Yvonne De Carlo may be sexy in Technicolor, but if I had my way I'd prefer spending an evening with Gene Tierney, for there is a young lady whose talents haven't been fully exploited yet.

* * *

I WOULD like to tell you of some of the things in Hollywood that I like: The view at night from any hilltop house, a drive along Malibu Beach where the rocks slope to the ocean front and a walk about the streets of Beverly Hills, which has a charm all its own . . . And now for a few things on the dislike theme: Actresses who enter Romanoff's or Chasen's making an entrance, revealing how they would act on the screen if they didn't have to take direction. I hate Eastern celebrities who can't stand Hollywood and don't know how you do either. They stay here for months and months just to make enough so they can return to the East and rap the town and movies while they reside in luxury. I am a little weary of the publicity about George Sanders stating how curt he is to women, for every time I have seen him he has been especially polite to women. I generally don't like so-called handsome actors but an exception is Ty Power, who's a nice guy with ability.

I must tell you of this conversation between Cornel Wilde, who didn't play the piano in "A Song to Remember," and Charles Korvin, who started his movie career by portraying Arsene Lupin. Korvin said to Wilde, "As Chopin I thought you were wonderful. Tell me, do you really play the piano?" Wilde replied, "I saw you as Arsene Lupin. You know, Korvin, I thought you stole magnificently."

And that's Hollywood for you!

You walk briskly . . . your ears ringing with the cheers and the songs. You feel the glow you've always felt, ever since you first tucked your saddle shoes in a stadium blanket . . . and the world became an exciting pattern of pennants and chrysanthemums . . . tea dances . . . football shoulders. A world very personally yours, of going places . . . of being young!

That was when you promised yourself you'd stay young, always. And you do. Because you never let life's aggravations slow you up; or get you down. On problem days, for instance, you choose Kotex—for its miracle-softness—unfailing softness that gives you the extra comfort you'd expect from this napkin made to stay soft while you wear it.

Yes, and you choose Kotex for its flat, tapered ends that prevent revealing outlines. For that exclusive safety center, assuring extra protection. For the deodorant in each Kotex napkin; to safeguard your daintiness. And because only Kotex has 3 sizes for different women, different days: Regular, Junior, Super Kotex.

All designed to give you the comfort . . . confidence . . . young-hearted fun of living . . . that are very personally yours.

More women choose Kotex* than all other sanitary napkins.

Two Girls and a Friendship

(Continued from page 50) whenever I'd hear Junie wailing all over somebody's living room about "Oh, how I wish I were pretty. Oh, what I'd do for a classic profile or a longer neck or curlier hair!" For Pete's sake, what does she want, diamonds in her teeth? Because if anybody ever had cause to complain, what about me, the original half-man, half-beast? And she complains yet! Like the first rehearsal we had for "Best Foot." Even though we were scared, golly, we were excited. Junie and I had our big moment in a trio we did with Vicki Schools, a magnolia-blossoms-in-the-moonlight, honey-chile, gal. Some competition—and frankly, I was out to give it all I could. So we get onstage, the lights go up, I grab a quick look at Junie—and nearly fall through the floor! "This kid'll never make it," I moan. "She washes out under these lights, she looks like a blob of something." She just stood there, arms linked in mine, and made funny little noises like the um-ah-oooh routine she'd pulled off on our water cooler that day. So I pinched her plunk on her pert little fanny to startle her into life. But did she scream? She did not! She stopped right in the middle of a note, gave me a cold glance, snorted "Ha!" and picked up the next line neat as you please. And to cap the climax, what happens? Opening night, everybody who trooves backstage to our dressing room gives me the old back-slapping routine. "Gee, you're swell, Nancy. And, say, by the way, who was the peach in the blue dress? She stands out like a chewing gum sign." Well, what the heck, nobody's right all the time.

Now that I think of it, I suppose I was really the glad-hand, the "bya Joe, whaddya know" gal of the team. Junie, on the other hand, was always with us but never of us. She loves people, sometimes even hero-worships them, but she can never quite get into the act and become one of them. It's just the way she's built, I guess, and on her it looks good. Fact is, one of the few times I ever saw her relax and get into the swing of things was at the Dick Whitings.

Dick wrote hits like "My Ideal," "Japanese Sandman," and "Till We Meet Again." Well, the Whitings, Dad (God rest his soul), and Maggie, the "It Might As Well Be Spring" gal, always kept open house and it was sort of an unwritten rule that no one could just come in or go out. All their visitors had to make a big splash and catch everyone's eye. Every time they came through the front door, sing a song, dance a dance or pull something a la "the calla lilies are in bloom again" on the exit. Corny, sure, but find me the actor who isn't. And we loved it. Yeah, bums!

Well, this evening, it must have been midnight and June was starting to get sleepy when she heard me below, "S'help me, Allyson's the only singer I know who can go flat with a thirty-two piece orchestra behind her!" Heck, she knew I wasn't being catty because here I was kidding about it right under her nose. But it hurt her pride. And when that baby's pride is hurt, what's blockbusters, what's atomic bombs? The blue eyes snapped wide awake, went flip-flop-flop, then oozed down into a Bacall bedroom stare. And the wallpaper started curling. Because you haven't lived until you've heard Junie doing "St. Louis Woman," snake hips, wail and slide note complete. But kidding aside, this makes me sound like a stage-struck little kid in love with the glamour of the theater, I apologize. Because that's all wrong. June is one of the most sincere, most intense and most honest enter-you’ll roll through America’s well-kept front yard

“In the evenin’ by the moonlight, you can hear those banjos ringin’”...

...and you can, literally, as your quiet Greyhound coach rolls through the twilight streets of a pleasant Southern town, under moss-draped oaks, past fine old white-pillared homes.

In the romantic Old South, as in nearly every other part of the United States and Canada, Greyhound buses enter each town and city the front way, usually through pleasant residential districts, beside parks and stately public buildings—in highways that avoid drab industrial districts.

That’s because the highways are close to the heart of America—where people live and work and play—and where they turn for truly scenic travel. We have often said—"Only by highway you meet the real America"—and in making that introduction, Greyhound takes you to America’s front door!

This is the best time of year for any trip—whether it be business, pleasure or personal. Go now—go Greyhound—and save money on every mile.

AND of course, again I understood what she meant. Funny, in a way. Because compared to us, night and day were identical twins. I like fun, loud fun with plenty of people and noise. Sure I’ve cried into my pillow. What gal hasn’t? But with Junie you always felt that it was the inner she, the spirit or the mind or the soul that reacted. I often used to wonder exactly what made us tick. Not, you understand, that we didn’t have our squabbles. And find me two women who don’t enjoy a good, violent bicker!

Darling Gene Kelly was in one of our more ambitious productions, beautiful, wonderful Gene Kelly. And there with him, in the same play, was Betsy and baby Kerry and the Dick Whorfs are about the closest “family” I have today, in theater or out. It was during the run of “Best Foot” and Junie and I used to shop practically every afternoon. One day we’d been out after some casual afternoon dresses and came back to the theater panting, broke, dripping with bundles and a deeply asleep. Then I tried on one of my dresses, a dark purple shirtdress number with long sleeves and an elegant skirt that dissolved hips. Junie grew rigid.

“I didn’t see that dress,” she gritted.

“Hecch, honey, half of New York saw it, it was in the window.”

“Salesgirls always bring out the cutest stuff for you,” she nearly wept. “Salesgirls love you.” And before I had time to either pull her hair or kiss her, she was stamping her feet and insisting, “I want that dress—why didn’t they show me that dress—nobody loves me!”

CONTAINERS I’ve ever known. One of the most honest persons, too. I remember in particular a night we spent together in New Haven. We were touring in “Best Foot” and had taken an apartment for the few days we’d be there. It wasn’t a very elegant place, but for three days anyway, it was home. Junie put up her picture of Tommy and laid out her housecoat and nightie. It was raining fiercely and after the evening show, we dragged home some cheese and crackers and a bottle of milk and decided to make a night of it. And may I tell you something? I rediscovered Junie all over again. I found out that she was so quiet and far-away wasn’t because she was shy or aloof or disdainful. I found out that because Junie had been so hurt as a child she had no room left in her heart for any more pain. We were sprawled on the rickety double bed, the single hanging bulb swinging crazily with the wind, when she started to talk.

“I want quiet,” she whispered, “and love. I must love, I must be loved to feel whole, Nancy. I don’t want to sound like a spoiled kid whining for sympathy or when trying to grab a spotlight. Oh, I don’t suppose that anyone who’s never been terribly hurt could know what I mean.”

But I knew what she meant because I’d been hurt—terribly. So we talked about life and living and dying, about the wonderful mother I’d lost when I was only eight, who’d died just as quietly and just as bravely as she’d lived, while I stood in the next room and felt the blood slowly ice in my veins. We cried for a minute then, June and I, with the rain making soft, mournful noises against the dirty window. Presently she said, “I want to live and love for all the time I lost when I was a kid with half my body in a plaster cast and my heart crying for something to call my own. I had a dog and when he died I cried for weeks. But when my grandmother passed away, it went much too deep for tears. I still haven’t cried for her and I still hurts down inside. I think if ever I become happy enough, I’ll be able to cry for her.”

DARLING Gene Kelly was in one of our more ambitious productions, beautiful, wonderful Gene Kelly. And there with him, in the same play, was Betsy and baby Kerry and the Dick Whorfs are about the closest “family” I have today, in theater or out. It was during the run of “Best Foot” and Junie and I used to shop practically every afternoon. One day we’d been out after some casual afternoon dresses and came back to the theater panting, broke, dripping with bundles and a deeply asleep. Then I tried on one of my dresses, a dark purple shirtdress number with long sleeves and an elegant skirt that dissolved hips. Junie grew rigid.

“I didn’t see that dress,” she gritted.

“Hecch, honey, half of New York saw it, it was in the window.”

“Salesgirls always bring out the cutest stuff for you,” she nearly wept. “Salesgirls love you.” And before I had time to either pull her hair or kiss her, she was stamping her feet and insisting, “I want that dress—why didn’t they show me that dress—nobody loves me!”
"Well, golly, twerp," I grinned, "go get that dress."
She got it. Flew into the store, wiggled into it, and dashed back to the theater.
"Well?" she demanded.
I looked. "I think it stinks," I reported.
Magic. Her eyes crinkled, a grin stretched right across her silly puss and the giggles poured out. "Me, too," she admitted. "Too tailored. I'm a dope.
I didn't dispute the point.
But maybe I should've. Because come the evening performance and Junie spots the two dresses hanging side by side and goes into a melancholy mood.
"That dress," she moans, "you shouldn't have let me buy it."
"Oh, great fishes," I exploded, "not again!"
And before I could get another word in edgewise, Junie was bawling her fool head off and screaming to Mary, our dresser, 'Go on, leave me alone—I wanna be alone!'
By this time I was just jumpy enough myself to decide Junie was picking on the underdog and I lashed out.
Gene heard the rumpus and came flying over to investigate and the dog, know what he did? Heard the whole story and laughed. Threw his head back and roared. I nearly slew him. But the upshot of the whole thing was that Junie explained about a terrific headache and apologized to Mary, I apologized to Gene, we both apologized to each other and everybody was tickled ga-ga. And as we were leaving the theater, Junie drew me aside.
"You know, I like you, Nancy."
"S'tunny coincidence—cause you know, I like you, too, Junie."

Aside from that I think the very fact that she and Dick Powell are Mr. and Mrs. would be grounds for friendship. Because to me, Dick is one of the finest, most considerate, and swellest gentlemen I know. Dick and my dad have been friends for a great many years and some of my earliest lessons in good showmanship and good sportsmanship came from them both. Dick and I have always had a sort of Andy Hardy, man-to-man relationship and whenever I needed an extra buck for a splurged allowance or a shoulder to cry on when one of my "fellers" broke my heart, Dick was always there with the buck and the shoulder.

I used to see quite a bit of him in Hollywood and when Junie began to discover the wonderful things about him, everything was just about perfect.
At first, when it was still, "My, he's quite interesting, isn't he?" and "She's rather cute, isn't she?" I didn't mind being the third party. Dick's divorce wasn't final yet and Junie was still hanging on to her head for fear her heart would start yelling. "This is it!" So we'd thresomed it quite often, taking afternoon rides into the country or at Dick's private sessions of records and shop talk. But when I saw that love light making halos around her head, I tapered off into a "Sorry, can't make it this evening, the kids, they go along without me?" I'm sure it broke them up into little pieces, having to go on a date with just the two of them.

So that's that. If I haven't given you any high melodrama or deep, deep grief it's just because ordinary people don't spend their lives on peaks or in the depths. They talk and talk and wash their faces and shine their shoes and never notice that time's a-wastin'. Which, of course, is the way good living is lived. And that's the way I like to feel Junie and I have lived.
No peaks, no depths. Just two gals who had fun and couldn't think of any snappy comebacks to:
"You know, Nancy, I like you."
"Well, golly, Junie, I like you, too."
Maybe because that did it!

The End
What Should I Do?

(Continued from page 72) she says she loves me, she is not willing to give up her career to be married.

I don't want to marry a career woman. Do you think I'm unfair in wanting a home-loving wife? Should I try to find happiness with someone else? Or should I marry and try to change her?

Milton R.

It seems to me that for anyone to enter marriage with the intention of changing the habits or viewpoint of the marriage partner, is not only folly, but the epitome of conceit.

Each human being should concede to every other sane, adult human being, the right to certain convictions. One of those convictions is the manner in which the individual wishes to use his talents.

You fell in love with a girl who is a school teacher and who—if I am to judge by her intention to remain in her profession—is a sincere and conscientious instructor. Having fallen in love with her, you now want to alter her entire intellectual life. You aren't thinking of her desire in the matter at all—which makes me wonder if you really understand the nature of love.

Perhaps I feel so strongly that a woman should be permitted to decide for herself whether she wants to work within the home or outside of it because my own career has interlaced comfortably with that of my doctor-husband.

In the final analysis, the truth is this: The success or failure of a double-career marriage rests entirely, not upon outside influences, but upon the character of the marriage partners.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I have been going with a girl named Jeanie for almost three years, most of which time I have been in the Army. About two years ago, when I was home on leave, Jeanie and I and another couple went on a bicycle picnic.

On the way home we stopped at a deserted building to eat lunch. After we had finished we looked the place over and thought what a good wreck it would make.

All we did was to break three or four windows and knock down some doors, kick in some of the plaster, etc. The cops caught us and we had to report to court, but the judge only bawled us out. We didn't really mean any harm—we just did what every American boy or girl would have done. Myself, I think that is part of life.

Jeanie's father blamed me for the whole business and said I could never take Jeanie out again. In spite of that, for two years, whenever I have been home on leave, Jeanie has sneaked out and we have had a date every night. Before I came overseas with the occupation forces, I had a long talk with Jeanie's mother and father, but their answer was still no. I could not write to Jeanie and could not be engaged to her. I saw her every night anyway. When I left I sent all her mail to my mother's house, and she got it there.

I wouldn't give Jeanie up for all the world, so I want to know how to go about making her family see the light. I will be discharged in about three months.

Pfc. Parton S.

Psychologists tell us that the desire to destroy is an innate human failing. This explains the tendency of a child to destroy its toys. But just as a child is educated beyond a great many of its unpleasant early habits, the tendency to destroy things should also be eliminated.
Unless I am misinterpreting your words, you haven't yet developed to the point where you are ashamed of having trespassed upon the property of another person and mistreated it.

It appears to me that you must develop into a far more responsible human being before the cautious parents of this girl will change their attitude toward you. Communicating with her in opposition to their wishes won't help in this respect. I'm afraid it's time for you to grow up.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I began dating at eighteen and I am now twenty-two. In that time I have had my share of male friends but none is more than just a friend. After three or four dates I simply lose interest in a fellow. There is always something about his action or conversation that irritates me to a point where I just can't see him any more.

My sister asked me the other day whether I was waiting for Van Johnson or some Hollywood star to propose to me. She told me that I might as well resign myself to the fact that I am going to marry someone I don't care for and in due time I'll get used to him. Surely, my sister must be wrong. Is there some way to overcome the way I feel?

Alice Y.

Although I am willing to admit that your sister has a right to her opinion, I must disagree entirely with her suggestion for your future.

Under no circumstances should any girl marry a man "and try to get used to him."

All things happen in proper season. When you are emotionally ready to fall in love and marry you will discover that either some boy whom you have known all your life has acquired a glow which you hadn't previously noticed, or you will meet one who will satisfy your ideals.

The important thing is for you not to worry about your emotional attitude, not to criticize yourself nor to consider your reaction different from that of other girls, and to regard your boyfriends in a friendly—not a disparaging—light.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

For almost a year now I have been writing to a fellow whom I have never met. We were introduced through letters by a girl we both know.

I have enjoyed his letters immensely, and he has written that he enjoys mine. He has asked me to spend my fall vacation in his home (he lives with his parents) and I want very much to accept the invitation. However, I don't know if it is proper, as we're not engaged.

Sylvia G.

Wouldn't it be possible for this boy to make the trip to meet you? In preference to the reverse situation? Have you discussed this with your mother?

Certainly you shouldn't accept an invitation to be a house-guest from a boy you have never met personally, and furthermore—no girl should ever accept

Dear Miss Colbert:

Here I am sweltering in a South Pacific port, but having a swell time reading "What Should I Do?"

I took particular interest in the American girls' answer to the five smart gunners. I don't claim to be an authority on this kind of thing, but as a guy who has listened to many wolf reports, I do feel for the girls. I honestly think that many of them have just cause for complaint.

The only reason I am writing this letter is to call to your attention that all fellows are not alike. When a girl has a bad experience with one man she should simply shove him overboard and look over the next guy. Confidentially, that's the way I do with girls. I am sort of particular about my company, and it doesn't take me long to weigh anchor when I don't like the port I find I'm in.

Jimmy W. SI/c

Thank you for your letter, which I know will be of greatest comfort to the hundreds of girls who have written to me about the wolf problem.

"Hurry home. I think I am quite safe in saying that you could easily be voted "the type of American boy girl most want to date.""

Caudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Three years ago while I was still in high school, I made a pact with two of my girl friends. We swore to become actresses and made plans to earn and save the thousand dollars you mentioned two years ago as necessary to launch a course in dramatic study. My girl friends saved a little, but not much. They told me laughingly that a new dress for a party was such a temptation. I went without a new dress and had quite as much fun as they did.

I now have $600 in the bank. I discussed my plans with our community playhouse director, who said that he considered dramatic schools a waste of time, and that he would advise me to get into a stock company. Inquiry has disclosed the fact that I am living over a thousand miles from the nearest stock company.

My problem is: Should I continue with my plans to go to New York? By mail I have found a cooperative theatrical boarding house, which will furnish meals and a small room for $3.50 weekly. The woman who runs it has written that most dramatic schools allow their students to work four hours daily. Do you think that this sounds like a good proposition?

I am now nineteen, so I feel that I must get started. Could you name a good dramatic school in the East?

Marion C.

Your letter leaves no doubt in my mind of your seriousness. You have approached your problem in the proper manner and you deserve a good deal of credit.

I am somewhat disquieted by your description of the theatrical boarding house in which you plan to stay. Under present economic circumstances, $3.50 a week is not enough to pay to secure proper food or lodging. I think you should plan to pay between six and nine dollars.

As to the choice between a stock company and a dramatic school, I believe very strongly in the value of the practical experience given in stock. However, since you are so far away from that opportunity, and since the average stock company has many more apprentices from whom to draw than it can possibly use, I still believe that your next step should be for the dramatic training.

I suggest you write to the American Academy of Dramatic Art in New York, outlining your plans and your needs.

Caudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

In 1938 I was injured in an accident which limited my amusements for almost eight years to reading, the radio and playing cards.

Six months ago a miraculous operation remedied my condition. I can't begin to tell you how kind everyone was during my illness. Now, however, that I am working, and that I am really quite well, I can't seem to convince my family and friends that I no longer need to be coddled.

My doctor says I am quite strong enough to take such exercise as swimming and dancing. When I suggest that I do any of these things, though, my family expresses its concern to such an extent that I give in and remain at home.

Since my problem in miniature is that of many veterans today, I felt that you might be able to assist all of us in taking our places in the world of healthy people.

Barbara S.

The only method of combating oversolicitousness is patience. You must realize that it is far better that those by whom you are surrounded should show you kindness and consideration than that they should be callous. Try to remember that it is love your friends and family bear you that causes them to unwittingly impede your progress.

I know that it is odd to counsel a person who has been ill to be the wise member of a family. Yet, I have found it to be true in many cases that a person who has suffered, through illness, is much wiser and more able to adapt himself to many personalities and conditions than one who has not known sickness.

So, continue with quiet determination and great patience to show your family that you have recovered and that their care for you may diminish.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am twenty-two years old. About eight months ago I met Bart, a lieutenant in the RAF, at the canteen where I used to work. Six months after we met, Bart asked me to marry him. I said "Yes," but told him that he would also have to secure my mother's consent. My father died ten years ago; at that time my uncle and his wife came to the rescue of Mum and me, and my uncle has acted as my guardian since. So when Bart came to Mum with his request, she said that she consented gladly, but that she wanted to consult my uncle.

My uncle had a talk with Bart and refused consent for two reasons: (a) Bart had nothing saved and was dependent upon his job (he is permanent in the RAF with absolutely no chance of being demobed); (b) before he met me Bart had a reputation for being a Romeo.

My uncle has said that either I must give up my home or give up Bart. I have even suggested our being engaged for a year, but my uncle says the year will only be satisfactory if I do not see Bart during that time. How could we stand that, since we are in love?

My mother and my girl friends think I should take my happiness, regardless of my gratitude to my uncle. Bart holds the same opinion.

Sara K., Bombay, India

Before making your final decision, why don't you ask the boy you want to marry whether there is anything he told your uncle that might have prejudiced your guardian so greatly. Go over the entire conversation between the two men—as reported by Bart—to determine whether a misunderstanding might have crept in. Since you love and respect your uncle, and since one would assume that he returns your affection and wants only happiness for you, I think you should proceed carefully. However, after giving your uncle's objections ample investigation, you may decide that—like many fathers in the world—he simply regards you as a saint and far too excellent for any man.

Considering that you already have your mother's approval, and that you should know your own heart and mind at twenty-two, I see no reason why you shouldn't marry the man of your choice.

Claudette Colbert

Made specially for babies—ready-to-serve, rich in added iron and B complex vitamins

Back in Grandma's time, a popular food for babies was a gruel made from just plain barley.

Now, after three years experimental work in laboratories and infant clinics, Gerber's brings you this new Barley Cereal with all the improvements that modern nutritional research brings to raising happy, healthy babies. 1. Low in crude fibre, mixes creamy smooth for easy digestion. 2. Rich in added iron and B complex vitamins needed by most babies. 3. Made to taste extra good. 4. Pre-cooked and ready to serve—mix right in baby's dish by adding milk or formula.

Variety That Helps Baby's Appetite

Now that Barley Cereal has joined Gerber's Cereal Food and Gerber's Strained Oatmeal, you can offer your baby more variety. For many mothers will tell you that serving these cereals turnabout has a good effect on baby's appetite. The new Gerber's Barley Cereal comes in the half-pound yellow package with "America's Best-Known Baby" on the label.

letter from Harriet G., a ninth-grade girl whose club had planned to entertain the school's football team. Among its players was a colored boy. The problem involved an embarrassing situation, in which an invited chaperone refused to attend the party because of the colored boy.

As a teacher in secondary schools, I feel this man is a self-centered egotist. Since a teacher's profession requires one to live up to the highest ideals of humankind this man is not only living in a cramped concept, but he is also violating the highest responsibility of a teacher.

Here is my suggestion: Let the club appoint a committee consisting of the students with the highest averages. Let the committee write a friendly explanation of the way they feel about the colored boy, and seeking another chaperone. Let one of their number memorize a speech, then let him go to the teacher and deliver it. If he remains firm on his original decision not to attend the party, he should be told most courteously that another person is to be appointed in his place.

I think I am safe in predicting that this teacher will be shamed into taking no further action and bowing out of the picture.

(Miss) Barta S.

(You probably recall the letter, published in the May issue of Photoplay, written by the girl who complained about her veteran brother's autocratic behavior. I received a great many letters from readers who were sting to action, so I am here-with publishing the one which best summed up those letters. C.C.)

Dear Miss Colbert:

After reading Ann Louise P.'s letter complaining of the actions of her vet brother, I can't keep still.

My only brother was killed in France during the war. I have three sisters, but no other brothers. Personally, I'd be glad to get up at six in the morning for my brother. If I couldn't make his bed the way he wanted it, I'd practice until I learned. I'd make sure the chairs were in perfect order and the magazines the same. I'd hang my clothes (and his, too) exactly as he wanted them. I'd do anything for him . . . if I ever again would have the chance.

Just remember, Ann, whenever you get disgusted with this "post-war" problem, that there are thousands of girls in families like mine who would give anything to be taking orders from a veteran brother, safe at home.

Harrison, Rex

In keeping with this figure of youth he sports a tanned hide, smooth-textured as a boy's.

But his eyes are the main asset. Sky brilliant, such as you find only in cloud-hung isles, they effervesce humor. At times they threaten to bubble out of their sockets. Then Rex yanks off his sun glasses, if he happens to be wearing them, and lets out a laugh.

Not all dove, however, our Mr. Harrison. He drives a Cadillac of bloody roosterish red. Local psychiatrists, ever alert, credit this to frustration in childhood when he failed to receive a little red sled at Yuletide.

Harrison's personal triumph in our exclusive Beverly salons (politely spell with one "o") into which he cocktailed but a year ago, was instant and unparalleled, say our oldest termite.

Charm is not the word for RH. Charm connotes a certain emanation, like perfume. Mr. H. definitely is not perfumed. He is joyous but relaxed, with contagious amiability. Part of his secret may be sleuthed in a sentence: He listens. Almost no one in Hollywood listens. What passes for listening is simply a brooding silence during which the unwilling auditor is thinking up lines to top the bore who has the floor.

Mr. Harrison is not a negative audience. He's responsive. You feel like giving him a great big hand, just as Russian actors, after several curtain calls, applaud their audience for its fine performance.

Another quite obvious reason for Harrison popularity is his wife, Lilli Palmer. Born Austrian, she definitely is perfumed with the charm called Viennese. An actress of stage and screen in England, she is introduced to us by Gary Cooper in his "Cloak and Dagger."

ACTUALLY, the Harrison triumph is triangular. The third party is gallant Master Carey Esq. of years two and one-half. Recently he was observed in stylish array recalling the ducal Windsor at his top.

"Are you always so well dressed?" frowned an old flaneur, not without envy.

"No," said the young Master. "This afternoon I am taking tea with the Ronald Colman."

The Colmans have a daughter, two. Master Carey is, as columnists say, interested. Master Carey has the knack, it seems, for slipping into the American way and Walter Winchell's column.

The young Master has hair like undulant corn silk, azure eyes, a skin that glows a commercial to scientific upbringings. But more, he has the manners of the god-descended. American parents gape in envious awe at such delightful English children. What is the trick?

"We would like the English formula," said a tormented local parent. "We all seem to be running to Tobacco Road young'uns and Master Carey."

"I should say the English nurses deserve the credit if any is due," said Mr. H., "plus a stern hand by the parents."

Mr. Harrison has no fault to find with our moppets. If their faces are hi-di-ho he is of the opinion that radio and screen set the pattern, and he himself is not exemplary, being a jive addict who frequents Slim Gaillard’s cafe on Vine Street. His swing collection outweighs Mrs. Harrison's opera file.

For all this waywardness, it is plain that Mr. Harrison had the benefit of a far-seeing nurse, for he grew up to be a good soldier. In the war he was RAF. First a pilot officer, then flying, finally a flight lute in radar section.

Nothing startling happened to him, he says, until he married Lilli in 1943. They went to their honeymoon cote in Denham. Rex kissed Lilli and the roof fell in. The Germans were thoughtfully pelting the bower with explosive confetti. A beam bit the Harrison brow nastily; otherwise just good charivari. In 1944 young Carey arrived and, pursuant to Harrison tradition, the roof fell on him—his perambulator roof, that is—due to a V-2 hitting the front lawn.

The royal but roofless Harrisons dropped in on Hollywood at a time when all roofs here were bulging and bouncing with unwanted relatives and eviction notices flew faster than fan mail. They dropped smack into a sumptuous Bel-Air casa from which Clifton Webb cheerfully evicted himself in exchange for the Harrisons' hotel bungalow.

Clifton's sacrificial cheer was explained perhaps by discovery that the place was without a bar, having been conceived with an inconsistency peculiar to our cinema tropics. The Harrisons soon de-roofed themselves. They felt the rent too steep for no bar, three bedrooms and a confused tradition. They purchased a home with a bar, five baths, six bedrooms and kaleidoscopic views of Holmby Park, Bing Crosby's roof, L.A. Country Club, Catalina in the Pacific and Joan Bennett in her pool.

WHEN Rex and Lilli have scrimped away enough from the clutch of the tax collector they want to acquire a Queen Anne house in Hampshire, England—a cozy cot with, say, ten bedrooms, oak panelling, mature gardens and trout streams on twenty wooded acres. All this for around $50,000, the price presently asked for a six-room bungalow in Bev.

After years of monotonous rations in England, Mr. Harrison found himself pelted with juicy steaks by welcoming friends here. To their amazement and his, he failed to leap for them.

"You get used to doing without," he said (let that be a warning to our meat profiteers). "I believe the stomach shrinks."

It's palms up for Ty Power!

Hand analyst Margaret Mamlok reads behind the lines and reveals in December Photoplay on sale November 13 or as soon thereafter as transportation permits.

"The Inner Power"

I cannot eat portions served at dinners here. I found I craved nothing. Fruit? Perhaps a little fruit.

He weighs 154. But wait a little. Lean and elegant Englishmen before this have been seen acquiring the girth and jowls of the successful Californian.

Rex confesses he was afraid of entering our paradise. He had heard on the radio how cereal was shot through a gun over here, coming out puffed. He thought something of the sort happened to actors in Hollywood. It wasn't physical puff he feared so much as mental.

Mr. H. is astonished at the prevailing pessimism and wonders if it is due to the sun. Amid all the gay flora the fauna is glum.

"You hear talk of atomic doom," he says, his eyes bubbling up. "War is considered inevitable. This is not so in Europe. There it is unthinkable. Everyone is too exhausted."

The political heat in our salons tends to make his eyes effervesce.

"People avoid other people's houses because of difference in political views," says Rex, yanking his glasses.

In England Lady Astor would willingly play musical chairs with the opposition and even amid Toried nobility one finds radicals living in comfort.

But Mr. Harrison enjoys it all immensely, especially the idiosyncrasies which relieve him of his apprehension as to the processing of men like cereal.

Mr. Harrison does not get worked up over the atomic future nor does he take stock in The Better World. He is a middle-of-the-road man, walking serenely between the Bomb and Utopia.

His purpose and pleasure are combined in his work. His diversion otherwise is the enticement of fish to a better world, snapping the unwary bi-ped with a miniature camera no bigger than a watch, batting the ball a bit in tennis and golf, and shooting a gentle humorous breeze beside a tall glass.

"He is a happy man," says Louis Lighton who produced "Anna and the King of Siam," "because he is a well-placed man. He is the born actor and he discovered his vocation without trouble. He is a rare actor and individual. He appears to have all the required gifts: Tremendous concentration, the faculty of creating electric tension that is transmitted, fine perception, imagination, subtlety of feeling and expression and, what seems to me most valuable in this business, eagerness.

With all the sophisticated wit of a man of the world, the wisdom of wide experience, Rex has this eager rush of enthusiasm that makes him seem a boy.

"The Ghost and Mrs. Muir" is the next Harrison picture. Those who have seen him in "Night Train," "Major Barbara," "Blithe Spirit," know his facility for high comedy which this promises.

Mr. Harrison as eagerly pays tribute to the technical wonders of the American studios and the affable cooperation. He and Lilli are here indefinitely but they want to skip back to England for a picture now and then.

He had words for the accomplishment of his fellow countryman Laurence Olivier who created "Henry V" for the glory of Britain, Olivier and the screen.

"I shouldn't be surprised if Larry got a knighthood," he said.

Recalling that another English actor disappeared after being knighted and has not since been seen we worriedly asked if there was danger of our eager friend becoming Sir Rex Harrison.

"Heaven!" he shouted, yanking off the sun glasses.

Exciting results right away—

a smoother, more radiant complexion!

Cover your whole face and throat with a satiny white cloak of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Leave only your eyes unmasked.

Your complexion is being "re-styled"! The Cream's "keratolytic" action loosens flecks of dead skin and clinging dirt particles. Dissolves them! After one minute, tissue off.

Brighter, clearer, fresher—that's the way your skin looks after the 1-Minute Mask! And it feels so much softer. Your complexion is ready for beautifully smooth make-up!

A heavenly powder base!

Smooth on a light film of Pond's Vanishing Cream, and leave the Cream on. It helps banish "shine" for hours!

It's Like This with Harry and Me

(Continued from page 56) man I was going to marry (although I didn't even guess it then!) was his way of making things he doesn't say count for more than the things he does say. He has three degrees of approval—all expressed by the same two words. Something that strikes him as just mediocre gets a hesitant "Pretty good." Something he likes is "Pretty good." When he's really enthused, it's "Pretty good"—but with exclamations points. The only time he has a lot to say is when he doesn't like the thing at all and is trying to be kind about it.

I've become a much kinder person myself, just watching him struggle against hurting people. Recently when we bought our riding horses, he spent a great deal of time looking for a silver-mounted black saddle. Finally, a harness man took a trip 'way past Pasadena to find what we wanted. I knew the minute Harry looked at the saddle he was disappointed in it. I also knew he was going to buy it because he couldn't bear to have the fellow lose out after all his time and trouble. There was a time when I used to pout or yell around when something didn't please me. Nowadays I just sit out such transactions, maintaining an un-Grable-like calm—and thinking up prospective buyers for a "secondhand" saddle.

It would be very romantic if I could say that love came like a trumpet blast to Harry and me—except that it didn't. I first heard him play at the College Inn in Chicago, when I was making a personal appearance at the Chicago Theater. Actually, I'd gone to the Inn to hear Dick Haymes who was singing with him then, and whom I knew. I was going with someone else at the time—and to me, Harry was just a man on the end of a horn—and a married man, at that. It happened to be the sweetest horn I'd ever heard, however, and after that I'd rush over to the Inn every night after my last show, with either my mother or a Chicago "date."

I CAME back to Hollywood as a rabid Harry James fan—but musically speaking. He was not yet a name band, so I considered myself quite a Columbus. For a while I was his publicity agent out here, and when I heard he was to be in "Springtime in the Rockies" I was tickled pink for the picture's sake. We talked some between takes while "Springtime" was in production, but not much more than I talked to all the fellows in the group. I never saw a bunch of boys more loyal to a leader—and it was the first time I'd heard a leader speak not of "my band," but of "our band" or "we." Too, one of the fellows pointed out to me that Harry is one of the few leaders who won't take a picture job unless all his men are included. He'd bring me records on the set—but we wound up just friends, and mutual fans.

Just before shooting finished he asked me very casually to go to an opening at the Palladium with him. I wasn't going so steadily with anyone else at the time, but I said "Oh no, I couldn't do that." And to tell the truth, he didn't seem too downhearted about the refusal. Shortly afterward, I went to the hospital for an appendicitis operation—and I remember that the first flowers to arrive had Harry's card on them. I was so impressed, I wrote him an immediate "thank you" note—and then we didn't see or hear from each other again for weeks.

It was at the Hollywood Canteen, and Harry's divorce was in process, that romance—although we still didn't recognize it as such—really got going. One Monday night I suddenly realized that just about everyone had left and I didn’t have a ride home. I thought of asking Harry—but then I remembered that Palladium turn-down I’d given him. I finally had a girl friend of mine ask him for me. On the way home we stopped at a drive-in for a hamburger with onions—one of the things we suddenly began to discover we both liked.

The rest of it, that realization that we enjoyed being together, talking and laughing at the same things, was still not too glamorous—still just gradual. All I knew is that after awhile, we both felt we were lucky to have found each other—and we still feel the same way. Before we were married, however, there was another Palladium incident—a rather funny one, now that I look back. Someone conceived the bright idea of having a jitterbug contest for band leaders, and Harry asked me to be his partner. I was horrified at the prospect—I could see myself getting out there on my icy-cold feet, tripping and falling flat on my face and disgracing us both for life. Knowing Harry as I do now, I can’t ever imagine what possessed him to enter—but he did. He got Nan Wynn, the singer, to be his partner, and jitterbugged against Woody Herman, Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton and others. What’s more, he and Nan walked off with the cup—a fact that irked me strangely.

Our wedding day leaves no scent of roses or rustle of tulle in my mind. It was distinguished by nothing but heat, dust and a prize case of heebie-jeebies. I got up at the crack of dawn to catch the train to Las Vegas, and rode for hours in a rickety coach with no air-conditioning. I was already too sick to eat when I got there—and the news that Harry’s train was four hours late didn’t help much. There may still be two mountains of cigarette stubs by the Las Vegas station—one mine, and one belonging to the driver of the big car in which I waited, cowering from the sight of the citizens and nearly dying from heat and jitters.

We’d planned a quiet afternoon ceremony in a small chapel. It was dusk when the groom got off the train, both of us so relieved to see each other we could hardly speak. Immediately, we sped off to the quiet and cool of the chapel—or so we imagined. We couldn’t figure out the traffic tangle until we saw the church, lit up like a Christmas tree. People were lined up for blocks, a spotlight picked out our car and a loudspeaker boomed, “Here they come at last, folks—Betty Grable and Harry James—give the bride and groom a hand, folks!” I saw Harry’s face turn white—we got out on the wrong side of the car, took hands and ran for our hotel. The minister, in answer to our pleading, performed the ceremony there.

AFTERWARDS, the newspapers ran editorials, the gist of which was that we “ought to be ashamed of ourselves” disappointing people who’d driven for miles to see us. I could see their side of it—both Harry and I have been in show business too long not to appreciate and value such things.

Nevertheless, that unexpected crowd lining the streets for our unpublicized wedding was a terrific shock. The prospect of signing autographs between our “I do’s” was something I doubt if our shaking hands could have accomplished.

We still don’t care much for mob scenes—mostly because crowds are our business, and getting away from them is our relaxation. Both of us have worked since we were kids—the noise and excitement began for him even earlier than it did for me, because he was literally cradled in a circus trunk. Both his parents were professionals, his dad led the circus band and his mother did an “iron jaw” act right up until a month before his birth. We’ve given up going to big parties because usually we find ourselves gravitating to a corner and spending the whole evening just talking to each other, anyhow.

Luckily, all our enthusiasms are mutual. We get an idea and hang, something has to happen right away. We decided that riding would be healthful and enjoyable for us both, and bought two saddle horses the very next day, fast. That’s how it started—we wound up with sixty-two acres of ranch land, and are now in the racing and breeding business up to our ears. If someone had ever told me I’d be getting up at 5:30 in the morning to watch a horse train, I’d have given them what is known as the horse-laugh. Nowadays, it’s practically the most fun I can have—and more important, it’s something Harry and I can enjoy together.

My husband and I have never had a quarrel. I don’t expect anyone to believe this statement. Remembering the “picky” disposition (mom’s description) I used to have, I can hardly believe it myself. It’s simply that you can’t fight with Harry. He can’t stand dissension—on the rare occasions he gets angry he just turns a little white and says nothing.

If he has a suggestion to make, it’s so right that you don’t mind it. I don’t wear heavy make-up any more, or all those heavy rats I used to wear in my hair, because it’s so true, as he says, that I look better without it. He likes to tease me because I paint my toenails, saying he doesn’t mind, because he “doesn’t like feet, anyhow.” I’m proud to say I’ve made a few changes, too. I like his hair short and parted, rather than the long shelly cut he used to wear. He’s added thirty-five pounds since we were married, and I get a great kick out of hearing people say he never looked better in his life.

Maybe I'm prejudiced, but I think his taste in clothes is exceptional. He always looks so nice when he starts out for a broadcast, or when he puts on riding clothes—and I think he's simply sensational in navy blue. I like to pick shirts to suit off his turquoise eyes, and I'm always proud when he likes the ties I buy. When he's on tour I get a gift from every town he plays in. Right now everything's in the horsey vein—a riding jacket from Texas, spurs from Montana, and so on. We've even gone crazy over Western movies and love to sneak down to the Hitching Post Theater for an evening of rooting, footin' drama.

There couldn't be a story about Harry and me, of course, unless it listed the No. one reason for our happiness. Vicki is a two-year-old replica of her Daddy—I really don't know how I rated two such dispositions in one family. We haven't any special plans for her—just want her to be healthy and normal and we'll be content to let her find her own happiness as we've found ours. She's sure to love music, because already she shows an ear for it. Put a dozen bands on the victrola and she'll sit appreciatively but silent. Put on one of Harry's records and she can pick him out in a minute—"Daddy, Daddy!" she practically turns pink with excitement. Ask her right now where Daddy is, and her stock answer is, "Daddy on road, blowin' his blues out!" which, if you'll pardon my pride, I claim is pretty cute.

This year the James family actually spent a vacation together. We went to Del Mar and just lay around in the sun and the sand—for the first time since we've been married. It was a real triumph—the result of Harry's planning his schedule a whole year ahead to coincide with my between-picture intervals. Last time we planned a vacation, "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim" ran over shooting schedule and Miss Pilgrim had to stay home and work. Meanwhile, that's the way things are between Harry and me. We're never silly, sometimes screwy, but always very, very sweet. He's a softie who gets sick when he has to fire anyone at the office, and tries to get someone else to do it. A fellow you don't have to nag about replacing toothpaste tops because he simply throws the top away the first time he uses it. And a robber who teases me for days about my fire-red hair then has his own painted to match it. He's the man I married—and it's perfectly swell being his Mrs!

Tips for a Lovely Throat Line

When applying and removing cleansing cream, always use upward and outward motion. To remove, wrap absorbent Sitroux Tissue around hand, like a mitt. (Tissues go further, clean better, this way.) Then, pat with cotton soaked in skin freshener.

Next, apply rich lubricating cream. Start from upper chest; work with both hands. Circle gently upward along throat. Make an upward half-circle around back of neck.

For firming exercise, bend head forward, relaxed; roll to right, back; left, back to front. Repeat, circling left to right. Leave cream on half-an-hour (overnight, for dry skin). Remove with Sitroux Tissue, using upward strokes. Absorbent Sitroux removes cream thoroughly, fine for hankies, too.

Buckeye Buckaroo

(Continued from page 45) school where all eight grades were in one room. He had a horse called Babe who "was a very good little horse, coal black, used to race in surrey races at the county fairs. She was my first love."

He rode her four miles to prayer meetings and every Saturday afternoon you'd find Babe hitched out in front of the "Emporium," Duckrun's only store, "where you could get shoes for both you and the horse." He paid the grocery bill on Saturdays and the owner of the Emporium always gave him a little "poke" of stripped stick candy "with maybe two or three hard pieces thrown in."

Today ... His Hollywood "poke" is close to a million dollars a year. Instead of stripped candy, there's a new eight-passenger Fairchild AT-21 plane and a turquoise blue Cadillac convertible. He rides in a silver saddle on Trigger, the glamorous Palomino with the taffy-colored bangs worn a la Veronica Lake over one eye. He wears custom-made boots, expensive white ten-gallon hats and fine checkered woolen shirts dripping with heavy white doekin fringe, instead of the patched levis and worn cotton shirt of yore.

INSTEAD of a home-made house, there's a spacious two-story white home, fenced in by walls covered with ivy and honey-suckle vines. Green lines of grapefruit, avocado, orange and lemon trees March up the side of the San Fernando Valley foothills in the rear. There are wide velvety lawns shaded by tall cedars, sycamores and redwood trees. Planted in the middle of the velvety lawns ... and typical of this boyish buckaroo is a giant red, yellow and green totem pole, with a big green eagle's head stretching out bright red claw-y arms. Just as typical, you'll find a saucer of milk on the swanky front door step for "Beauty," the Rogers' cat. Roy is in fourth place among male stars at the box-offices, star in eight pictures a year for Republic Studios, and has just been loaned to Walt Disney for a big budget, Technicolor called "Pecos Bill." He's the Saturday Sinatra, with teen-age girls applauding when his light baritone voice comes over the screen, and their younger brothers and sisters squealing delightedly when he outwits and outshoots the heavies on every turn.

He has the biggest Western radio show ever on the air, the Saturday night Roy Rogers Show on NBC. His records sell faster than those of any other Western RCA Victor recording artist, and cities and rival theaters make personal issues of battling for his rodeos and personal appearances. Last year he drew 1,250,000 people for a thirty-day rodeo in Madison Square Garden, the largest crowd ever to appear at any sporting event. His fan mail hits over 60,000 letters a month.

He owns a 580-acre ranch in Paradise Valley, a desert oasis seven miles out of Las Vegas, Nevada. And he heads a Hollywood group who've bought 16,000 acres in the desert near Palm Springs, on which they're erecting "Pioneer Town," an old-type western village, to be rented out for resort use and locations for films.

Nobody is more surprised by all this success than Roy himself, who would tell you that he doesn't consider himself a terrific actor, and "I haven't got a voice ... just cowboy songs." He's always liked Westerns since childhood, when he used to ride the thirteen miles to Portsmouth in the old family Model-T "two or three times a year" to see Tom Mix. But he didn't dream of ever becoming a motion-picture star. "I was always just tryin' to make a livin', that's all."

Before your daughter marries make sure she knows...

The real truth about these intimate physical facts!

Before your daughter marries — be sure to tell her how important douching two or three times a week often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and marriage happiness.

And be sure to tell your daughter about this newer, scientific method of douching with zonite — tell her how no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide for the douche of all those tested is so powerful yet so safe to delicate tissues.

Zonite Principle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Chemist

Thanks to a world-famous Surgeon and a renowned Chemist who have given the world the remarkable ZONITE principle — wise women no longer use weak, old-fashioned or dangerous products.

The ZONITE principle developed by these two great men was truly a miracle! The first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world that was so powerful yet positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, non-burning. Despite its great strength you can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without risk of injury.

What Zonite does — ZONITE actually destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerful and effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that ZONITE will not kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure ZONITE immediately kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Buy a bottle today at any drugstore.

It's easy to see why fans feel a personal affection for him. And they do. When he was on location near Davis, Oklahoma, for "Home in Oklahoma," a sixty-year-old woman walked seven miles to see him work. Roy invited her to lunch and sent her back home in a studio car. Kids send him their most cherished possessions like Jack knives and gold lockets, saying, "I want you to have this, Roy." A little eight-year-old girl visiting the set of "Hollywood" recently, offered seriously, "I wish you'd adopt me, Roy. I'd like to be your little girl." Which was a little embarrassing, since she was sitting on her own father's lap at the time.

Recently he got a letter from Asbury Park, New Jersey, about a boy suffering from a malignant malady who just wanted one thing... "a cowboy gun from Roy Rogers." Roy sent him the gun, called him long distance, and cut special records on which he sang some new songs. "You're the first to hear them, Buster," he said cheerily. "Keep your chin up, Trigger and I are both pulling for you."

YES, he is Western Americana, this cinema cowboy with the candid blue eyes and the ready smile. And as straight-shooting as the six-shooters girdling his little waist. He puts his chips on honesty, hard work and a strong handshake. "You get the truth out of him every second," says his friend and manager, Art Rush.

No tenderfoot in the saddle, Roy could "set" a horse long before he came to Hollywood. During production of "Rainbow over Texas," he made a real-life rescue of his blonde leading lady, Dale Evans, that was as thrilling as any ever filmed. They were gun on location on Roy Corrigan's ranch, Dale's horse got frightened at something and suddenly bolted, taking off across the rugged pasture, with Dale hanging wildly on with one arm around the horse's neck, gripping one leg under his stomach, the other over the saddle. Despite which she was slipping on under the horse, and would have been trampled within a few minutes but for Roy, who raced after her, reached out with his left arm and transferred her from the runaway horse to Trigger, then calmly carried her back to where an awe-stricken company stood watching.

He has great respect for hard work, and his own success has followed the law of the West, the survival of the fittest. The years between the ploughing up in Duckrun and Hollywood fame meant struggling. Not for the trimmings, but just for bunk and chow.

He had to quit school his second year in high school to help the family, thus ruling out his ambition of becoming a dentist. He's worked in the innosor department of a shoe factory in Portsmouth, as a ranch helper branding calves and shearing lambs on a New Mexico ranch, and loading and hauling cement in a gravel truck working on the highway between Frisco and L.A. He tells you now, "Four miles of that Highway 90 are mine."

During the gravel truck days he 'bached' in a tourist cabin with another truck driver at Costal, California, and survived mostly on pancakes he made with water, flour and eggs, and which were devoured. "You could stretch a dime-size cake out as big as a wash tub. Just pull 'em off the griddle, roll 'em up into a ball and bounce 'em. Never seen anything like them. Too bad we didn't mix 'em up with the cement on the highway, it would last longer."

Roy had always liked to sing, and he'd picked up some guitar chords back home watching his mother and dad play a mandolin guitar. Since he wasn't making a success at anything else, he finally decided to try his luck at entertainment. His first job was playing an instrument with his cousin in the old Arrow Theater in downtown Los Angeles, one dollar apiece a night. One evening they played on an amateur radio program in Inglewood—anybody could get on." An equally large group of entertainers called "The Rocky Mountainers" caught Roy's yodelling on the program, and called and asked him to join their act.

They all lived together in an old house on 74th Street in Los Angeles, figuring that if they didn't starve to death they would be able to separate. All three—Roy, Bob Nolan, who quit a job life-guarding at the beach and joined them, and the bass fiddle player banked in a room in the living room. They pulled a chair up against the door and doved-tailed their six feet into it. For a year and a half they lived mostly on chips and gravy, "the kind you get in packages, thin and salty." They sang at the opening of super markets and at lodge meetings, for maybe $15 for the whole group. And frequently sang at private weddings and parties just for a square meal.

Roy made a little side money by pulling cars out of water holes on muddy nights. He'd stake his old Maxwell out by "some good deep mud hole" near Culver City. His first regular money came when he got a job with "The Texas Outlaws" program on KFWB for $18 a week. He felt he was rolling in clover when, as one of the Pioneers Trio, he was upped to $35.

His real motion picture work was as simple as the rest of it was tough. He'd had bits in pictures with the trio, singing behind Gene Autry and other Western stars. Then one day he was a hat store in Glendale waiting to get his ten-gallon out of the cleaners, when a film cowboy rushed in in a big hurry for a hat, saying he had to have it for a test early the next day.

"Where?" said Roy, overhearing him. "Republic Studios," he said.

The next day Roy found out there too, trying unsuccessfully to crash the gate. When the extras started filing back onto the lot after lunch, he mixed himself in with them and was going on through when he bumped into Sol Siegel, a Republic producer whom Roy had met when he was doing background with the trio on a picture.

"Did you want to see me?" asked Siegel. A surprised Rogers who wanted to see just anybody see-able, found that the producer thought he was there to audition for the opening they had for a new Western star. "We've tested eighteen already," he said, "and Frankly I never entered my mind until I saw you coming through the gate. Got your guitar?"

"Sure," said Roy, and ran all the way out and back to his car to get it.

He got the Republic job, and the first picture he made, "Under Western Skies," was voted the best Western of that year.

Though he didn't ask for fame, he's worked hard getting it, and is working even harder today. He never gets temperamental, never questions his superiors, just goes ahead and gives them all he's got.

ROY is very deeply attached to his family, speaking with a high-reverence of his mother, "who has had so much courage, raised four of us, and never once complained." He's bought his father the little chicken ranch he always wanted. And is making enthusiastic plans now for a college education for a nephew, who just returned from the war. Roy rode a male four miles in the middle of the night after a doctor at Duckrun, the night this boy was born. "I've never had an education, but he's sure going to have one," he says fondly. "He's got guts. Makes you want to do something for him."

Roy is always happiest when he's out-of-doors hunting or fishing or taking a hop in the new plane. He likes to go coon hunting with his good pal, "Alfalfa" Switzer, of the "Our Gang" comedies, and to go wild boar hunting and deep sea fishing at Catalina. He's a crack shot, which he brushes off easily with "anybody can shoot a gun," and is a whiz with a bow and arrow, usually being able to spear a half-dollar at fifty feet, when in form.

At home, he likes to read Western magazines, or books like "The Life of Kit Carson," "Firebrand from Burnt Creek," and "Hapalong Cassidy Returns."

But he usually spends most of what little time he has listening to Tex Ritter's "Children's Songs," and to his six-year-old Cheryl Darlene and three-year-old Linda Lou. Or helping them paste up their scrapbooks on Bill Elliott and Little Beaver.

Roy is very close to the little Bill Elliott fans and his sister, Arlene, of the blonde, fluffy hair and brown eyes and quiet manner. They live as unaffectedly today as they did in the Hollywood duplex on that $35 a week, when Mrs. Rogers was whipping away at her celebrated lemon pies.

She still does most of the cooking, but no lemon pies. She's baked so many of them for magazine layouts that the whole family turn their heads when they pass by the lemon trees in the backyard now. "I don't like lemonade, lemon drops, or anything," says Cheryl, wrinkling her nose. Then adds impressively, "Daddy's a corn-eater. He can eat six ears and he still wouldn't be full." Roy does have an enormous appetite, with a special yen for corn, fried chicken, onion and sardine sandwiches, and onion sandwiches.

Whenever the Sons of the Pioneers, the Shug Fishers, and other old-time pals of the chipped-beef era get together with them for birthday celebrations or anniversaries now, they group around the cozy den of the house behind the totem pole and give with stirring renditions of their old ones like "Little Joe the Wreangler," or "The Convict and the Rose," always singing one with Roy's favorite, "Home on the Range."

You'd expect him to want a place "where seldom is heard a discouraging word and the skies are not cloudy all day."

But you feel sure that life, wherever he is ... will never throw Roy Rogers. That whichever way this Buckeye Buckaroo rides into that sunset that cowboys are always talking about, it will always be with a smile on his face and a song in his heart.

your hair set into sculptured curls. When they're dry comb all your hair to one side. Fasten it sleekly to the scalp with combs or bobby pins. And finally, comb all ends into a cluster of large soft curls.

This post-war hair-cut, as you see, can be anything you want it to be. For Lupino it is disarming. For Bergman it is comfortable. For Montez it is sleek. For Tierney it is chic. For Day it is sweet. For me—I don't have a hair-dresser hanging over me every minute to see that every hair is in place—it is, above all, utterly manageable.

Last of all, but highly important, you will find shorter hair has a healthful and rejuvenating effect. When the hair is thinned out the scalp can breathe; a beauty and health treatment in one.

I especially recommend this hair-cut to those who begin to find life dull; always a sign that we are becoming a little dull ourselves. Whereupon something new is needed!

The very instant we have our hair cut—and the light shines through it—we realize our hair is lovelier than we thought. Also that it might be lovelier still if we hadn't neglected it, except for regular shampoos and sets. Whereupon we wonder what extra things we can do for our hair.

Brush your hair five minutes every day. Brush it hard for lustre's bright sake. As I've said before and doubtless will say again, lie down while you brush your hair. Throw yourself across a bed. Let your head hang down. This position provides relaxation and improves your circulation.

If you have an oily scalp try to keep the brush away from it. Start hard sweeping strokes an inch away from the scalp line.

Ida Lupino uses beer as a hair lotion. She says it keeps the ends of her hair curled and in place and also gives her hair added body.

The Man from Rising Sun

But he carries on his shoulder not only his own chips, but all of his fellowmen's. That quisquish business is part of the Mitchum smoke-screen hiding the sensitive, vulnerable guy who's seen life smack him down too often and too hard.

He's the one who used to make it turn the other cheek, the one without the tongue in it.

In the little strait-laced community of Rising Sun, Delaware, he was always considered a worldly character. Born with great imagination and creative ability, he was writing poetry at the age of six. When other kids were out playing Cowboy-and-Indian, Bob was putting out a little "newspaper," writing and peddling it to neighbors who stood back and looked askance at the "peculiar Mitchum boy." They couldn't understand any of Bob's highly individualistic family who took their poverty so lightly, just going along in their own informal way. One of them singing, one dancing, one writing and one helping but still to learn about life for months at a time, then just as suddenly checking back in.

Bob early outgrew Rising Sun. If the world wasn't to his liking, he wanted to start opening it. To meet interesting people. See what they thought ... and why. He came back to talk of these things when the others were still spinning a wicked sods down at the corner drugstore. None of them understood the sensitive adventure-loving Bob, who seemed much too old for his years. Nobody, that is, except a pretty brown-eyed girl named Dorothy. Having respected his intelligence, loved to listen to his experiences and eventually married him. It was only through her insistence that he was invited to any of the local affairs. So far as they were concerned, he just didn't belong.

And it was the same wherever he went.

He was just a little on the outside. Never quite fitting in. Which was okay by the individual who wanted to find out his own answers anyway ... but not so fortunate for the other one, the lonely super-conventional. Bob envied others their security in being liked and wanted. Gradually he began casting himself as "Mitchum the Mish"—built a wall inside ... and affected the semi-smirk and raised eyebrow to show that he didn't care.

It's no wonder that after many years of bad luck Mitchum can hardly believe all the sevens that are coming up now. Regardless of fame and fans, he can't realize his stardom or take it for granted. He's still a little surprised when he's invited to Hollywood's swankiest soirees. He feels somewhat uncomfortable and usually heads quickly for the first familiar face he sees.

Actually, he doesn't care much for parties. Unless it's a poker session with some pals, or having friends drop by the house and join him in a plate of sandwiches, a beer or so and some eloquent floor-side chats in the living room. Floor-side, until the rest of the furniture they've ordered gets here. Which may not make any noticeable difference to Bob, who usually offers his few thousand words while lying flat on his back on the rug anyway. He's a home-lover, and that's where you'll usually find him when he isn't working. In the white house on the Hollywood hilltop with his attractive wife and somewhat odd assortment of Mitchum and Chris, aged two. They're a working combination—four of a kind.

Though he probably would tell you that he rules his house with an iron hand, Mitchum is the kind of father who, when..."

big things turning into little things... finally getting down to where everything is nothing. Then stopped abruptly. "What happens when there's nothing left?" said Dorothy, by now fully awake. He turned over and went back to sleep. He's never discussed it again.

He can digest immediately from the subject of atom bombs to that of achievement. Goals. How to accomplish them. "There's no limit to what people can do. if they just go about doing it right."

"Maybe," he says, dropping the enthusiasm and holding the eyebrow. "I don't want to do anything. I just want to watch."

But by now he hasn't a chance of getting away with one like that. You're not fooled. You just file it along with the "wildcats" his imaginative son Josh kills, knowing only too well how highly ambitious he is. That he's one of the smartest actors in the business.

ACTING is his life's blood. He loves it. For acting means portraying people—most of whom he's met personally during his movie days—starring roles, the best lighting, any of the breaks. "Doesn't need 'em," his friends say. "He's too good. Just watch him in any picture. He'll break their backs."

The only demand Bob makes is that a part be believable to him. He liked the role of the returning Marine in "Till the End of Time," because he could believe it. He's met many Macs like him. On the other hand he turned down a much larger starring role in another film because he felt he couldn't sincerely do it. "I couldn't be a piano player," he told the producer. "I'd be laughing at myself all the time. I'd ruin your picture for you."

Mitchum has great admiration for Burgess Meredith, Michael Chekhov, J. Cariol Naish, for Betty Field's versatility, among the actors, and a great reverence for Robert Montgomery's remembered performance in "Night Must Fall."

He has always refused to take any credit for his own performance in "G.I. Joe," saying, "I had all the breaks. The flash. The show. They had me coming over the hilltops with a light in my face. How could I have missed?" He couldn't. But that's not the reason.

Part of his refusal to claim credit is his distrust of success. Success draws lines between people and Bob doesn't believe in lines between people. He works overtime rubbing them out. Though he'd deny it he's been known to park his car and stand aimlessly in front of his old hangout, Schwab's Drugstore, for thirty minutes, whether there's anybody else standing there he knows or not, lest somebody think he's gone Hollywood.

Even a pseudo-cynic wouldn't do a trick like that. It defeats any raised eyebrow. And it's indicative of why Robert Mitchum gets top billing among all the Joes around the studio lots, who'll tell you readily that Bob's the biggest Joe of them all. Which, for our money, is the best kind of living cornerstone.

Beauty Spots

By Mary Jane Fulton

The Causes of Excitement

Twin Falls, Idaho, Portland, Oregon, and Pueblo, Colorado, may claim Arleen Whelan as a "famous daughter," even if she was born in Salt Lake City, Utah. For the sparkling, red-haired, blue-green-eyed Arleen's post-office address was in each of these places before it became Los Angeles, where she now claims residence, when she is not at New York's Pierre Hotel with her husband ... The gal gets around. There's a flurry of excitement wherever she goes. It must be her Irish ancestry which makes her one of the screen's most alluring stars. Whatever the reason for her pep and personality, she's a five-foot-four-and-one-half-inch package of charm, and has the rare faculty of flattering her listener by giving one person her undivided attention ... Weighing only 112 pounds, Arleen admits she doesn't have to watch her diet to keep slim and lovely, because she maintains an active interest in sports.

Make-up For Redheads

A devotee of sunshine and fresh air, Arleen is like most tender-skinned redheads. She freckles. But she doesn't make the mistake so many women do of trying to camouflage her freckles with heavy make-up. What freckles do manage to peep out from beneath a flesh-colored, light powder base, which suits her best, the skin of a fair skin, add interest to her pretty face. She advises redheads to use a pink-toned powder, and to stay away from the foundations and powders which are too rosy, or too yellow ... Incidentally, there are liquid and cream bleaching preparations you may like to try. Follow directions ... Arleen uses either a pure red, or a bronze or an orange tinted lipstick, never a blue-red one. It is better for women, especially redheads, to apply too little make-up, rather than too much, she says ... Always, after applying powder, she brushes around the hairline with a tiny eyebrow brush kept for that purpose. Then with a good hairbrush (the attractive, post-war ones are stiff-bristled and have practically no wear-out to them), she brushes her hair to shining brightness. It shows the good care it gets. It's clean, it's soft, it's gorgeous. And so is Arleen!
Linda, Woman of the Hour
(Continued from page 40) had given me in his possession. That's completely untrue," she spat. "I begged her...take the platinum, and jewels, but, oh, I couldn't wear them—just couldn't."

Was that a latent spark of real sentiment—or was she acting? For the life of me, I don't know. Even being what they are, it's hard to visualize a gal leaving behind a platinum coat. Yet, she says she insisted she keep everything she gave her.

"He's that kind," she added.

By this time, I was ready to give up on the Darnell-Marley marriage bust. If he is as much of a plaster saint as she says, why, oh, why did she leave him? Such husbands are hard to get. But I'll bet you, in spite of her sonnets in his defense, there's not a chance of a reconciliation. Menthinks the lady doth protest too much in her former husband's favor.

When Linda first had a fight. He is my best friend. He's wonderful," it means she is supremely indifferent. I would much rather bank on a reconciliation if the lady says, "We fought like cats and dogs and I don't care if I never see him again.

I've always felt that Linda married...in the first place because, like many teenage girls, she wanted to get away from home. I remember that her mother, who had come from Dallas with the budding movie star seven years ago, had been very exciting. Linda kept to report whatever she did and wherever she went. Pelv, I think, was like a big brother. She was flattered by his confidence and belief in her when few others thought she was destined to fame. Anybody, one of the top cameramen at her studio, took them through and pains to make wonder-phenomenal photographic tests of her and to encourage about her acting talent.

Because she was a "family girl" she needed someone to lean on. For, believe me, a great many people had been "leaning" on Linda. When she came to Hollywood, the whole family including mama, her postman father, her sister and a complete menagerie moved out with her—or moved in with her, is more accurate.

But, in giving her success and polish Hollywood, and in her confidence in herself. She's living alone now—and loving it.

"It's best for everyone concerned," she explained. "It's so busy with my sister, Monte, she can't worry about me. You should see Monte—what a career she has! She's been out with a rodeo—the same show in which Lieutenant Dick Ryan shows Hirohito's white horse. She rides bareback on two horses at once. She's a marvelous horsewoman. Mama loves to travel and she's having much more fun with Monte than she ever did with me."

That's what they say. Very much about this girl. She's as fiercely loyal to her family as she is to her husband.

In fact, certainly her recent separation wasn't as bad as we had to talk about, for my lonely guest was completely in a dither about playing Amber.

"Are you excited about Amber?" I asked—knowing full well she wasn't.

"Excited—and worried," she answered.

"That story and the first one on the picture has caused so much comment. But with Otto Preminger as my director, I'm not as frightened as I was with someone. I was with whom I had never worked. He made 'Centennial Summer' and 'Fallen Angel' with me and I'd walk on broken beer bottles barefoot if he said it was the right thing.

I laughed. "Otto certainly did right by..."
you when you stole 'Fallen Angel' right out from under the nose of Alice Faye—and then he let you take Jeanne Crain's boy friend away from her in 'Centennial Summer.' Maybe he's been privately re-hearing you for Amber all the time."

"I doubt that. He didn't know he was going to make it, himself, at that time," she smiled.

She told me that when Darryl Zanuck sent for her to tell her that he had decided to give her "Forever Amber," she said, "Please don't tell me that unless you mean it—it isn't fair."

Of course, no one could be farther removed from the Amber of Kathleen Windsor's book than Linda Darnell. The Windsor heroine is petite and fair. Linda has raven locks and she will never be a small girl. She isn't built that way. However, it's wonderful what every day at a streamlining parlor will do for a girl's figure and her dark hair can become "amber."

"I haven't looked at a foot of the original 'Amber,'" she continued. "I don't want to. I want to make a complete fresh start—just as Mr. Zanuck is doing. He is really the most determined man in the world. Only an executive with his courage would go back and try to rectify a mistake."

OVER $2,000,000 went down the drain pipe with "Amber," but Mr. Zanuck has made enough money for the Twentieth Century-Fox stockholders in the past to justify scrapping a picture that wasn't right from the start. With Linda, a new script, a different cast and Otto Preminger, he's a cinch to be on the right track this time.

"Just think," she mused, "over $100,000 was spent on wardrobe and I am not wearing one of those costumes which were made for Peggy Cummins, the original Amber."

Whether Linda is the accepted idea of Amber or not doesn't matter. She'll be vivid and intense and beautiful to look at—which is the essence of the character. As an actress she has steadily improved since she first appeared in "Hotel for Women" and ever since she was borrowed by an independent company, Angelus Pictures, to make "Summer Storm" she's registered plenty of the old sex appeal, another attribute of Amber's.

"Mr. Preminger is a sophisticate," she said. "He will try to bring out the—er—irregularities in Amber's character without offending good taste."

But somehow I found myself more interested in what will happen to Linda than what would happen to Amber. What will happen to her now that she has come of age mentally and emotionally?

Even if Howard Hughes is interested in her—and perhaps this will be a romance in her life—I don't believe he is a marrying man. Too many Hollywood beauties have been almost at the altar with Howard—but none has made it yet. Nor do I see any chance of a reconciliation with Pev. That's over and done with and they are too all-fired polite about it.

But, Linda, I think, will marry again. She is a home-life girl and she likes to be "settled" in spite of her present enjoyment of her freedom and "living alone and loving it."

The long and difficult production schedule on "Amber" should keep her out a circulation for several months coming up. But soon I expect to hear about her stepping out with first one attentive beau and then another.

Real love doesn't come to a woman on the rebound—and I think Linda is smart enough and wise enough to make sure she has the right man before she tries marriage the second time.

Rendezvous with Annie
(Republic)

WHO'S Annie? She's the little bride with the dimples and the flair for making chocolate cake whose appeal is so potent Eddie Albert, who got away from England just to see her. He gets away with it—too—for the time being—but what happens afterwards is what makes this slim little farce a pleasant pastime.

Laid during the war, it offers a frivolous look at a soldier's life with Eddie Albert playing the homemaker husband and Faye Marlowe the bride he left behind. His secret rendezvous with her leads to a great big tempest in a teapot—but the climax of the tempest makes everybody happy.

There are some big laughs over little incidents; the laughs would have been longer if the picture had been shorter. As it is, it drags heavily here and there, but in between there's plenty to keep your mind on the screen. All the players seem to have a good time doing their stunts—Eddie, Faye, Gail Patrick, Philip Reed and C. Aubrey Smith.

Your Reviewer Says: A light little farce.

Under Nevada Skies
(Republic)

THIS is an "as usual," featuring Roy Rogers and pal Trigger, but in this case Roy takes over and Trigger is just his faithful pup. Not that he needs one much—practically singlehanded he solves the mystery of the missing emerald crest. Everyone is after the crest, of course, and for it some brave men die. Even Dan Evans is in there poking around the murdered man's house and getting in Roy's way. Gabby Hayes as an impromptu sherkiff mixes things up, too, but at last there's the crest and Roy can rest on his laurels until the next episode.

The big point of this is that the atom bomb is really here to stay—it has finally caught up with the Roy Rogers series!

Your Reviewer Says: Rough stuff plus Roy Rogers.

The Show-Off
(M-G-M)

SOMEHOW "The Show-Off" has never been as successful in its various film versions as George Kelly's right on Broadway. Perhaps because Hollywood has kept trying to make a hero out of Aubrey Piper, the show-off, instead of letting him be the insufferable, if pathetic, bore he was.

This is equally true of Red Skelton's current starer. You keep thinking you ought to laugh and think he's funny whereas Aubrey was not only likable but funny. Red shouldn't be built from that angle. The rich humor of Kelly's Pulitzer Prize play was in the ironic reaction to him of the other members of the simple Philadelphia family.

Red marries Marilyn Maxwell; she loves him, but her family doesn't. Nobody blames them, either, after watching him operate on Mom, Pop, sister Jacqueline, and brothers Marshall and Thompson.

With the key figure off key, even the capable Marjorie Main, who plays the great part of Mom, seems uncomfortable; the rest of the cast ditto.

Your Reviewer Says: Don't blame Red—he tries hard.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN

Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 5 pints a day. If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may cause backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up with a feeling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and distress. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning and times of having something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Don's Pills, a stimulant and diuretic to carry away waste through the kidney and bladder.

muted style and dealing with an emotional crisis in the life of an English matron. Celia Johnson plays the woman, Trevor Howard the man who cuts into the every- tenor of her country existence to give her a "brief encounter" with the romance of the storybooks and force her to make the hardest decisions of her whole life.

The theme is a woman's and the story is told through the woman's eyes; it is direct and at times forceful. But the most interesting period of the film is its quiet presentation, a direct contrast to Hollywood's lavish emotional treatment of the same topic. By way of illustration— the heroine wears the same dowdy hat twice; her room is an everyday one with no velvet touches; her husband is a quiet, likable chap who works his crossword puzzle here and there in the picture; her great love is a hard-working doctor, no Addams family replica of the Englishman in the street.

If you happen to be "thoughtful, critical or adult," you will probably enjoy this quietly and thoroughly; otherwise, if your celluloid diet has been a strong emotion, you may find it tooland.

Your Reviewer Says: It all depends.

EARL CARROLL SKETCHBOOK

(Republic)

THIS is a minor musical that's supposed to be right in the groove but is right in a rut instead.

A talented young musician, William Marshall, sinks to writing radio jingles, is beloved by his secretary Constance Moore, can't see her for a row of pins and starts playing a romantic tune to Hillary Brooke instead. Naturally, this burns Constance up; but we all know the story, to such lengths as pretended amnesia and tune-stealing for the "Sketchbook" revue just to get her man.

Vera Vague gets a few chuckles with her manipulating routine and Edward Everett Horton does his best.

Your Reviewer Says: Draw another picture.

THE CLOAK AND DAGGER (WARNERS)

This takes the prize in this ex- pression of American secret service in World War II. With Max Steiner's music playing a mystery tune that trips the natural suspense, the film presents a chilling panorama of intelligence agents, landing behind mist-shrouded enemy lines, daggers flashing in the darkness, partisans co-ordinating with masquerading spies.

Gary Cooper is Dr. Jesper, American journalist who joins the "cloak and dagger" Office of Strategic Services and ends up doing some super gutter fighting as well as as some super spying in German-occupied Italy. Everyone wants to know what the Germans are doing with pitchblende, specifically if they're working on an atom bomb; it's Gary's job to find out. In the course of this, he has some pretty tense moments; the action is fast and the pace is electric until he meets up with blonde courier Lilli Palmer; then he takes time off for a bit of romancing. Opinion on the value of this will be divided; the ladies will probably relish the close-ups; the gentleman wish they could watch more fast OSS action, especially when things start off with some fabulous hold-your-breath scenes.

This is "now it can be told" film, nicely plotted and nicely played. See it for some real suspense.

Your Reviewer Says: Oh-So-Secret.
HEADACHES, sired:

VETERANS: Institute

ANNIVERSARY—Mrs. Irene Dunne plays the schoolteacher who comes to the palace of the King of Siam to teach him the children the way of the outside world, and Rex Harrison is excellent as the king. (Aug.)

AVAILANCE—PRI: Bruce Cabot, sleuth from the Treasury Department, arrives at a ski lodge to discover the gaps in the income tax of a gambler. Then snow slides lock in the guests at the lodge and murder begins. It sounds more exciting than it is—though exciting it is—on early sight, including Roscoe Karns, Helen Morley and Elsa Anais. M.G.M. (Aug.)

BADMAN'S TERRITORY—B RKO: Andy Scott goes his gun around in the lawless West again. Ann Richards is the pioneer newspaperwoman, and the James boys, the Daltons, and Belle Starr are all present. (Sept.)

BIG SLEEP, THE—Warner: This is full of action, full of Bogart and Bacall and full of murders. Bogart is the hard-boiled private detective hired to straighten out an old general's affairs, which are all mixed up by two daughters, Lauren Bacall and Martha Vickers. Bogie does his best to find out everything, leaving from corpse to corpse and taking time off to give Lauren the eye. (Oct.)

BLUE SKIES—Paramount: Fred Astaire's dancing reaches its peak in this nostalgic Technicolor musical featuring Irving Berlin's haunting melodies. Bing Crosby, Ginger Rogers, who are never in better voice, and Jean Caffield as heart interest for Fred and Bing are beautifully cast. Olga San Juan is Fred's dancing partner and Billy De Wolfe is the funny junior. (Oct.)

BOYS RANCH—MGM: We can do without this unpretentious picture. Some boys who are juvenile delinquents. James Craig, an all-American baseball player, with a reforming bug, provides a ranch for boys delinquents. (Sept.)

CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA—Pascal UA: This is strictly in the limited appeal category, although the setting and costumes and scenery are the other world. There was a meticulous observation. Claude Rains plays Caesar, the conqueror, given to showing off philosophically. Vivian Leigh is the young Cleopatra, whom Rains teaches to be queen. Unfortunately, the picture is almost entirely static. (Oct.)

CANYON PASSAGE—Universal: A true-to-form Western done with dignity and respect, with John Ireland as the earnest young colonel, Brian Donlevy as a gambler and Susan Hayward as the fiancée of a villain. There's a touch of murder, some bloody fat fights, and an Indian raid executed with wild abandon. Andy Devine is a prospector, Ward Bond the heavyweight villain. (Oct.)

CENTENNIAL SUMMER—20th Century Fox: A round of lighthearted fun recorded the lives of the Burt Whitman and their two daughters, Linda Darnell and Jeanne Crain, two bombshells arrive—one in the form of Mama's jocular sister from Paris, Constance Bennett, who brings to the screen Francine Hodge and the second is the Centennial Exposition (Sept.)

CLAUDIA AND DAVID—20th Century Fox: A sexy little number that frequently appears on stage is the story of a young couple played by Dorothy McGuire and Robert Mitchum. Dorothy is the innocent, simple, young and his bossy client, Mary Astor, and Young in turn gets jealous of Dorothy and her new found friend, John Sutton. (Oct.)

CLUNY BROWN—20th Century Fox: An absolute bomb of a movie, with Jennifer Jones as the housemaid with a flair for plumbing who goes to work in the English home of Reginald Owen. Charles Boyer is the refugee with a humorous disdain for England's castles and slate and the fourth time with my portrayal of the village chemist, and Peter Lawford is Owen's son in love with Helen Walker. (Aug.)

COCKEYED MIRACLE, THE—M.G.M. Executed with a light touch and in the finest of taste, this has Frank Morgan and Clarissa Widney as two spirits who have a fine time observing their human counterparts. Morgan, Keenan's son, has a few earthily matters to clear up—his financial affairs and the requirement of his daughter, Audrey Totter, with Richard Quine. It's gay and fantastic.

COLORADO SERENADE—PRC: Although too long, this offers all the essentials of the time-proved Western—the stagecoach holding, the climaxed lady racekeeper, the honest law man who transgresses law and order to the frontier. (Sept.)

- COURAGE OF LASSIE—M.G.M: A Techni-

colored account of a golden collie whose adventures are many and herculean. Elizabeth Taylor is his young mistress, tense with apprehensions on when he disappears to eventually some combat as a war dog in the Aleutians and prove himself a canine hero. (Sept.)

- DO YOU LOVE ME—20th Century-Fox: If you belong to the Cameron set, the answer to the picture's title is yes, as it has Harry James' hot trumpet and Dick Haymes' singing. The fragile plot deals with the metamorphosis of Marlene O'Hara (from the dignified duchess of a school of classical music into a glamorous girl. (Aug.)

- DOLL FACE—20th Century-Fox: A film about a burlesque dancer, Marcia and J. Wiles. J. Wiles as her publicity manager, Dennis O'Keefe has a written book about her life. The result is that the ghost writer, Michael Cameron, born in Chicago.

- DOWN MISSOURI WAY—PRC: A college-educated mulie makes the lead in this, which should give you an idea of the type of picture it is. William Wycherly is a producer who comes to the States to shoot a motion picture on Martha O'Driscoll's farm. Jackie Caradine, Eddie Dean and Mabel Todd are all around the place. (Oct.)

- FROM THIS DAY FORWARD—RKO: A picture with punch, about the marriage on a shoestring of Greta Garbo and John Gilbert. Scarred by the brush-shave existence of Joan's sister, they lose courage, then marry anyway. The war comes around and gives Joan a chance. (Sept.)

- HER SISTER'S SECRET—PRC: Pure melodrama this, with Nancy Coleman falling in love with handsome soldier Philip Reed. After Reed sails away, Nancy turns to her sister, Margaret Lindsay, for help in keeping her secret. So Margaret adopts Nancy's baby, and then the tug between the two sisters begins. (Oct.)

- HOME SWEET HOMICIDE—20th Century-Fox: This picture constitutes a fresh slant on the usual whodunit, since it gives you a look at three little hellions—Peggy Ann Garner, Dean Stockwell, and Constance Smith, as the little three try to solve a murder. Lynn Redari is their mystery-writer mother, Randolph Scott and James Gleason detectives. (Oct.)

- JANIE GETS MARRIED—Warner's: Janie Leslie and Bob Hansen get married by accident under the watchful eyes of papas Edward Arnold and Robert Benchley and Mamas Ann Harding and Barbara Stanwyck. Evan Roberts,Janie's first contact, is an overseas buddy of Bob's walks into their little dream cottage. (Sept.)

- LADY LUCK—RKO: You'll get some uninhibited laughs at Frank Morgan as the incapable gambler who's reduced to a three-dollar-a-week allowance. This from his grandchildren-in-law, Gale Robbins. Robert Young's another gambler whom Barbara marries thinking he's reformed until she catches him at the roulette table. Barbara's retaliation is a funny twist. (Oct.)

- LITTLE MR. JIM—M.G.M: Jackie Jenkins' freckles and hispanic ability make this movie worthwhile. As the small son of a cowman, Captain John Craig and Frances Gifford, he gets black eyes, teases little girls, and is a complete charmer. (Sept.)

- L VER COME Back—Universal. Light and frothy romancetastic stuff with Lucille Ball as the stylish wife who longs for her soldier-husband's return after two years. (Dec.)

- MAKE MINE MUSIC—Disney-RKO: You'll love this rare combination of music, mirth, fantasy and whimsy all in Disney's own cartoon style. The ten part offering, with music and dancing, has no story but is an overall of the greatest songs shown in long form. The songs are illustrated with cartoon characters or scenic drawings. (Aug.)

- MR. ACE—FA: A second-rate movie in which polititician Sid Silvers, who gets a job in the government seems to worry more over his hats and her love affairs than about her campaign. George Raft has a chance to employ all his usual gangsterish tricks, which after all these years seem a little tiresome.

- MONSEUR BEAUCARTE—Paramount: A Bob hope comedy special, in which he plays a barber from the court of Louis XV of France who's forced to imersonate the gay countess. Patric Knowles. This device gives him unlimited scope for his unrestricted effrontery and sets up a Harlequin style. It love it. Jean Cofullard is a pretty French wench and Marjorie Remains the Spanish Infanta. (Oct.)

Million Dollar Lullaby

Did the discovery bring a change? Does she feel any different now that Liza has come to stay? "Not different," she smiles softly. "Just happier."
It all happened very simply. Judy knew from the seventh month that she would have a Caesarean delivery. So, on the appointed morning, she and her husband drove alone to the hospital. They knew that today was the big day. Judy wasn't afraid. She was happy and excited.
Fear came for the first time when she was left alone with her baby. Little Liza was seized with a fit of sneezing. If you have seen a new baby you can understand a mother's fear that one large sneeze might make it disappear. Judy kept her hand on the bell until a nurse came to the rescue. Of course, it was lint in her nose. But whatever may befall Miss Minnelli her mother will probably never know the same degree of panic. "A little baby is so little," she says.
Judy Garland was deluged with flowers in the hospital. But there was a daily offering, a white arrangement accompanied by a note for the mother and a rose for the new arrival. Liza's father, with affectionate understanding, didn't want his daughter to feel that a movie star's child might ever be neglected.
"You should see her father handle her," says Mrs. Minnelli. "He has the deftness of a veteran. He was better than I was at first." She grins and adds, "And does she ever wave her fan at him! She's the biggest flirt!"
Father might have been better "at first," but he'd better look to his laurels, for Judy is energetically and definitely the mother of that small elegant bundle.
"I refuse," says Liza's mother, "to be treated like a wonder child for nine months and then suddenly have everyone behave as if I were a moron."
Thus you see she is not a passive mother. She spends a great deal of time with her baby and is impatiently awaiting the time when she's up to that first whole day alone with her.
"I want to be at my best then," she says.
"I don't see much point in getting so tired by night that I can't keep my chin out of the mashed potatoes."

ALREADY Liza has a favorite piece of jewelry. It is a tiny mesh coin purse sent by a dear friend in New York. It contains a lucky penny and it will be made into a clip for her.
Altogether you might look at Liza Minnelli lying in her dainty basinet, her father's big brown eyes looking at you from her mother's piquant little face, and predict confidently that here "a star is born." Her personality is enchanting and she loves company and excitement. If the nurse weren't so proud of her that she enjoys showing her off there might be friction in the Minnelli menage.
"She was strict at first," says Judy. "But Liza won her over all by herself."
Suggest that the baby seems to have all the qualifications for a star, including temperament, and watch that strange definite look come into Judy's eyes. "She might want to be a stenographer," she says flatterly. "I don't want any plans made for Liza. Children should be what they want to be. Parents haven't any right to expect them to follow a pattern of their design." She thought a moment and then a smile softened her face. "That doesn't mean you can't have dreams about them. I'd love her to want to be an actress. I think it's the best, the most thrilling life in the world."
Before your very eyes Judy Minnelli has

She was the cleverest, most ambitious woman in the state and a rich man's wife. She planned every step of her political career with brilliance and cool determination — even to enlisting the aid of the town's racketeering political boss. But what she didn't plan on was love...

In this first "Film Hit of the Month" Bart House brings you the thrilling, unusual story of "Mr. Ace", novelized from the movie of the same name by Helen Christy, famous American novelist. Each month Bart House selects for its "Film Hit of the Month" an outstanding original screen play and chooses a well-known novelist to write it in book form. Don't miss Bart House "Film Hit of the Month"—this month... and every month!

Great Books From Great Screen Plays—By Leading Novelists

BART HOUSE FILM HIT OF THE MONTH
suddenly disappeared. There is the smell of grease paint in the air and the lovely voice of Judy Garland—singing hauntingly. In the twirling of an eye she has become the actress to her finger tips. And Judy Garland should know what being an actress means. It's a great thing to hear a girl who has been in the business since she was a child, who has known the rough as well as the smooth side of it, boosting an industry often maligned by the people within it.

It is great to catch the fervor of enthusiasm which has made her a star. That think-it-through, work-hard kind of love for her work. A songstress who became a great dramatic actress in a role of that label and yet insists that even now she will not cease to sing because music is her great love.

"And," says Judy, subtly becoming again Liza's mother, "if she should want to be an actress. I hope she'll marry into the industry. Separate interests may be the solution for some people but, if you love your profession, it's a blessing when 'shop talk' isn't a bore."

You could almost hear her add, "And I hope he's someone like Vincente."

It's a easy task. Judy's a big month for Judy. In the month of June are her birthday, her anniversary and Father's Day. This year her husband wanted something very special for her. Judy's passion is antique jewelry. Vincente had seen some very lovely old coral pieces, but couldn't quite make up his mind about them.

At the very last moment he decided that, along with the other things he had for her, she must also have the coral. He called the man who owned the coral. The man was out. He would not be in until late. As a matter of fact he was out riding horseback "somewhere in the hills" behind Hollywood. Vincente Minnelli took his car and a stout pair of boots and started combing the canyons, the highways and the byways. He never counted the miles or the hours. The point was, he got his man and Judy got her coral. So, you can see, it isn't all "shop talk" with the Minnells.

THERE'S no question, however, that as Judy grows older she'll hear a lot about her parents' business. Vincente has directed Judy in what she considers her best pictures, "Meet Me in St. Louis" and "The Clock." She has implicit faith in him and is willing to let him direct her private life. A couple of years ago he built the hilltop house which Vincente created for his star wife. Her knowledge of music has developed under his direction. Her love and taste for books, too. They know and understand each other. They take each other's advice. According to Judy, her husband understands her better than anyone in this world. At work and at home.

"We went to Laguna alone for a holiday after Liza was born," she said reflectively. "We were only to be gone four days. I didn't want to be a spoil sport but I wanted one of those dresses. Without a word Vincente just packed up and brought me home. He knew how much I missed the baby before I did. Now he's feeling younger. For me. I think that as they travel we do in the future will have to include the whole family."
ADVICE FOR BAD SKIN

Stop Worrying Now About Pimples, Blackheads And Other Externally Caused Skin Troubles

JUST FOLLOW SKIN DOCTOR'S SIMPLE DIRECTIONS

By Betty Memphis

Have you ever stopped to realize that the leading screen stars whom you admire, as well as the beautiful models who have lovely, soft white skin, were all born just like you with a lovely smooth skin?

The truth is that many girls and women do not give their skin a chance to show off the natural beauty that lies hidden underneath those externally caused pimples, blackheads and irritations. For almost anyone can have the natural, normal complexion which is in itself beauty. All you have to do is follow a few amazingly simple rules.

Many women shut themselves out of the thrills of life—dates, romance, popularity, social and business success—only because sheer neglect has robbed them of the good looks, poise and feminine self-assurance which could so easily be theirs. Yes, everybody looks at your face. The beautiful complexion, which is yours for the asking, is like a permanent card of admission to all the good things of life that every woman craves. And it really can be yours—take my word for it!—no matter how discouraged you may be this very minute about those externally caused skin miseries.

Medical science gives us the truth about a lovely skin. There are small specks of dust and dirt in the air all the time. When these get into the open pores in your skin, they can in time cause the pores to become larger and more susceptible to dirt particles, dust and infection. These open pores begin to form blackheads which become infected and bring you the humiliation of pimples, blackheads or other blemishes. When you neglect your skin by not giving it the necessary care, you leave yourself wide open to externally caused skin miseries. Yet proper attention with the double Viderm treatment may mean the difference between enjoying the confidence a fine skin gives you or the embarrassment of an ugly, unbeautiful skin that makes you want to hide your face.

Use your double Viderm treatment every day until your skin is smoother and clearer. Then use it only once a week to remove stale make-up and dirt specks that infect your pores, as well as to aid in healing external irritations. Remember that when you help prevent blackheads, you also help to prevent externally caused skin miseries and pimples.

Incidentally, while your two jars and the doctor's directions are on their way to you, be sure to wash your face as often as necessary. First use warm water, then cleanse with water as cold as you can stand it, in order to freshen, stimulate and help close your pores. After you receive everything, read your directions carefully. Then go right to it and let these two fine formulas help your dreams of a beautiful skin come true.

Just mail your name and address to Betty Memphis, care of the New York Skin Laboratory, 206 Division Street, Dept. 78, New York 2, N. Y. By return mail you will receive the doctor's directions, and both jars, packed in a safety-sealed carton. On delivery, pay two dollars plus postage. If you wish, you can save the postage fee by mailing the two dollars with your letter. If you are in any way dissatisfied, your money will be cheerfully refunded. To give you an idea of how fully tested and proven the Viderm double treatment is, it may interest you to know that, up to this month, over two hundred and twelve thousand women have ordered it on my recommendation. If you could only see the thousands of happy, grateful letters that have come to me as a result, you would know the joy this simple treatment can bring. And, think of it—the treatment must work for you, or it doesn't cost you a cent.

From the sinister shadows of the underworld comes this passionate and revealing story of two young lovers caught in the rip-tide of big city vice and greed.

ADAM and Helen were young and fine—strangers to the sordid night life of the city. Yet fate brought them together in the "Silver Fox," where they both took jobs rather than starve. And there in the midst of frenzied night club gaiety and human corruption they found in each other the kind of love they were made for—honest, strong and beautiful. But Helen in her work as a hostess met Harry Fabian (one of the most loathsome yet fascinating characters in modern fiction) and became infected with his passion for easy money—a began to dream of the security that comes from wealth and possessions. ADAM on the other hand, hated material success—wanted only to return to the creation of beauty as a sculptor. Could their love—strong as it was—stand this cleavage?

“How about a husband for Christmas, Sugar?”

GIRL: Why sure, Pint Size—why, sure! And how about handing me the moon, a million dollars and a sparkling smile, while you’re in the mood?

CUPID: Are you kidding?

GIRL: Aren’t you?

CUPID: Listen, Pie, put a little sparkle in that smile of yours and you’ll find the moon and a million and a man aren’t so hard to get.

GIRL: He says!...look, Cupid, I brush my teeth like anything, but some teeth just won’t sparkle. Mine for instance.

CUPID: Maybe, Baby, maybe. Ever see “pink” on your tooth brush?

GIRL: That’s from gums, not teeth. And it’s my teeth I’m after!

CUPID: Know more than a dentist, huh? Don’t you know that “pink” is a warning to see your dentist? Let him decide what’s what. He may say it’s just another case of soft foods robbing your gums of exercise. If so, he’ll probably suggest “the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage.”

GIRL: Massage. Guns again. I said it was my teeth. Teeth, Cupid. Teeth!

CUPID: Ah, yes. But sparkling smiles call for sound teeth. And sound teeth for healthy gums. And Ipana’s designed not only to clean teeth but, with gentle massage, to help gums. If your dentist suggests massage with Ipana when you brush your teeth...go to it, Angel. And you’ll be on your way to a smile with more sparkle than six Christmas trees!

From Lexington, Kentucky, comes a romantic tid-bit...

The whole town's in love with a horse!

So are Detroit and Toledo, Pittsburgh and Wheeling, Buffalo and Binghamton. So are more than 30 other cities that she's visited in her palatial trailer.

They're all in love with "Bess," the gleaming chestnut steed that won Hollywood's heart and is now making countless friends across the country.

They call her "The Horse With The Human Mind."

No wonder they give her the keys to the city (which she accepts personally), clamor for her autograph (she never says 'no'), and wine and dine her at hunt clubs!

Of course, "Bess" can't visit every town in the land, but you can see her in M-G-M's thrilling adventure story, "Gallant Bess," soon to be screened at your local theatre.

You'll see "Bess" as she really is, for Harry Rapf has produced "Gallant Bess" in glowing natural color by the Cinecolor process.

There's a crisp, authentic flavor to Jeanne Bartlett's story. She got its true-to-life feeling from an incident narrated by Lt. Marvin Park, USNR.

Keep your eye on Marshall Thompson, who is best friend to "Bess", in the picture. As a star, he's mounting. You can see he loved his role; gave it power; conviction.

With him, you'll see George Tobias and Clem Bevans—stalwart, two-listed pals who thrive on rough going.

Altogether, the picture is a credit to Andrew Marton's expert direction.

So here's our Stranger-Than-Fiction Fact For Fall: You're going to fall in love with a horse, when you see M-G-M's "Gallant Bess" in action color.

"DELIGHTFUL" is the word for this Technicolor treat set to music, starring the talented trio. June Haver, Vivian Blaine and Vera-Ellen. With Atlantic City of 1908 as its background, the story is the familiar one of the gal who poses as a heiress and sets off on a matrimonial fishing expedition. This time she is aided and abetted by her two sisters who go along as the hired help.

Lovely June Haver, as Pam the "heiress," lends youthful exuberance and a decided decorative note to the role of husband hunter. Vera-Ellen, of the round, merry face and the twinkling toes, masquerades as June's maid Myra to good advantage, and Vivian Blaine plays sister June's wistful secretary. George Montgomery and Frank Latimore portray a couple of pleasure-bent playboys vieing for the favor of the fair June. The magnetic Montgomery is very much at home in this first film since his stint in the Army. Frank Latimore, with only two previous pictures to his credit ("The Dolly Sisters" and "Shock"), offers good looks plus an engaging manner. Celeste Holm plays to the hilt a sophisticated Southern belle with a Parisian touch. A gal with a terrific personalty, Celeste should be given more to do. From start to finish, "Three Little Girls in Blue" bounces along briskly.

Two Years Before the Mast (Paramount)

ONE woman—a Spanish passenger on the good ship Pilgrim—figures in this; she could have been omitted and never been missed, since this is straight male fare that needs no help from petticoats. Richard Henry Dana's famous saga of men and sailing ships comes to the screen in strong-armed fashion with Brian Donlevy playing Richard Henry Dana with effective restraint, William Bendix cracking the merciless whip over the seamen with an effective heavy hand. Alan Ladd is the ship owner's son who is shanghied aboard his father's own vessel where he discovers at what price the laces he wears are bought.

The book was a brief for the fate of America's merchant seamen; the picture is a graphic portrayal of that brief. The plot runs true to its course, never losing sight of the fact that it is presenting a bitter period in America's sea history, except for the few romantic moments between Esther Fernandez and Ladd which merely serve to slow the action. Cruelty and famine stalk the ship as does the merciless captain, Howard da Silva; and men are driven to hatred and murder.

The final scene has a cut-off feeling: the curtain comes down just a bit too abruptly, but otherwise the picture is robust sea fare.

Your Reviewer Says: Not for the weak in heart.

I've Always Loved You (Republic)

If you thrill to the works of the Three B's (Bach, Beethoven, Brahms), this will be right up your musical alley. But if you prefer Irving Berlin and Richard Rodgers to the long-haired boys, then it's not for you. This Technicolor picture introduces a lovely new star—Catherine McLeod. As Myra, a gifted young pianist with a hero-worship complex, she makes an auspicious beginning to her screen career.

Philip Dorn gives a brilliant portrayal of an egotistic genius whose mistress is music. Upon realizing this, Myra takes refuge in the arms of her childhood sweetheart, a farm lad, personally, if not convincingly, played by William Carter. Their marriage is marred by the question: Does Myra still love the Maestro? So the boy with the plow (now beginning to gray) puts Myra to the test—all to the accompaniment of Rachmaninoff's majestic music.

A false note is struck when, after neglecting her scales for years on end, Myra blithely gives a flawless performance at Carnegie Hall. Equally unbelievable is the assumption that her teen-age daughter (Vanessa Brown) could be ready to make her debut in that same venerable mecca of music in such record-breaking time. These weaknesses are offset by the teamwork of Dorn and McLeod. And with the celebrated pianist Artur Rubinstein to interpret them in off-screen recordings, The Masters can rest in peace.

Your Reviewer Says: Tops for music lovers.

✓ The Dark Mirror
(Universal-International)

RECIPE for a whodunit: One part crime, one part psychology, one part love; mix well and serve with a dash of humor. Then, to make it genuinely absorbing, let Olivia de Havilland and Lew Ayres play the leads. These two manage to make the old idea of twin sisters—one good, the other bad—seem fairly fresh and believable.

Both girls are suspected when a doctor-acquaintance is found fatally stabbed. Since they're identical in appearance if opposite in character, there's no way of pinning the murder on either one. That's where Lew Ayres comes into the case, for he's a psychologist who knows the whys and wherefores of human behavior. In his scientific endeavors to shed some light on a dark situation, he's encouraged by detective Thomas Mitchell, who's determined to catch the real culprit. The story's one glaring weakness is that the good twin, supposedly a very bright gal, is remarkably naive about her sister's evil potentialities despite her lifelong association.

In portraying nice, wholesome Ruth as well as clever, abnormal Terry, Olivia turns in a fine acting job. (We wish, however, she'd try a more flattering hair-do next time.) The much matured Ayres oozes charm all over the place, and it's predicted his popularity will greatly increase with this performance. Reliable trouper that he is, Thomas Mitchell's detective is to the manner born. It all adds up to sure-fire entertainment, especially if melodrama's your movie meat.

Your Reviewer Says: A guessing game you'll enjoy.

✓ The Man I Love
(Warner's)

AGING all Lupino fans: Your favorite star is in fine fettle in this one. She never looked more glamorous or packed a bigger punch with every word and gesture than she does here. In this tense tale, adapted from a novel by Maritta Wolf, the role of night club canary Petey Brown, who always knows what the score is, fits Ida like the well-known glove.

On a visit to her family in California, she discovers that her sister Sally (sympathetically handled by Andrea King) needs her help as does her weakling brother Joe (Warren Douglas). So she unpacks and tackles her first problem: Night club owner Nicky Toscanelli, a wolf on the prowl conventionally played by smooth-as-silk Robert Alda. Petey turns a deaf ear to Nicky's persistent yowlings, then meets Sen Thomas, a world-weary piano player. She carries a torch for him but, as luck would have it, he's still half in love with his ex-wife.

In the midst of the complications, Lupino tosses off a couple of Gershwin and Kern song hits like a veteran warbler. As "The Man I Love," Bruce Bennett is plenty attractive in a rugged sort of way but this is primarily La Lupino's picture, and she squeezes the last ounce of drama out of every situation.

Your Reviewer Says: You'll have a wonderful time.

Great ENTERTAINMENT

block is the trite story, whipped up by four writers, about rich young Martha Vickers who studies for the opera and longs for excitement in her sheltered life.

Sakall's discerning grandpappy (S. Z. Sakall), recognizing that the handsome nightclub entertainer next door (Dennis Morgan) is the very man to provide the aforesaid excitement, promptly tries to promote a romance. Martha is more than willing to cooperate, but Dennis shies away because she's "such a nice girl," as he quaintly puts it. A famous conductor of highbrow opera, the old man offers to finance a lowbrow musical for Dennis and his pals, Jack Carson and Janis Paige. But they must give Martha the leading role and keep it a secret from Grandma. Florence Bates and Manager Donald Woods. There's a lot more along these lines with everyone present and accounted for when the curtain goes up on opening night.

Dennis Morgan is oh, so relaxed through it all; Jack Carson, the kid with the good-time Charlie personality, is right at home; Janis Paige really tries to be helpful; Martha Vickers flashes a sparkling smile; Sakall, as usual, murders the King's English; Florence Bates is alternately coy and shrewish and Donald Woods plays a stereotyped part.

Your Reviewer Says: A splashy, flashy musical.

The Bachelor's Daughters

HERE'S still another version of the old game of make-believe where everyone pretends to be someone else and gets into all kinds of jams. Yearning to shed their humdrum existence and have themselves a time, the bunch at the Royal Department Store chip in and rent a mansion on swanky Long Island. Gail Russell, a sweet young thing, conveniently falls in love with a young man of means (John Whitney) only to have Claire Trevor, in the part of a hard-boiled femme, throw a monkey-wrench into the romance. Ann Dvorak is a gal who determines to become a popular singer come what may, and Jane Wyatt—by one of those happy coincidences of reel life—forms an attachment for the son of the department store owner.

✓ Angel on My Shoulder
(Rogers-UA)

THE angels are not in evidence in this, but their chief adversary certainly is. In the person of Claude Rains, who acts as though he’s thoroughly enjoying himself, old Beelzebub himself wanders around for two hours in company with a murdered gangster, Paul Muni.

Which all goes to show that this is another experiment in the realm of phantasy and the afterworld, an experiment that may have enthusiastic followers on the one hand and just as enthusiastic thumbs-downers on the other. Eddie Kagle, a released convict, is shot and killed by his pal; he wakes up in hell. What he finds there has him tugging at his collar; the audience will probably react likewise. Old Nick thinks Eddie’s a good bet for some unfinished business in the world, so back go the two to earth. The rustle of wings now becomes apparent with the entrance of Anne Baxter, fiancée of the Judge into whose body the naughty soul of Muni is infused. From there on in, it’s a fight of good versus evil, punctuated by some wondrously dramatic lines.

Muni takes Eddie Kagle and twists him around his little finger. Since Rains does the magnificently with his “just call me Nick” role, the picture is made. It will take you an hour to get into the swing of things; after that, unless you’re a sworn rebeller against this type film, you’ll find yourself wondering what’s going to happen next. One thing is certain—when “The End” flashes on the screen, you’ll promise to be a good boy from now on!

Your Reviewer Says: You’ll page the angels!

✓ White Tie and Tails
(Universal-International)

WHAT happens when a “gentleman’s gentleman” steps out of his class is amusingly told in this bright little comedy. Dan Duryea, featured as a bad boy in past pictures, plays a good guy here—but not too good to withstand temptation. Weary of being the perfect butler-valet, he takes advantage of his employer’s absence to have whiz start out as a harmless fling, making use of the boss’s car and chauffeur, and his white tie and tails.

It’s no trick at all for the clever fellow to impersonate a gentleman who knows all the niceties and can mix a mean Martini. But in seeking to impress that very chic socialite Ella Raines, he overplays his hand. She’s a lady in distress and he’s the gallant; Gallahad eager to help her; so before long they’re both in a tight spot.

Many of the laughs are provided by William Bendix in the roughneck role of a big shot out to acquire polish and Frank Jenks as the crap-shooting chauffeur. Dan Duryea’s creditable acting, Ella Raines’s glamorous get-up, and the combined efforts of Messrs. Bendix and Jenks make for a diverting, if not important, film.

Your Reviewer Says: Fun for the whole family.

Abie's Irish Rose

Bird Seed & Biscuit (Bing Crosby, U.A.)

Only moderately funny is this screen version of Anne Nichols's laugh hit of yesteryear. To hear the oldsters tell it, that record-breaking play about the Murphys and the Levys was simply sensational. Well, maybe too much water has gone under the bridge since then, and what used to be greeted with such hearty guffaws now merely evokes an occasional titter.

The high spot of this slow-paced comedy is the film debut of Joanne Dru (Dick Haymes's missus). She plays Rosemary with marked sincerity and assurance, and you'd never guess it's her first bout with the klug lights. Richard Morris makes a likable, straightforward Abie so that you're not surprised when he sweeps the little colleen off her feet. The meeting of these two in London on V-E day begins promisingly enough but the story starts to sag when, frowning upon their children's marriage, stubborn Papa Levy (Michael Chekhov) and equally stubborn Father Murphy (J. M. Kerrigan) hurl insults at each other in characteristic brogue and accent, typical of bygone vaudeville days. Although their grandchildren finally bring the old boys together, you have a feeling that their relationship is never going to be a very cordial one.

In this tepid revival of a one-time favorite, George E. Stone and Vera Gordon are a friendly couple who fully realize that love and intolerance simply will not mix.

Your Reviewer Says: No harm done.

Black Beauty (20th Century-Fox)

A GIRL'S all-consuming passion for her horse and the adventures that befall them both comprise the theme of this one. Derived from the children's classic of the same title by Anna Sewell, this hoss opera of Victorian vintage takes place in rural England.

Mona Freeman is the ideal choice for the lissome lassie who goes into positive raptures over Black Beauty. To be sure, it's a pleasure to watch the graceful cavortings of the magnificent animal. As a visiting American, Richard Denning thinks so too, and it's their mutual admiration for Black Beauty that throws these young people together.

Evelyn Ankers — the other girl in Richard's life — isn't the out-of-doors type like Mona; still she wears her riding habit with an air. J. M. Kerrigan turns in a finished performance as a faithful groom and, in case it matters, the horse's real name is Highland Dale.

Your Reviewer Says: For the small fry.

The Last Bomb

Warner's

This twenty-minute Technicolor short, made in cooperation with U.S. Army Air Forces and supervised by Army Co-ordinator Frank Lloyd, is an awe-inspiring spectacle of the huge striking force used against Japan early in 1945. At that time the bombers were at their peak at Saipan, Tinian and Guam under General Curtis LeMay.

It's a truly stirring sight to see those impressive B-29s start off for their target: Tokyo.

You'll watch breathlessly as they wing their way through heavy fighter opposition, intensive flak and bad weather. Then comes the return trip with the P-51's bombing specific objectives along the coast. Some of the planes get back to their bases at Iwo, others fail to make it.

As a permanent record of how our Air Forces accomplished their great mission this outdoes any fiction the screen writers can devise.

Your Reviewer Says: First-rate documentary film.

Salute to Suzanne

By Lana Turner

Hollywood High was so big and the Carnahan girl was so scared with the clams, her tongue felt as fuzzy as a woolen mitten when her turn to emotecame. To make matters worse there was a stranger at the back of the classroom.

"I must pass. I must," she told herself and never did any actress put more of her heart into a role, but still she Hollywood High School is a remarkable institution. Its buildings, covering a city block, and its student body are as large as those of many small colleges, but it is best known throughout the country because many of its alumni have won fame in motion pictures.

You've heard stories about graduates of my alma mater who have become film celebrities but I'd like to tell you one such tale, little known outside our town although it has become school legend. It's about a girl named Suzanne, gray eyed, brown haired, slim. A plucky girl. I had left Hollywood High before the episode of Suzanne in Senior Drama 13, but I know the story well.

Suzanne was a serious student; she wanted to be a doctor and felt keenly her responsibility toward her mother and younger brother. Her schedule was heavy but she needed a few extra points for graduation. She elected that drama course, thinking it might be easy. Soon she realized her mistake.

"It wasn't the teacher's fault, Lana," she has told me subsequently. "He was patient and kind. I don't think it was my fault, either. I worked hard, but I wasn't an actress. I knew I was heading for a big fat flunk and that meant I would not graduate. I needed those points. I was confident of passing my other courses."

At the end of the term Suzanne was worried, for the final exam was to be oral. The dreaded day arrived. Suzanne's palms seemed to have kinship thought she failed.

Class was dismissed. The teacher and the stranger started a whispered conversation just as a dejected Suzanne reached the door. She was called back.

"This is it. I've flunked and I'm going to be told privately, just to make it easier," she thought.

"Suzanne, this is Mr. Blank," the teacher started.

"Why doesn't he get it over with?" Suzanne thought miserably.

"Mr. Blank is a talent scout and he considers you the only possible screen material in the class, on the basis of today's readings. He'd like to arrange a screen test," the girl heard hazily.

Suzanne took her test and was signed, then fought through two years of bitter disappointments during which she did nothing but more tests. She switched studios, finally by hard work and sheer ability became a star, only to suffer another setback and near death in a tragic accident. Suzanne is fighting back to health now and we all hope she'll be back on the screen soon. She more than deserves success and happiness.

Oh, yes. At Hollywood High she was Suzanne—Suzanne Carnahan, to be exact. You know her as Susan Peters.

Jolson and Skolsky: Sidney Skolsky, the diminutive columnist who writes bright pieces for Photoplay, has been nagging studios for years to permit him to produce for them the life story of Al Jolson. Even Warner Brothers, for whom Jolson made the first full talking picture, "The Jazz Singer," turned him down. Finally Columbia bent an interested ear, and after several years of work, worry and preparation, Sidney's completed film emerged a heart-warming success. But that wasn't all. The Schwab brothers, whose corner drugstore has been publicized for years by Sidney as the Schwarbadero, invited literally hundreds of Sidney's friends, as well as stars who patronize their store, to a reception. To the accompaniment of the usual sweeping arc lights and crowding spectators, they jammed the drugstore. In a back room a broadcasting mike was set up with Bill Powell, Ed (Archie) Gardner, Dane Clark, Bette Davis, Celeste Holm and a dozen others paying tribute to Sidney. Bill Demarest, who plays an important role in the film, vied with Laraine Day in blowing the biggest bubbles from their bubble gum which was part of the refreshments. Ice-cream sodas, candy, cokes and cakes flew from hand to hand with tiny Sidney going from group to group happier than he's been in ages; a happiness truly deserved.

Hearts and Flowers: It took a lot of wooing and courting on Bob Hutton's part to re-win Cleatus Caldwell whom he once jilted for Lana Turner. Now the two are happily married . . . June Haver would say "yes" much more quickly to Dave Rose than anyone else . . . The love Jennifer Jones has for David Selznick is so obvious it glows in her eyes . . . And speaking of lovers, Hollywood is planning a royal welcome for Vivien Leigh and Laurence Olivier who arrive soon.

d(Continued from page 15) that befell his beloved wife is a report only by those who mistake British reserve for acquiescence. The actor is, as his close friends know, literally heartbroken.

A friend tells of being at the home of Douglas Fairbanks when David telephoned from New York where he'd been vacationing. He yearned to see his children but actually hadn't the heart to return to Hollywood. Fairbanks assured him the children were well and to remain where he was. Doug and his lovely wife Mary Lee are caring for them personally.

David has confided that never again will he be contented in Hollywood. All during those years away, in the midst of war's destruction, he longed for Hollywood, the place he loved. He expressed that when he first returned, waiting so happily for his wife to join him. But now his heart and mind have gone back home to England where she lived and after his next picture, David will return there with his two children who will remain in England. He will make as many pictures as he can in England and after the completion of each film in Hollywood, he'll leave. That's just how deeply the wound that will never quite heal has gone.

There’s an hour in Manhattan which is tingly with anticipation like the moment at Belmont before the horse-players shout, “They’re OFF!” It’s that magic sixty minutes when the ladies and gents are putting on their trappings, scraping off their whiskers, grilling up their loins for that “Big Evening on the town.”

That’s when this frowsy old Bagdad of a city starts to thrum like Fritz Kreisler on the tremolo passages of “Hora Staccato.” White-coated bartenders slice lemon peel with surgeon’s hands. Messenger boys ring Milady’s bell and slip her a twelve dollar orchid in a transparent box. Taxi drivers drain the last mug of Jamaica and settle down in their hacks for an evening of fender scraping.

The Miss of Manhattan, of course, spends the hour face to face with her face, sticking together a thing of beauty out of “skatey-eight” jars, pots and tubes. And the Man of Manhattan, if he’s a real toff, is doing right by himself too. A dash of Man of Manhattan’s Aftershave Lotion to make the face sing—a soupcon of Man of Manhattan’s Cologne to make him extra fascinating in those “close-in moments”.

To make HIM say —
“Ah-h-h, it feels so nice!”
Man of Manhattan’s Aftershave Lotion —

To make HER say —
“Oo-aht! How nice!”
Man of Manhattan’s Men’s Cologne — in that all-important second when he says, “Good evening, Duchess. Shall we be up and away?”

If he’s a really civilized chap, you’ll spot those Man of Manhattan toilettries on his bathroom shelves—and the fellow with know-how always slips the Man of Manhattan Stratoliner Travel Kit into his luggage when he flies around the nation.

ending the New Zealand savage natives.

Later we sat in a projection room the two of us, and watched a scene with Lana wearing the same frock plus a soiled and sooted face. Every mark on that beautiful pan was analyzed as to authenticity and realism. Then eyelash tests were run. Yes, even the length, sweep and curl of a lash is photographed and tested on the screen.

After lunch in the dressing room (Lana ate while the hairdresser worked) we adjourned to stage nine where more tests—this time an old-fashioned nightgown test—were photographed in order to be run the following day. And after considering the hours spent just in make-up and wardrobe testing before a camera is even turned on the actual shooting, one begins to feel the ache of fatigue of our stars who diet, work, stand for fittings for endless hours on end. It’s a life, we decided on the way home, they can have. We’re happier just writing about it.

Miraculous News: You’ll be happy to know that Dickie Moore, former child star, has learned to walk again. Dickie contracted an uncommon virus disease of the nervous system which paralyzed both legs. Things really looked dark for the twenty-year-old ex-sergeant who spent twenty-one months as a forward area Stars and Stripes correspondent in Saipan. Then he entered the Veteran Administration West Los Angeles Medical and Surgical Hospital in July and the treatments were started. In two months he was walking without help of any kind. V. A. doctors credit the miraculous recovery to a combination of modern therapy treatments and Dickie’s fine constitution.

Can you avoid catching cold?
And if you do catch one is it possible to reduce its severity?
Oftentimes—YES.

It is now believed by outstanding members of the medical profession that colds and their complications are frequently produced by a combination of factors working together.

1. That an unseen virus, entering through the nose or mouth, probably starts many colds.

2. That the so-called "Secondary Invaders", a potentially troublesome group of bacteria, including germs of the pneumonia and streptococcus types, then can complicate a cold by staging a "mass invasion" of throat tissues.

3. That anything which lowers body resistance, such as cold feet, wet feet, fatigue, exposure to sudden temperature changes, may not only make the work of the virus easier but encourage the "mass invasion" of germs.

Tests Showed Fewer Colds

The time to strike a cold is at its very outset... to go after the surface germs before they go after you... to fight the "mass invasion" of the tissue before it becomes serious.

The ability of Listerine Antiseptic as a germ-killing agent needs no elaboration. Important to you, however, is the impressive record against colds made by Listerine Antiseptic in tests made over a 12-year period. Here is what this test data revealed:

That those who gargled Listerine Antiseptic twice a day had fewer colds and usually had milder colds, and fewer sore throats, than those who did not gargle with Listerine Antiseptic.

This, we believe, was due largely to Listerine Antiseptic's ability to attack germs on mouth and throat surfaces.

Gargle Early and Often

We would be the last to suggest that a Listerine Antiseptic gargle is infallibly a means of arresting an oncoming cold.

However, a Listerine Antiseptic gargle is one of the finest precautionary aids you can take. Its germ-killing action may help you overcome the infection in its early stages.

Before the Sun Goes Down

by Elizabeth Metzger Howard

He Knew the Whole Town's Secrets—Yet Hid a Burning Secret of His Own!

Doctor Dan Field knew everything that went on in Willowspring—the scandals and the love affairs, the hopes and sordid regrets. He served the town's royalty as well as the people across it. In the Mid-1820s, when the town of Willowspring was a thriving community, he would have been expected to know everything about the town's inhabitants. But he remained a mystery, and his secrets were always hidden away. The only person who knew the truth about his past was his wife, Odile. When she discovered the facts of life first-hand, she knew that the town was not as innocent as it appeared. She had to leave the town and its resident's secrets behind.

It was highly successful, he told them, while quietly laughing rumors that Nora Flynn had taken command of the yacht.

When it was over, we drove Dr. Flynn home and the following night Cal and Errol’s father, who is Professor of Zoology at Belfast University in Ireland, had a quiet dinner at the Edingtons’. A charming, natural and understanding man, we discovered. Above all else, he wants most that Errol and Nora, whom he adores, be happy together. “If only Hollywood will let them,” he says.

And to see the kindly professor with his little granddaughter, Dierdre, is really a treat. He regretted returning to Ireland without her.

Last Minute Round-up: Stirling Hayden, who displayed his preference for older, sophisticated women when he married Madeleine Carroll, has been showing interest in Ida Lupino, who seems to grow younger and prettier every day. Bette Davis will do no more screen work until after her baby is born in May. In fact, Hollywood will see very little of the actress who expects to make New Hampshire her residence for the next year. It was her serious illness due to nerves and overwork that prompted John Payne to insist his wife Gloria De Haven give up the screen—a request that led to a separation. But it didn’t last long. They’ve been back together again for another try. Why Columbia will seek a dramatic story for Rita Hayworth with her own life a living drama all made for screening, is beyond us. Mr. and Mrs. Bill Gargan are two happy-in-marriage people who take off for San Francisco or points east when Hollywood begins to wear thin. Saves their marriage and their tempers, they claim, and keeps alive that honeymoon feeling. Van Johnson gave up his cozy room with the fireplace and comfortable lounges at the Bel-Air Hotel to move downstairs. Annoying persons had grown too familiar with the location of his room and made life too uncomfortable for the actor—even throwing bottles at the windows. When Sylvia Sydney marries Carleton Alspach, she wins one of the town’s wits and best-liked persons. The friends of Rex Harrison frowned on his sophisticated nonchalance in housing two wives at once—the ex-Mrs. Harrison and the present one, Lilli Palmer. So the ex has gone home to England.

Word from Abroad: Tyrone Power writes that a heavy storm encountered between Panama and South America brought him incredible luck. In an emergency, he landed at Medellin, Colombia, where Tyrone claims to be one of the most beautiful sights of the trip. And you should hear him rave over the modern hotel and the food.

The buzzing roaring noise faded in and out carrying with it snatches of Turhan Bey's voice which was coming over the telephone wires from Honolulu. Outside of the fact that he sounded happy to be within telephoning distance we heard little, because of the bad connection, except that he's home soon. Perhaps Turhan and Lana may resume their old friendship but our bet is it will be just that—friendship.

A card from Joe, the headwaiter at Romanoff's, tells Cal to look for him back at his old beat soon. Joe has been in Genoa, Italy, visiting his father. It will be a pleasure to see his friendly smile and feel his warm greeting at Hollywood's favorite restaurant, once again.

Cocktails for Six: In a checked gingham dress, for all the world like those worn by cute third graders, Jane Russell entered the Beverly Hills cocktail lounge with five sailors in tow.

The three Tudela boys, Gabriel, Miguel and Alyandro of the famous Peruvian family, sat in an opposite booth with Cal and kept stealing glances at the group. We noticed they also stole peeks at Jane's rather plump figure (everyone has grown plump in Hollywood these days).

When they asked politely if she, this Miss Jane Russell, were happy, we could only shake our head no, for Jane is having marital difficulties with her husband Bob Waterfield. Jane is busy now trying to do something about the career Howard Hughes started and, incidentally, almost finished.

The Razor's Edge

The Razor's Edge
The merry-go-round breaks down—but Hollywood heart-pairing keeps right on going in circles

BY RUTH WATERBURY

Then it was Tony Martin and Rita Orson parted ways

Orson Welles and Dolores Del Rio

THEY were way off guard in Cupid's Hollywood office as the weekend of September sixth to ninth, 1946, approached.

There was nothing about that weekend to forecast the unusual. A round of parties was in the making, naturally. Elsa Maxwell was hostessing the largest of them, also naturally. The right people were all invited to the right places and the wrong people, presumably, to the wrong places and it looked as though a terrific time would be had by all.

Yet by Monday, the ninth, Cupid had sustained the worst beating he has ever taken in the film colony. And as for Tony Martin,* who's got that throb in his voice and that sweetness in his disposition and that rugged appeal in his profile—well, what happened to Tony was brutal. He absorbed two awful blows—but the (Continued on page 105)
A wizard hostess, guests on their wits—with five-and-ten-cent trappings for million-dollar laughs.

HOLLYWOOD loves a party. And I love to give parties in Hollywood. Best of all, however, I love the party I gave last month at Jack Warner's where the big house and gardens crown one of the Beverly Hills and are out of this world.

It was a costume party really, but with a new twist. Instead of coming in fancy dress the stars had to create their costumes before everyone's eyes. Most of them were designed strictly for laughs—and got them. A new manner of party, this. And one that anyone can give with the same hilarious success. For the paraphernalia I provided for the stars to bedeck and transform themselves came from the five and dime store.

My invitations read: Cocktails at 8:30. Dinner at 9:30.

Many did not arrive until the cocktail hour was over, proving once again how silly the stories are about Hollywood drinking itself to death. Actually
I have never known a cosmopolitan group more abstemious.

Millicent Rogers who came with Clark Gable instantly was a conversation piece. All the girls, even those happily married, have a faintly proprietary attitude about Clark and judge his girls rather critically. They said Millicent, who recently had been quite ill, was too thin. Too aloof also. I thought her as strangely beautiful as a Dali creation in her crepe dress, the color of faded roses, dramatized by her brilliant diamonds and sapphires.

Thanks to the wizardry of the lighting system with the lights cleverly concealed in trees and shrubs, the terrace and gardens appeared to be bathed in soft moonlight. Some couples strolled out there while others danced cheek to cheek on a dance floor surrounded by the many little dining tables.

The decorations were green and white. The tables were laid with dark green cloths and small candle-lit cen-cheesecloth and tinsel paper—and Oleg Cassini designing.
Result: A dream of a dress for beauteous Lana Turner terpieces of fern and gardenias. All sixty places were indicated by place cards. At a party last year I inaugurated the idea of seating buffet guests so the attractive, clever people couldn't gather in their own gay groups and leave less clever and attractive guests stranded. And now it's a Hollywood custom.

Cold soup or melon were served first at the long buffet table. Then came roast beef, roast ham, potatoes, vegetables, seafood newburg and corn souffle. A salad and cheeses followed. And then came great bombs of water ices and fruits. Champagne. And coffee.

Interestingly enough, black was the predominant dress color. Both Loretta Young, who came with her handsome husband, Tom Lewis, and Joan Fontaine, who came with her devoted bridegroom, Bill Dozier, were lovely in black lace. Judy Garland Minnelli's dress was black net. Claudette Colbert wore black with an overskirt of white embroidery. Roz Russell's dress was black chiffon. Irene Dunne wore black and white. And Lana

Joan Bennett wearing real diamond-encrusted glasses—with Joe Cotten and Darryl Zanuck
Turner, who grows so increasingly lovely that you scarcely can believe her, wore a black dress reminiscent of the ballet.

In striking contrast to these dryads in black there was Norma Shearer in stiff brocade of a blue that exactly matched her eyes. Anita Colby, Photoplay's beautiful beauty editor, wore dark brown crepe. Rita Hayworth's Grecian dress was white chiffon. And there was Joan Bennett who, gazing through her diamond encrusted spectacles, looked far more like a schoolgirl pretending to be grown up and sophisticated than Mrs. Walter Wanger, mistress of a great house and mother of three daughters.

We played The Game after dinner. But in a new manner. Instead of acting out a question, an appointed member of a team had to illustrate the quotation with drawings. David O. Selznick captained one team, Darryl Zanuck the other. Clark Gable, on David's (Continued on page 80)
"I know you will tell the truth, Louella," Van said, then spoke from his heart.

This is more than a story "about" Van Johnson. It is a look into his heart.

Never before has any reporter touched on the true relationship between Van and his mother—but more than that, I hope this story will reveal to you what has made this sandy-haired, freckled-faced idol what he is today—one of the finest and most unspoiled human beings I have ever met.

I'm saying all this with no feeling of bragging about a "scoop" although what I am about to reveal has never been told before. You just don't "scoop" a man's innermost feelings and brag about it, not even when he happens to be—well—Van Johnson.

"You have your job, Louella," he said, "and I know you will tell the truth and not a highly colored fable such as has been gossiped on the radio."

The scene of this conversation was an unusual one even for Hollywood where the unusual is the usual. Van was sitting in the easy chair in my room at the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles, his long legs stretched out in colorful pajamas covered by an equally colorful silk robe. We were both patients—Van convalescing from an operation and I building up my strength to face one.

Frankly, I was on a strict "no visitors" regimen but Van had managed to "convince" my nurses that I needed a little cheering up, so he had become a familiar figure in the elevator between his room on the seventh floor and mine on the eighth.

Every morning I got a little note from him along the lines of "Good morning, Duchess, your neighbor sends love and greetings," and then around orange-juice time in the afternoon Van, himself, a little shaky on his pins, would come a'calling. My attractive nurse, Margaret Collins, was the envy of the entire hospital because she had to escort him on these expeditions! Mary Ivy, my night nurse, said it would happen to the day nurse.

During those talks I think I discovered a Van Johnson I might never have known if we hadn't been in the same invalids' boat. You get to know a person awfully well when you are sharing worry—and pain. There's time to think and talk about even the closed chapters in your life.

And that is how it happened that, for the first time, Van spoke of his mother to me. He knew that she had been to call on me some months previous although I had never printed one word of our conversation. Mrs. Loretta Newman had come to ask me to arrange an interview between her and her world-famous son.

"I wouldn't have blamed you for printing that my mother came to you," Van said, his young face suddenly serious, "but I love you for not doing it. (Continued on page 111)
All American Ingrid—next starred in "Arch of Triumph"
She's as unexpected as a hurricane, as natural as spring water . . .

Ingrid, of the disturbing contrasts

A T PERINO'S well-known bar in Los Angeles, Ingrid Bergman sat sipping something mild one evening when a friendly lady who had not been sipping something mild suddenly sat down at her table.

"Want to tell you something, dearie," said the friendly lady. "I've been watching you. You laugh too much. If you didn't laugh so much, you'd look exactly like Ingrid Bergman."

Ingrid exited laughing—and unrecognized.

Astounding as it may seem, Ingrid is seldom recognized. This delights her. She goes shopping anywhere, without posing in dark glasses. She often buys groceries at the famous Farmer's Market, wandering happily and anonymously among the vegetable bins. She takes long walks through Beverly Hills with seldom a stop for autograph hounds, because the autograph hounds don't often know her either. Of all the stars in Hollywood, Ingrid Bergman is probably the last to seek special privilege. She even carries this to the naive extreme of trying to make hotel reservations under the name of Mrs. Peter Lindstrom,

But if Ingrid has been unable to learn how to act like a movie star after seven years in Hollywood, (Cont'd on page 107)
Appeal leader: Peter Lawford, starred in "My Brother Talks to Horses"
IT CHEERS me to report that in this turbulent, perplexed and discontented universe there exists one gay young man with a whirlpool haircut and a genuine broad A to whom life is neither a headache nor a pain in the neck. On the contrary, it is a jar of milk and honey, a Lehar waltz, an April dream, a tinsel tree, a moonlight swim, a two-inch steak. It is fireworks on the Seine, silk sails on the Nile, vodka on the Volga. His existence on this planet is un wrinkled and unblemished, every step on the upgrade, every day on the upbeat. Those twin bambinos Fame and Fortune arrived on his doorstep some time ago and are getting plumper and prettier every day. Work is a pleasure, and the road ahead is as smooth as a satin ribbon.

The name of this joyous creature is Peter Lawford. If you are delighted by swains who see their psychiatrists twice a week, he is not for you. If you go for the brooding type, skip this lad. And if you like people who have Been Through The Mill and Suffered, you will hate him, because quite obviously the only thing he has been through that even faintly resembles a mill is the Tunnel of Love.

I don't know anyone who enjoys life more thoroughly than Peter does, and I think he has always been this way; it is not just a product of his Hollywood success. All the years up to now have been as good as he could ask for, and some of them, childhood years, were crammed with (Continued on page 82)
Entree exotic: Gene Tierney, in personal chapeau, turns heads as she does in "The Razor's Edge"
Mrs. Oleg Cassini Loewski—licensed a countess but never caught practicing—has slim pale Kashmiri hands tipped sang de boeuf, roses of Rubaiyat mouth, eyes slanted Arabic and the languid sinuosity of a Siamese kitten.

“My wife has the drive to command an empire!” refutes Oleg. “Executive power to organize the affairs of the world!”

“The job is wide open,” says a world-weary diplomat, swigging restoratives at the bar in Superwoman’s new Beverly shebang where diplomats buzz in happier swarms than in the Luxembourg palace. “Does she command the home?”

“No,” says Oleg, sharp as the cavalryman he was in wartime. “She makes most of the decisions—I clocked 350 one day before fatigue overtook me. I govern policy. Departments requiring tact and good taste belong to women. Leadership, no.”

Mrs. Cassini dropped her career for two years when her husband went to Ft. Riley, put off lipstick, put on apron and sunbonnet of Kansas housewife.

“I confess we suffered some tension,” says Oleg. “Our income was small. We lived in a three-room house. Gene had little experience but she became an excellent housewife because she is methodical. She stuck the cook book on a shelf in front of her nose and followed its instructions meticulously.”

A BID to be the house guest of Patricia Knight and Cornel Wilde is a direct invitation to come and share a dream. A dream come true, that is, because practically anyone who knows this pair knows that to them, success, fortune and a home of their own, are all new and shining things.

The feeling that you've joined a celebration begins the moment Patricia picks you up in her new car. The car is a spanking red-fendered town and country, the girl's a stunning blonde and there's a bright Saturday afternoon sun striking sparks off both. You climb in feeling almost as proud as Punch (the coal-black French poodle on the front seat), and are off in a cloud of stardust. Your conversation, as a matter of course, is about the vehicle you are riding in. This year of '46, owning a town and country model has become the Hollywoodian's symbol of prosperity:

"You can imagine how many things it symbolized for us both when Cornel drove up to the door and said, 'Here, Pat—it's yours!' We're still tingling about it. The other day a friend asked us, 'Did you have to wait long to get it?' 'Not too long—' Cornel told him, 'Only about thirty years!'"

Speaking of dream-stuff, Benedict Canyon is the perfect driveway to it. Winding curves (Continued on page 76)
That Romantic Look

Make it a special moment under the mistletoe, with the man of the hour looking at a breathtakingly lovely you

BY ANITA COLBY
Photoplay's Beauty Editor and Feminine Director of Selznick Studios

Soon it will be Christmas again.
Tulle ribbon will adorn fragile tissue-paper packages, department store Santa Clauses will give assurance to little children, tinsel stars will hang on the top-most branches of evergreen.

A sentimental season, Christmas. There'll be cards from boys you haven't seen since they went overseas with "Remember me" written across them. There'll be cards from boys you met during the past few months who you didn't think remembered. And these cards, like the holiday parties and the office and school gatherings and the church festivals which celebrate Yuletide, will be an invitation to romance.

Will you meet this invitation halfway— with a romantic look? Will you be like the ideal the boys carried in their hearts when they were overseas, a girl softly feminine, wistful and gay?

It's born of wholesomeness and naturalness, the romantic look. It's the healthy aura of white teeth, clear eyes, shining hair and an alive skin. It's the vitality and freshness that belongs especially to American women.

Jeanne Crain has this look. She typifies what a sophisticated man named John Erskine meant recently when he said, "Nature is what a woman is born with and art is the difference she makes in it."

Jeanne's eyes are clear and (Continued on page 127)

A new kind of idol, this Mason, of the sinister charm and normal outlook

BY THYRA SAMTER WINSLOW

JAMES MASON does not need or like many people—and pretends to like and need them even less than he does. He doesn’t care in the slightest whether he’s seen in the best places. On the other hand, he doesn’t go out of his way to avoid notice. He is quite content to work hard, to live comfortably and well.

He’s as unlike the average Hollywood star as it is possible to imagine. Instead of the self-made boy, who found stardom just a steppingstone to culture, and who learned about books and music and art after he’d made money, Mason attended Marlborough and Cambridge before he turned to acting.

Meeting him face to face you realize he is far more handsome than his pictures indicate. He’s of medium height, his dark eyes have a brooding quality and his face is unusually mobile, changing from gravity to whimsy and to laughter in no-time at all. Yet on the whole, you’d find him serious. He’s studious, rather than light, and a scholar far more than a playboy.

Although the Masons have the reputation for being hard to get at, they are, as a matter of fact, extremely easy to know. They are a likable and clever and agreeable young couple, perfect host and hostess, great fun. (Continued on page 100) living is strictly Yankee style

By JERRY ASHER

Here's a pensive new portrait hanging over the fireplace in the oak-paneled living room of Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan. It was painted by the celebrated Paul Clemens, depicting Jane sans make-up, as the simple-costumed Ma Baxter, a dramatic character she plays to perfection in "The Yearling." Shortly after Captain Reagan became a civilian he issued his last order. One tiny worry wrinkle out of Jane and down will come the portrait and up will go the new family slogan, framed, gold-lettered and reading, "No Ulcers!"

By way of explanation, Ronnie says, "Janie does a lot of covering up. You'd never think she's the worrying kind. But she's been knocking her-sel f out worrying for years. She gets hurt too.
But instead of showing it, she keeps it to herself and it eats away inside.

"She's been at Warner's ten years. She's been a good sport, taken anything and everything. As a result, she's sometimes been taken for granted, never really had the deserved breaks. It took 'The Lost Weekend' and 'The Yearling' to prove she was capable of doing important things.

Jane’s had to carry the bulk of the burden. There was our home to run. Responsibilities assumed before the war that still had to be met. Altogether it’s been too much for one person.

“The doctor said she’d have to relax, take things easier, or she would have an ulcer. I think I’ve convinced her that she no longer has to beat her brains out. If things don’t go right, she can just stay home, redo the house and all the other things she’s wanted to do for a long time. She’s still inclined to worry. Then I remind her—wanna get an ulcer? Right away she snaps out of it.”

Ronnie too is a bit of a worrier. When he gets going, it’s Jane’s turn to remind him of the ulcer department. Usually his interests are less professional and (Continued on page 120)
Hands—that will work for a brave new world. Tyrone, a great man in the making

BY MARGARET MAMLOK

If I were asked to suggest a hand expressive of our post-war hopes for a better world, I would without hesitation choose the wonderfully moulded, strong hands of Tyrone Power. They are the hands of a fine artist whose mind and heart have been opened by thought and experience to the world in which he lives. They are hands shaped by heritage to the actor’s art, trained to precision by war and fitted by extraordinary mental and physical development to work with other young hands in building a brave, new world.

As Tyrone Power sat across the table from me, I studied his intense, handsome face, then returned to the hands which had told me so much at almost a glance.

“How unusual in an actor,” I thought to myself. For the second time I examined features of his hand which are more often to be found in doctors and ministers than in actors. But there, they were—the full Mount of Venus, the well-developed Mount and finger of Jupiter and the fine-curved, deep-reaching head line. In combination they reveal the heart which beats for mankind and the mind which reaches out to share the sufferings of others. Men who are guided by selfless principles and are unconsciously motivated by the compulsion to move forward with others in the evolutionary process of life have these collective feelings.
I could not resist shaking my head in unbelief. "But this can't be," I said. "You are the first actor I have ever met who is not egocentric. Talk about the needle in the haystack. I think I've found the needle."

Earlier, we had talked of his exacting and difficult role of Larry Darrell in Somerset Maugham's "The Razor's Edge." Maugham's portrait of the God-searching Larry is magnificent, but the thousands of readers of the book will remember that the author for the most part presented Larry through the eyes of other characters. It is Tyrone's herculean task to bring Larry Darrell and his spiritual search for the truth to life in a more direct and personal way.
I had listened with great interest to Tyrone's account of his preparation for the role: Talking to men who had embraced the Indian philosophy (Continued on page 114)
ESTHER WILLIAMS literally grew up in the water. The waves were her earliest playmates. Steadfastly she turned her face away from such childish temptations as sand castles and concentrated on her swimming.

Result: Before she'd hardly grown up, she was a record-breaking mermaid.

She made her screen debut in "Andy Hardy's Double Life," followed that with such hits as "Bathing Beauty," "Thrill of a Romance," "Easy to Wed."

Her latest is the colorful bullfighter picture made in Mexico, "Fiesta."

So you see Esther's a star on land as well as in water!

PHOTOLIFE OF ESTHER WILLIAMS

BY LYNN PERKINS
At fifteen, coaches predicted that the girl who, at age eight, earned her swimming lessons counting towels would be a champion in four years.

"In two years," Esther said—and won the Women's Nationals at Des Moines, Iowa. But mermaids can't eat medals, so Esther turned to modeling.

Water baby Esther at two and a half was already familiar with sand and surf of the beach at Santa Monica where she played with brother David, her four-year-old pal.
Film offers came. M-G-M was most persistent, phoned for six months, finally wired Esther's terms—a chance to study before facing the lens.

Showman Billy Rose, planning his Aquacade at the San Francisco World's Fair, made such an attractive offer that Esther turned professional and was star of the greatest water show in the world.

Then came romance. Esther took time out to marry her sweetheart, Dr. Leonard Kovner. They both tried hard, but marriage was not meant for them, so they separated.
X marks Esther! It's her birthday and the Williams clan has gathered to celebrate! Esther's dream has been to have a family of her own—with the kind of home she had. One evening she was selling cigarettes at a Jewish Old Age Benefit...

And now just what she's always dreamed of! Esther happily picks out wallpaper for the nursery of the first little Gage, due some time this winter. Esther Williams, swimmer, star, is a family woman first!

...and she was introduced to handsome Army Sgt. Ben Gage. Love came swiftly—there was an evening wedding in Hollywood and a midnight plane to Mexico City.
His petite wife, Marie, runs their home happily alone whenever she can, Marie corners John to help in fixing their new house, which they call their “little gray home in the west”—a pride and joy after endless evictions.

Marie’s the lovely distraction from writing, which John still does now and then.

Six-foot blond sensation John Lund, who knows all about moving, both around—and up.
JOHN LUND and his petite wife Marie stepped gingerly down the imposing stairs of the mansion, one room and bath of which they called home. It didn't bother them that for their sumptuous crackerbox they paid the neat sum of $275 a month—with no kitchen privileges, naturally. In fact they considered themselves lucky to have a roof over their heads in the Hollywood housing shortage, particularly after the trail of evictions that lay behind them.

What was of vastly more concern to them was the look on their elegant landlady's face as she regarded with a cold eye the descent down the stairs of her "paying guests." Not until they reached the last step did she speak.

"Eloise"—it was her custom to refer to herself in the third person, contriving thereby to convey a flavor of royalty—"is displeased with her tenants today."

John and Marie exchanged quick glances that said, "Is she kidding?"

Aloud John said, "How so?"

"You broke my beautiful ash tray and Eloise doesn't like that." Nor did she like the Lunds, it developed rapidly; in fact, they might consider their "guest privileges" as having expired then (Continued on page 85)

The Lunds live modestly and enjoy each other extravagantly. John, who has done many and varied jobs, appears next in "Perils of Pauline"

Trailing stars and crews to deserts, islands, mountains and wheat fields—for this "on location" film-making fun

BY ELAINE ST. JOHNS

The "combine" in "The Big Haircut" is wheat and Alan Ladd Go Places

It isn't being done with mirrors anymore. It isn't a miniature nor a painted backdrop. It's the real McCoy. Now, with the war behind us, Hollywood is again on the move.

The National Parks of Utah, Arizona, Canada, the wheat fields of the Fresno valley, sleepy little Mackinac Island, are teeming with cameras and fantastic looking things called “booms” and “dollys.” You are as apt to find Alan Ladd popping up out of a wheat field several hundred miles from Hollywood as you are to meet Bing Crosby plodding melodiously across an ice field in the Canadian Alps.

A bewildered traveler in a Wyoming car, coming suddenly upon a town that wasn’t anywhere on his map, got out to look it over. Completely puzzled he finally cornered a harassed workman. (Continued on page 117)
I don't think teen-agers should marry. Most children today live at home. Their parents shoulder all the responsibilities. The children are sheltered and are not used to coping with problems. Of course, young boys and girls earning their own way can take on the responsibilities, but why marry in your teens anyway? The fun just begins when you're in those wonderful years. I don't mean that teen-agers aren't emotionally solid, but I don't see any reason to tie yourself down. There's too much to do and see in the years ahead. There's too much of a chance that if a girl marries in her teens, she's going to want to break the ties that bind sooner or later so she can have some of the freedom she innately feels she needs.

I have a friend of eighteen who is a very shy person. He's seldom at ease with any girl. Recently, he met a girl he liked and who understood him. The change in the boy was miraculous. I feel this boy should get married because he needs that closeness, that understanding. If he should ever lose her, I am sure he'll be unhappy the rest of his life. In such a case as this, I think a teen-ager should marry. But only in that kind of situation. I think kids in their teens, as a general rule, should wait. There is such a great difference in mental development from the time a boy or a girl is under the care of his parents to the time he's on his own. Teen-agers aren't developed mentally enough to take on marriage—and being one myself, I think I know what I'm talking about.

Certainly teen-agers should marry if they're in love. I don't think age makes any difference at all. If you're sure you've met the right person and have weighed all possible obstacles to happiness, it doesn't matter if you're eighteen, twenty-eight, or forty. Nor do I believe that a girl—or a boy—should set any special time for marriage. He or she shouldn't say, "I will or I won't marry when I'm twenty-four." All this doesn't imply I favor a girl of sixteen or seventeen marrying her first date. Definitely not! But if she has good common sense and intelligence and is sure of her feelings, then I say: Go ahead!
young love should heed the heart and head for the altar

Frank Latimore,
in "The Razor's Edge"
I don't think teen-agers should marry, primarily because no boy in his teens, except in very rare cases, can have the security that marriage demands. Without security, a couple has to spend their time wondering where their next meal is coming from and where they're going to live—and under such a stress, happiness cannot exist. In addition, the average teen-ager changes his ideas from time to time. A person he may like at seventeen or eighteen might be entirely different from the kind of person he'd be interested in at twenty-five. Remember: The test of time has never hurt any two people really in love. If the test does hurt a romance, there is consolation in the knowledge that the marriage wouldn't have worked either.

Diana Lynn,
starred in "Easy Come, Easy Go"
If a boy or a girl is sure the stardust is out of his or her eyes and that there's no doubt of the love, marriage is okay for teen-agers. While I definitely do not think a girl should marry her first date, I think there are real advantages to young marriages. You have more enthusiasm for things. Your minds aren't so definitely set in one pattern that you can't change and work out problems that come up. Kids who marry young can stay young with their children—and can understand their children's problems easier. But I do not think a young couple should have any additions to the family for the first two years of marriage. They need that time to get acquainted and to smooth out the rough edges.

Glenn Ford, star of "Gallant Journey"
Why not? If a man is old enough to go into uniform and have an active part in shaping the future of the world, he's certainly mature enough to make a success of marriage. I believe that this generation's teen-agers are mentally older than their actual ages. This is probably due to their having shoulered adult responsibilities when the war interrupted their normal lives. Our young men and women have had the last four years to stand on their feet, and I think we'll find that the majority of them who have married have chosen their respective spouses with foresight and sincerity.

YOUR PROBLEMS ANSWERED
BY CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Claudette Colbert, starred in "The Egg and I"

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a girl of nineteen. My father died when I was small and my mother, who is forty, plans to be married again soon. When my mother first introduced me to my prospective stepfather I know that I was quite rude, and I have found it impossible to get along peaceably with him since. I simply cannot endure the thought of this man living in our home. I can scarcely do my work at the office because I am so miserable and nervous and have been crying myself to sleep every night.

How can I adjust myself to this situation? Gladys R.

Undoubtedly, you are looking forward with happy anticipation to the time when you will meet a man you love and marry him.

When that happens, you intend, of course, to make a home for him. You might well marry an engineer and move to the Panama Canal or to Alaska. You might marry an attorney whose company would station him in Honolulu or Havana.

When that happens, your mother will be left alone. Unless you have been utterly alone in your lifetime you cannot imagine the terrors that such a condition might hold for a woman who has always been accustomed to the comradeship of other people.

I am afraid that in your attitude there is nothing but selfishness and a blind unwillingness to see this situation from your mother's viewpoint. Since you love your mother, I am sure, you must want for her the happiness that she wants for herself.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I want to become an airline hostess, but I don't have any idea of what the requirements are. I am eager to find out, because I want to know what course to take up in high school and college.

Some of my friends say that I must be a nurse in order to become an airline hostess. Do you know if that is true or not?

Dolores J.

Since you are living in Chicago, your problem is quite simple. Some Saturday make it your business to visit each of the major airline offices, Pan American, American Airlines, TWA and Eastern Airlines. Ask to talk to the personnel manager and explain to that official exactly what you plan to do and ask his advice.

Perhaps, in time to come, I may fly on a plane on which you are serving. If I do, be sure to remind me of this letter.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

A year ago my sister met a man who was in service. After a six-month courtship, she married him. Now he is out of the Army, and because of the housing situation, they are living with us.

During the two months he has been home, he has made no effort to find work, nor has he even discussed this matter. There is nothing wrong with him physically or mentally. He is only taking advantage of us because he knows my father is well-to-do.

On top of all this, I know positively that he does not love my sister. He is quite handsome and has a winning personality; because of these attributes he is quite popular and takes advantage of the fact by flirting in front of my sister.

He has told me recently that he loves me, and every time we are alone he tries to make love to me. At first I tried to avoid him, but of late I find that I am becoming infatuated. What should I do?

Margo K.

You should give yourself the lecture of your life. Your sister is entitled to loyalty, at least in her own home and from her closest relatives.

Simply because your sister has married a cad gives you no excuse for breaking her heart a second time.

Bear this in mind: If you should make your life's most hideous mistake and encourage this man in any way, you will have lost all things most valuable to a woman: Your own self-respect, the devotion of your family, the admiration of your friends.

Even if you find it necessary to move out of your home, you should do it in order to remain blameless in this situation.

Claudette Colbert

Which plaid should "chubby" pick?
- A kingsize design
- A petite pattern
- Neither

Even if you’re a plumpish pigeon, you, too, can wear plaids. But whether jumbo or tiny patterns intrigue you—pick neither. A medium-size plaid is your best bet. And speaking of sizes, here’s a thought for certain times: Only Kotex has 3 sizes, for different women, different days—Regular, Junior, Super Kotex. So you can choose the size that’s best for you. What’s more, every Kotex napkin contains a deodorant—to help you stay dainty.

For lip-appeal plus, should you—
- Wear a sultry shade
- Use a lip brush
- Revise the shape of your mouth

If you’d have lush-looking lips—know your pucker-paint technique. Choose a true red; on you it looks better than sultry, tiger-woman shades. And don’t try to re-shape your mouth! Carefully following its contour with a lip brush can give you lip-appeal plus; added self-assurance. Extra poise on problem days means—Kotex. Because, for extra protection, Kotex has an exclusive safety center to keep you super-confident!

Should you agree to meet your "squire"?
- If it’s more practical
- To show you’re not stuffy
- Nay, nay, never!

That squire’s a square who doesn’t call for his gal! Unless there’s a good reason. For instance, on a theatre date—if you live miles out and he works late, it’s more practical to meet. For meeting "your public" on trying days, it’s practical to choose Kotex. Because the flat tapered ends of Kotex free you from tell-tale outline cares. You get that high octane kind of confidence with Kotex!

When a blind date’s disappointing, would you—
- Back out gracefully
- Make like a martyr
- Grin and bear it

Your blind date’s gruesome? Grin and bear it! Even stupor-man has feelings. Besides, he probably has friends . . . dream-beam material you’ll get to know, in time. So stay in the picture; whether it’s dancing, bowling or whatever. And on calendar days let Kotex keep you comfortable, with out-of-this-world softness that lasts because Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. Yes, with Kotex you can keep smiling!

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins

IT was impossible for me to know, when my attention was first directed to Sister Elizabeth Kenny through a magazine article in 1941, that the next five years would find me becoming one of her most ardent champions.

I have always been interested in efforts to help crippled children. After reading about the difficulties encountered by Sister Kenny in her attempts to demonstrate her methods to the medical profession, I felt that here was a possible chance for me to contribute some help. I visited the Kenny Institute in Minneapolis, met Sister, and saw with my own eyes the wonderful strides she was making toward effecting cures in infantile paralysis victims.

As I grew more familiar with Sister Kenny and her crusade, I saw dramatic possibilities in her story. I hounded a dozen top producers and movie executives to put her biography on film. This went on for four years, until finally RKO Radio consented to make the picture with Dudley Nichols as writer, producer, and director.

Sister Kenny has provided material for endless newspaper columns, but few reporters have found the humorous side of her nature. One day when Sister visited me at RKO, where we were filming "Sister Kenny," she asked if we might make a tour of the lot. We strolled onto one set, a Frances Langford musical, where a line of chorus cuties was rehearsing a number. The gals were rather scantily clad and I wondered what Sister's reaction would be. She watched them for a moment, then turned to me with a twinkle in her eye.

"They're all very pretty," she said, "but that one over there — her left gastrocnemius is overdeveloped!"

I found out later that the gastrocnemius is a muscle in the leg!

Rosalind Russell's personal admiration and friendship for Sister Kenny come to life in the timely and moving film, "Sister Kenny"

AL JOLSON: America's greatest minstrel man, saluted in Columbia's thrilling musical biography, "The Jolson Story," appropriately celebrates the tribute with a brand new Decca album, which happily includes such Jolson songs as "Mammy," "Swanee" and "April Showers." A collector's item to treasure.

DUEL IN THE SUN: An important motion picture, such as this David O. Selznick production starring Jennifer Jones, Gregory Peck and other luminaries, should have an important musical score. The nation's record makers believe that it has and have prepared an avalanche of groovings. Out first is a new Victor album capturing the full thematic score. If you prefer individual performances, try Martha Tilson's Capitol caroling of "Gotta Get Me Somebody to Love" or Orrin Tucker's dance tempo treatment of the same tune (Musicraft).

LOUANNE HOGAN: A new recording artist is this new Twentieth-Century-Fox starlet who has been busy behind scenes voice dubbing for such favorites as Jeanne Crain. On her own she reveals a distinctive style, singing Vernon Duke's neglected ballad "Autumn in New York" and Jerome Kern's ever-lovely "Look for the Silver Lining" (Musicraft).

THE SHOCKING MISS PILGRIM: The forthcoming Betty Grable Twentieth-Century-Fox musical contains a unique chapter in movie music. The score is based on unfinished compositions by the late George Gershwin. With the help of a sympathetic arranger and lyricist brother Ira, the songs have been completed. Jane Froman (Majestic) and Margaret Whiting (Capitol) treat "For You, for Me" reverently, while Vaughn Monroe (Victor) couples the lively "Aren't You Kind of Glad We Did?" and "Changing My Tune."

BETTY HUTTON: Paramount's personable powerhouse steps out gaily with a new Victor platter ably abetted by Joe Lilley's orchestra. The tunes are "Walking Away with My Heart" and "What Did You Put in That Kiss?" Good listening.

THREE LITTLE GIRLS IN BLUE: Two more top-drawer tunes from this Twentieth-Century-Fox musical click. "On the Boardwalk at Atlantic City!" is a period piece of bloomer bathing beauties while "You Make Me Feel So Young" is a timeless expression. The Charioteers (Columbia) wrap up both harmoniously.

TO EACH HIS OWN: What well may be the song hit of the year is this song based on the Paramount drama. Two more fine interpretations have just been waxed, one by Eddy Howard (Majestic), the other by The Ink Spots (Decca). Tony Martin's original recording is still the standout.

THRILL OF BRAZIL: Columbia's modest little music comedy has a winner in "A Man Is a Brother to a Mule"—especially the way The Andrews Sisters swing it (Decca) with Eddy Howard's rhythm group for assistance.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: A twin triumph is Artur Rubinstein playing Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, Opus 18 with the NBC Symphony supporting the distinguished pianist. Just as a reminder—Rubinstein plays these magnificently in the film, "I'll Always Love You" (Victor) . . . More Rachmaninoff is found in the new Columbia album of mezzo soprano Jennie Tourel . . . The Boston Symphony with Serg Kouessevitzky on the podium plays a brilliantly recorded performance of Tschaikowsky's familiar Symphony No. 5 in E Minor, Opus 64 (Victor) . . . The Russian composer's ever-welcome Nutcracker Suite gets a new airing by the New York Philharmonic with Artur Rodzinski conducting (Columbia).

If You Were the House Guest of the Cornelia Wildes

(Continued from page 47) through emerald- alaos, homes like architects' jewels in shrubbery settings, and then suddenly, you've made a slight twist up a short, deeper canyon cut and arrived at the swinging gate of the Country House. "Actually, Country House was built for Norma Talmadge and has had a couple of other owners, but it's not hard to imagine Patricia and Cornel, coming upon it for the first time, and know, to be the answer to their own Wildes-hope's."

First, a driveway flanked by young eucalyptus and feathery pepper trees, past a gate, reading, "Cornell. The Blind Hill is a pale, and then all at once, the house itself, white and rambling and friendly. There's a weathered shake roof, and an unstudied use of timber and red brick for trim. Vines grow over the walls, over the roof and spill out of one of the chimneys so thickly that the roof requires a periodical "weeding" and ridding of swallows' nests.

IN THE background, the hollowed-out canyon walls rise gently, like the sides of a cup. Here the eucalyptus are tall and venerable, their hoary white trunks picturesquely arched and potted entire. Agates are two At their feet is a large square of yard enclosed with a split rail fence—Punch's own play yard, undoubtedly a dog's idea of heaven. At the very bottom of the cup is a turquoise-walled swan has managed to achieve one "Lucky for us—" says Patricia. "It was all ready and waiting for us—but if there hadn't been a pool I guess Cornel would have dug one. He's in it every chance he gets."

In confirmation, there's a shouted "Hey—hello!" from the springboard. A hearty but short greeting, because the main room of the house is busy, cutting an air through the air and accomplishing the inevitable splash. Hardly has he hit the water than Punch is making a black streak out of the car and in the same direction. Applying his own kind of four-wheel brakes, the dog stops short at the very edge of the pool, crouches, and tentatively paws at a floating rubber ball. The pawning becomes desperate in a minute, because his master is playfully making the ball seem within reach. It is an old game between them, ending only when Punch over-reaches himself and falls into the pool.

"You next—" yells Cornel, and for a moment, with Old Sol scouring the back of your neck, you think you don't care if you do. "Nothing like it—" urges your host. As the dog reaches a high dive, feu for the wavy features I'd been shooting "The Homestretch" out at Santa Anita all week. That sun never quit for a minute—and me wearing a collar, tie and double-breasted blue serge and the cuts all there. It is to through the Walls in celebration of this weekend release. It looks like fun, except for the fact that the bright blue and red couches in front of the bath-house are completely tempting. Patricia has made a quick change into a jersey swimsuit—and that settles it. There may be a handsomer sight than this mahogany tanned pair in their white swim toggs, but you don't want to keep it. You just stretch comfortably on the spectator's bench, and watch . . .

Later, when Cornel is getting the last rays of the now disappearing sun on his browned back, he newly engaged. "The couch, of woven straw and with a pagoda-like canopy, might be Chinese in origin. "Its greatest virtue," Cornel explains, "is therein to make him feel like a gentleman. One's always bursting out with Where in thunder did you get that?"

SATURDAY night with Patricia and Cornel is spent in “do as you please” fashion. Coffee in study—a session of pool in the game room for those who want it—a lot of laughter and jibing and conversation. Jimmy and Patricia trade laughs and memories of those days when they road-showed, and ran for trains between one-night stands, and invariably wound up in New York too broke to pay their hotel room rent. And then, just about yawn-time, comes the knotty point of the evening.

“Do you mind if I unwrap it, Cornel?” Patricia asks wistfully. “I simply can’t go to bed until I do.”

It’s a large flat package which has rested on the bar for hours, at the price of Heaven—knows how much of Patricia’s restraint. Inside the paper is a flannel bag almost large and luxurious enough to make a jacket for the hostess. And inside is a silver tray, so lovely and durate pride and concern as he polishes an imaginary speck off the hood with the sleeve of his sport-shirt. “Be careful,” calls his wife, leaning out of the window, “how you treat my automobile!”

You ride with them out to Malibu—and Punch. And on the way only five near-accidents will occur when a bobby-soxer or a lady tourist yells, “Gee, look—Cornel Wilde!” and narrowly misses a traffic light. You’ll spend a long, lazy day in the sand and salt-air—eating your way through Clare’s picnic basket—watching Patricia acquire a lovely teakwood shade to contrast with her bright, blowing hair—and listening to Cornel explain why he’s decided to postpone his under-water fishing until another Sunday.

“Does it every time—” laughs his wife. “Load all that equipment into the car, goggles and spears and rubber fins, and then says ‘Malibu’s too rough, we shoul have tried Laguna. Now, next week’—"

Well, okay, you think—but any week it’s a happy and handsome experience, this guest-ing with Mr. and Mrs. Wilde! The End

(Continued from page 37) team, had to make a drawing to represent, “Hark, hark, the lark!” With a heavy black crayon in his hand he bent over the large sheet of white paper as intently as the members of Darryl’s opposing team bent over his shoulders. First he drew a bird. Then he drew a woman with her hand cupped over her ear. Then he lifted two capital H’s followed by long dashes.

The guessing was fast and furious. "Hozanna, Hozanna," suggested some one concentrating upon the letters only. "Give her the bird," suggested a wit. "Listen to the mocking bird," some one else suggested. Then, suddenly, Judy Garland had it. "Hark, hark the lark!" she cried. Whereupon, autographically, she bent over the artist who must execute with large black crayon and large white paper the quotation chosen by the Zanuck team.

Judy, incidentally, won a brooch; a little gold hearken, with tiny rubies, for her skill in the game. And Darryl Zanuck won the captain’s prize of a wrist watch. Darryl could buy himself the most magnificent watch in the world, but, keen about winning games, he was as delighted as a child.

CHILDS BOYER was there too with his pretty wife, Pat Paterson. Louella Parsons with her "Docile" Martin, Gary Coopy and his lovely "Rocky." Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Gardiner—I never can decide whether he is more handsome or Sonja Henie, Oleg Cassini, alone—because Gene Tierney was visiting her family in the East, Edmund Goulding the brilliant playwright and director who’s just completed Darryl Zanuck’s production of Somerset Maugham’s, "The Razor’s Edge" with Ty Power and Gene Tierney. Ethel Barrymore, very regal, The Rex Harrison, The Joe Cottens, Merle O’beron and Lucien Balland. Colie Porter, Jennifer Jones, Joan Crawford, Sir Charles Mendl, Jack Warner, of course, the host, and Darryl Bergen with his lovely Frances and Charlie McCarthy.

Charlies’s shy jabs contributed much to the evening’s fun. Edgar whispered something in Charlie’s ear. "What did you say?" Charlie replied, pettishly, "Pull Elas’s leg!" While Bergen, I couldn’t even sit! Certainly she removed it then, explaining, "I’m going to have a dress just like it. I’ll keep this for the pattern!"

Loretta Young, wearing a cooker cap, clocks and yellow cheesecloth with the chic with which she wears anything she puts on became a beautiful oriental princess.

It went, with the costumes concocted and worn with such imagination, skill and humor that it was difficult to award prizes. After much laughing and serious discussion Irene and Roz received the best-groomed earrings with little pearls—and Vincente Minnelli and Eddie Goulding received the men’s prizes, gold cuff links.

In the bazaar, our host, won a prize too—for his old-fashioned tap dance reminiscent of an act he did in vaudeville thirty years ago. And he couldn’t have been more pleased if he had broken the bank at the Crystal Tea Room.

At twelve the coffee bar opened with coffee, milk and great platters of sandwiches. At two, breakfast was served, cooked by our guests’ hungry eyes. But still many lingered. It was five o’clock by David Selznick’s watch as we sat side by side, consuming scrambled eggs, bacon, toast and coffee. We danced, dined, played, and laughed the whole night through.

(Continued from page 43) more flavor and fascination than the run-of-the-mill man dares to dream of over a counterful of travel folders. From the bazaars of Calcutta to the hamburger stands of Beverly Hills. From Shanghai to stardom. Tahiti to Jennifer Jones.

The last time I saw Peter we lunched at "21" and over his very American and very actory scrambled eggs—or so it seems to me, because I have a theory that more actors eat scrambled eggs for lunch than any other class of people—he told me that of all the places in the world the one to which he most wanted to return was Tahiti. In the five years during which he and his mother and father toured the world on their own time, stopping for as long as they wanted any place they liked (and isn't that everybody's dream of the way to see the world?) they lingered for five months in Tahiti.

"That's the life," Peter said, drawing a deep breath. "You have a little cottage on the Blue Lagoon, and it really is blue, and the sand is black—very chic, that black sand, you'd have loved it—and the water is so clear you can see the coral underneath. I had my own canoe and I lived on the water. It was a boy's Paradise..."

If he got the outdoor habit early and it sticks with him. Even now he spends as much time on the sands of Santa Monica and in the waves of the Pacific as his working hours permit. "I'm a beach boy," he says.

Of course with Peter work is a kind of pleasure, too, because he loves to act; you can tell that by the way he unconsciously goes into mimicry when he's telling a story or reciting a verse in a Broadway play or talking about a friend. He becomes a taxi driver or a drunk in an all-night coffee pot; he makes you suddenly see Judy Holliday in the second act of "Born Yesterday." Once when he was telling me about a phone call he got from Evie Wynn I had to burst out laughing, and before the punch line.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Why are you laughing?"

"Because you sounded just like Evie," I said.

He has more humor in him than most actors and most Englishmen. His slang is plentiful, picturesque and so up-to-date he must invent half of it himself; his eyes glint with laughter and shine with enthusiasm when he talks.

He was tremendously amused by his father's unexpected debut as an actor.

"Dad's in the movies now, did you know?" he said. "He's very puffed up about the whole thing—even has an agent. Spends his days sitting by the telephone waiting for a call from the studio.

"His first job was two days' work in "The Picture of Dorian Gray." Mother and I went with him to the preview and sat through the whole thing on the edge of our seats so we'd be sure not to miss it. It was great excitement. But we never did see him. The sequence he was in had been cut, and nobody had thought to tell him. Poor thing, he was crushed."

Father recovered from the blow, however, and went on to bigger things. He worked in "The Suspect" and followed that with "Kitty" in which he played a barrister with a wig and had a scene in which he was required to hold a baby. He took it very seriously—asked Peter's advice on the readings and make-up and even how to hold the baby.

Peter's mother hasn't tried the flicker yet, but he has no doubt she could make good if she felt like a fling.

"Mother's a character," he says fondly.

Sort of a British Billie Burke, only not so slap-happy.

His parents are delighted with his success and keep scrapbooks full of everything that is written about him. Peter is one of the few Hollywood bachelors who live with their parents, but the day we lunched he wasn’t sure whether he lived with them in an apartment, a house or a Quonset hut.

"I think I live in a hole at the moment," he laughed. "I talked to them today and we’ve just been evicted for the third time in eighteen months. We were renting a tiny house in Westwood, but—you guessed it—the woman who owns it is selling it."

He looked about as bothered by this prospect of rooflessness as if a housekey had landed on his sleeve.

It was a nicely draped sleeve, at that—part of a hound’s-tooth-checked odd jacket whipped up for him by the most expensive tailor in Beverly Hills. Clothes are his big extravagance—just about the only one. He loves good clothes and he is doing his best to collect a large and varied wardrobe, and such are his charm and persuasive powers that quite often he is able to wheedle a tailor into making him a suit in two weeks while other customers wait the customary four months. His tastes run to neat black and white checks and beautiful gray flannels and cashmere jackets, and he likes white shirts and black knitted ties.

If he has a new car (possibly this is Extravagance Number Two) that he speaks of in the tones of a father describing a new-born baby. For a moment I expected him to whip out his wallet and show me a picture of it lying on a white fur rug. It is a convertible Chrysler station wagon, maroon with lush wine red leather upholstery and yards of magnificently grained wood. He described it so minutely I felt as though I had just ridden a hundred miles in it.

However, his activities are not completely confined to the outdoors and the open road. He reads a lot, chiefly current novels and books with psychological themes. That day he was enthusiastic about "Rain Before Seven" and "The Pursuer" and he practically sent me home before the dessert came to read "Methinks the Lady." He plays gin rummey and is the only Hollywood citizen I know who doesn’t consider himself the greatest gin player in the world. "I am pretty much of a pigeon," he admits. One of his favorite indoor sports is running off motion pictures of ten or so years ago—films that starred Jean Harlow and Carole Lombard and Spencer Tracy and are to his mind more exciting than anything being done nowadays. He does this at least once a week, usually accompanied by Keenan Wynn, who, as I am sure everybody must know by now, is his best friend.

His favorite eating place in Hollywood is Dave Chasen’s. He haunts it because it is informal and comfortable and masculine in its tavernish atmosphere and so much like Toots Shor’s in New York, which he admires. He seldom goes to Romanoff’s in Beverly Hills because he feels it is a showing-off place more than anything and he’s seldom in the mood for a Big Entrance.

Peter has not reached the point (currently fashionable with older stars) where fans look him. His humor gets the better of any annoyance he might feel at being rent into small shreds by a horde of little fiends with pencils and he is consoled by the fact that a couple of other boys, Sinatra and Johnson, are even worse off than he.

He loves, apropos of frenetic fans, to tell the story of the day Frank Sinatra called Van Johnson at the Waldorf and little jockey Sammy Renick answered the phone.

"How you doin' up there?" Frank asked.

Sammy was breathless. "It's awful," he said. "We can't go anywhere without being mobbed. They surround him. They tear him apart. Honest, Frankie, you can't imagine what it's like!"

The special service department at M-G-M takes care of the bulk of Peter's fan mail, holding out only the very interesting letters for him to read and answer. Most of his mail, quite understandably, comes from young girls, but now and then he gets a plaintive end-of-the-rope communiqué from a mother who writes: "My daughter has written to you several times and received no answer. She is heartbroken. Won't you please drop her a line—please?"

His youngest fan is my daughter Jill, who was two and a half when they met. He seemed to have the same effect on her as he has on eighteen-year-olds, only she is less inhibited. She came into the room where we were having cocktails, curtseyed and murmured politely to Keenan and Eve, then headed straight for Peter and put her arms around his neck. "I love you, little Peter," she announced with no preliminaries whatsoever. From that evening on she has been in a rather delicious state of confusion over which is Peter Lawford and which is Peter Rabbit, but she adores them both.

Peter has a very clear picture of what kind of an actor he is now and what he hopes to grow to be. More than anything else he wants to play the murderer in "Night Must Fall."

"In eight or nine years, of course, I know I'm not ready for it yet; I've got plenty to learn first. But I think about it... and I'd like to do remakes of some of the Cary Grant things like 'None But the Lonely Heart.'"

He admires Grant's brand of acting greatly, and he pronounces the name "Grant." Another favorite performer of his is Pearl Bailey, the singer—"That woman knocks me clear out"—and when he was in New York he saw Peter Lind Hayes, the mimic, fourteen times at the Copacabana. "He fractures me every time."

But his most fervent admiration is reserved for Keenan Wynn. "Keenan is tops for me. He can do anything at all."

Peter has a performer's respect for grade A night club comedians. "My frustration—I know I'll never be able to do it, but I dream about it—is to be able to get up on a floor, cold, and entertain a roomful of people. Hold them for a whole hour, without props or a plot, just being funny all by myself. I think anybody who can do that is sensational."

What else about him? Well, he likes hamburgers and whiskey sour and really esoteric swing music like that furnished by Harry the Hipster, and he is kind to drunks in one-arm joints who ask him to write notes to their wives at three o'clock in the morning. He is good natured and an amusing companion and sharp as a tack about many things aside from making faces for the camera. His eyebrows are almost as bushy as John L. Lewis's, but on him they're attractive. When he is talking with great enthusiasm he grabs you by the arm or holds onto your elbow or puts his hand on your wrist as if he is trying to keep you from bouncing out of your chair in sheer excitement. He winces if you mention "Lassie." He has a trick hair comb; you can study it for an hour and I defy you to figure out how it's done. He has a very good time.

I think the person who wrote "I love life and I want to live" must have been Peter's psychological twin.

THE END
Listen, It's Lund

Now John has never been one to take life lying down. He blew up. In his best dramatic diction he retorted, "Well, Eloise may be displeased, but John and Marie don't like it either, especially the bric-a-brac.
However, we'll pay for it gladly because John and Marie are sort of glad that they're not going to have to look at Eloise's ash tray and antiques any more.

Whereupon he and Marie both made low curtseys and turned on their heels—to pack up and move again.

The blond six-footer who was causing such a stir on the Paramount lot with his performance of Olivia de Havilland's lover and also her son "To Each His Own" began to detect a fine irony in that title. Where was John Lund's own? Where indeed were he and his wife to lay their heads in this town of unfathomable fortune?

To be brutally frank, the immediate answer proved to be a motel. The higher the fame, the lower the roof, it seemed to the attractive Lunds. But they could take it in their stride.

In fact, John has taken a great many things in his seven-league-boots stride.
He's been a ditch digger, soda jerker, carpenter and timekeeper. What's more, he even tried to be a Hollywood actor once before. It was during the days when he was deciding whether writing for a big advertising agency could ever be as satisfying as, say, some day speaking the stately and philosophic speeches of Macbeth. At that time the test he made in New York for a major studio brought forth the brief epitaph, "N.G." However, there was some consolation in the fact that he was in the best of company. For the tests made at the same time of Van Johnson, who was then dancing in a New York chorus, and Gregory Peck, who was trying to believe the still small voice that kept whispering he could be an actor if only he'd overcome fear, drew a similar report from the same myopic Hollywood bigwig.

Nevertheless, for the time being the comfort was slight. It meant John had to stick to his agency job, but he made it grist to his mills by turning out such successful radio scripts that eventually he went to Hollywood, not as an actor but as a radio writer. During the war he had written shows using Army personnel from camps throughout the country and these were broadcast on coast-to-coast networks. Then from Hollywood itself he authored the Billie Burke radio program for some six months.

But he might just as well have been in Singapore so far as getting into the movies was concerned. During this period he was living in the Knickerbocker Hotel on Ivar Street in Hollywood and as he puts it—"I was the hermit of Ivar and the kingdom of Metro and the fine Southern pr. Th. iodine of Paramount (to quote Olivia de Havilland) were both far, far away."

He closed this gap by the usual circuitous route of returning to New York and landing a part in a Broadway production, "The Hasty Heart." The role of Yank wasn't particularly taxing, but it gave him an effective chance to be seen. And how the feminine, gender loved what they saw! So did Henry Ginsberg, head of Paramount Studio.

In fact, he was so enthused that he arranged for Lund's release before the end of the run of the play, while sure sensa- tional. Paramount wanted Lund very much indeed for the vital role of Olivia de Havilland's flier lover of World War I in "To Each His Own." He proved so good in this that they gave him the other important part in the same picture, that of their son who becomes a flier in World War II.

UND himself is a restless, violently active person, even though he contends that he is lazy by nature and that his most definite aspiration is to achieve a position where he may retire.

Everything belies that now. He reads avidly, deeply and with discernment. As a consequence he has far more than a smattering of knowledge of many subjects. For example, if you happen to talk Thomas Wolfe, the writer, with him, he will not refer merely to one of Wolfe's works. On the contrary, he'll discuss practically everything the author wrote, quote from his books and, regale you with anecdotes about him. It's practically the same way with any topic that happens his way, whether it's Fifteenth Century Italian poets, modern music, hypnotism or women's hats.

About the latter he said, "I like women's hats when they're chosen with some obvi- ous thought and care. They should be richly beautiful. But even stylish hats are meaningless on the head of a woman unless they are well proportioned to her face and in some way complement her beauty.

"There's a certain shocking disillusion- ment, for instance, to glimpse an array of attractive hats reposing on a piano or a table at a party and later see them worn by the wrong types of women. That kind of thing always turns me off!"

John Lund is socially conscious in high degree. He's a hall fellow well met to a host of friends. At Paramount there's a table in the canteen, beside which he presides which is humorously referred to as the "children's corner." That's doubtless because there's so much cutting up in that particular area at all times. It's a question whether Lund isn't satirizing the sedate get-togethers of the moguls of the lot at other tables.

There's a waiting line for this table, in a manner of speaking. Because, as Phil Tryon, who was regular Round Table member during his "incumbency" at Para- mount, put it, "There's a lot of witty and good conversation. Lund really holds the ball and the other warry batty folks just sit and watch. It's not who just naturally takes over. Everything, no matter if it's a cube of butter or lobster in the half shell, reminds him of a story. He can go on for hours making interesting talk."

The "interesting talk" with the Lunds now is about furniture. Yes, they finally got a house. It's a hilltop cottage which they affectionately call the "little gray home in the West," and they're having a happy, though strenuous, time furnishing it. Every few weeks something that has been ordered for months arrives. Maybe a chair or a bathroom rug, a lamp or an electric iron. And it's gradually taking form with a thoroughly conscious attempt at no chi-chi and a definite detour from decorator's district to the center. The living room and dining room rugs are lime green and shaggy in texture. There are deep chairs, ultimately destined to make long davenport, splashed with bright cerise and cinnamon and bronze tones.

Recently the Lunds celebrated their fourth wedding anniversary by making tall cake and inviting for a cleaning woman to come who had something of a record of breaking her promise to show up five times straight in a row. But Marie was hopeful. She said with almost pathet- ical sincerity, "I love him and I didn't care with the bus or something. She sounded so nice on the phone!"

JOHN and Marie have had a long and turbulent journey to their hilltop house. At the time they decided to get married, they had known each other for two years. John was writing camp shows and Marie, who had been a Conover model as well as having been under contract to RKO, was selling programs for very large fees to help swell the receipts on "This Is the Army."

It was all a very hurry-up affair. They were married, had breakfast together in Baltimore and at noon they separated, Marie flying to Washington and John to St. Louis. They referred to each other again until nearly two years later, and all the time they were within flying dis- tance of each other. It was a sort of Evangelist-Gebriel chase. Twice they flew over each other's heads, a few days and again by a few hours, while each was crossing the country to meet the other. Since they've been in Hollywood they've had their longest time together, one month and three years. And yet life has been hectic for them because of the housing conditions.

But now they have their roof and soon they'll have bookcases for their books, the many books that John loves and needs to satisfy his passionately quest- ing mind—the mind that has been restless and searching ever since he left school in Rochester, New York, when he was fourteen years old.

They have another possession besides their little house. It's a little car. If this is any impression that they live in a world of midget proportions, that is true in a sense. The car can best be described as "some sort of thing!" They paid $1,000 for it in New York and assembled it them- selves. They got an experiment to put her sewing machine motor in it one day because it is more powerful than the one in the "auto" at present. It has strange things attached to it. But certainly will be impractical in the sunny California rainy season, and even though it has seats that you can't sit in except with a minimum of comfort and security for your body, you must admit it runs and piles up sixty miles to a single gallon of gas.

And then there is one more possession which the Lunds treasure, especially Marie, and not the Lunds. Madame, a regular live-in, hangs out much bigger than a large scarf," John says, "but Marie loves it and tells people about it with an intense fervor. She has the enthusiasm and imagination of a child.

She may you believe that patch of ber- ries is as wondrous as 3,000,000 acres of winter wheat."

A house, a car, a strawberry patch! It looks as though the Lunds are starting moving at last. Except for John, who'll keep right on moving—up.

LUCILLE BALL: Mr. and Mrs. Desiderio Alberto Arnaz y de Acha III (known more familiarly as Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball) look forward to a country Christmas on their farm in the San Fernando Valley. Their gifts to each other will include a new horse or a new prize cow and an additional stall or two to accommodate same. From Lucille we'd like another characterization as hilarious as her "Gladys Benton" in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Easy to Wed."
Ben's studio was a hubbub of activity. Dinah Shore had arrived for her fashion sitting. And any gathering with Dinah Shore is animated. She's red-haired and vivacious. And her husky voice is fast and low with a quality as warm as her own personality.

She was wearing a simple little gray wool dress, close fitting to the hips and buttoned down to the waist. It had a tiny Peter Pan collar, piped with white and white piping on the cuffs, too. There were small, wired panniers at each side of the full skirt. And her small gray, breton-type felt hat was white-trimmed also.

The taffeta plaid evening dress worn by Dinah for the picture which opens the fashion section this month suited her to perfection. She's 5' 4½" tall, with lovely shoulders and bosom and a waist that measures a scant 22". She wears her hair parted in the center and up at the sides. She uses little make-up; just a light touch of powder on her dark-golden skin, lipstick and mascara. For the sitting, she was wearing a new shade of ultra-violet nail polish, which toned in beautifully with the violets she carried. Incidentally, she has made a recording for Columbia that gives her own ultra-violet version of the old song "Who'll Buy My Violets?"

Dinah loves perfume and jewelry. And surprises! When her secretary whisked out a package at the studio, Dinah cried "A surprise?" Seems husband George Montgomery always brings her something, even if it's only a chocolate bar.

Dinah said people are always saying they've been told they look like her—which is all right with George if he thinks it's complimentary. If it's not he's liable to tell them they must know a lot of blind people!

As we said our goodbyes, more than ever we understood her great popularity. For you can tell from the way she talks that she has a real interest in people and fresh enthusiasms. And these things color her voice when she sings.

Lana Turner, always known for sophisticated evening clothes, went jeune fille at the Xavier Cugat party which followed the premiere of "Holiday in Mexico." Her gown was white embroidered net with a tiny little round collar and fitted bodice. The skirt was very very full with an adorable petticoat that showed when she whirled on the dance floor. It wasn't really a petticoat but a double hem, for the top layer was the embroidered white net of the gown and the underneath layer was flaming red.

Believe it or not, Joan Crawford wore almost the same dress described above on Lana at Adolph Spreckels' tremendous party. Joan, however, gave her embroidered full skirted white gown a sophisticated touch by wearing a gorgeous new diamond and ruby feather-shaped clip at the high collared throat of the gown. Also a matching ruby and diamond bracelet. Her evening bag too was stunning; envelope shaped and completely covered with dull white paillettes.

Jennifer Jones looked ravishing at one of the best parties of the year given by David Selznick. She went "sophisticated" with her hair piled becomingly high in a soft coif. Her very low cut stiff white silk gown was heart shaped in front. The bodice was tightly fitted with a huge full skirt that puffed and billowed out as she danced. She wore pearls at her neck and on her arm. Diana Lynn wore white too and her gown was so filmy, so feminine and so utterly "dancy" that it would be divine in almost any color imaginable. And for anyone of any age. It was in heavy white net with a low neck that softly draped into deep "V's" both front and back. It was long waisted and snug to the hips and the skirt was so full you almost wouldn't believe it. Simply yards and yards of the white net gored and gathered to the hips. Toward the bottom of the skirt huge ostrich feather-tufts tucked between the net folds.

Joan Caulfield, at the Selznick party, wore a tight-bodiced black velvet gown with a low square neck. Her skirt was very full and around her neck she wore a tiny black velvet ribbon to which were attached two small white gardenias.

Greer Garson has a new winter coat she's mad for. It's soft black cloth with tiers and tiers of black Persian lamb from the hip to hem-line. The tiers give a flaring look and she also wears a shoulder capelet of the fur over the plain uncollared neckline of the coat, for variety. She wouldn't dream of wearing anything but tiny black hats with this, of course.

British Idyll

(Continued from page 50) and aware both of their own position, as well as what is going on in the world. They are not surrounded by press agents and sycophants and parasites. Their friends are of their own choosing and they haven't too many of them. Those they have been selected for special reasons for friendship.

They live in Herfordshire, on a real farm, near King's Langley—and their telephone number is a private one. They raise their own vegetables as well as their own chickens and eggs. There are even young ducklings and geese on the place, strutting comfortably about.

Part of the farmhouse was built in the Sixteenth Century, and this has been left almost in its original state. A few generations ago, the "new" part was added, in an Italian style not at all like the other houses in Herfordshire. Two years ago, when the Masons bought the place, they began making it over and now, in spite of all the difficulties attendant upon rebuilding, which is even more difficult in England than it is in America, they've made the place into an extremely comfortable and informal country home. The Italian features haven't been played down, exactly, but now they fit into the picture perfectly and tiles and rough walls blend beautifully with English farm life.

The huge living room has many windows looking out onto the garden and to the countryside. The walls are dull beige, the big sofas that flank the fireplace are of the same soft beige with green cushions. Cream and green with touches of vivid color form the informal decor. It isn't studied, but the effect is far better than if a decorator had placed each piece of furniture.

Outside the living room is a formal garden, as lovely as only an English garden can be, with dark trees forming a background for smooth lawns and clipped hedges and an abundance of flowers. Yes, they do all right, the young Masons.

They've always done all right in spite of the necessary difficulties in getting started. But they wouldn't be so successful, now, if success had come too easily. Pamela was born on May 15, 1928. After college, he decided that he didn't want to be an architect, after all. So he answered an advertisement in a theatrical magazine, The Stage, and got an engagement touring the provinces. But he wasn't along too fast. He was learning—but he hadn't reached anywhere near stardom.

It wasn't until 1935 that Mason appeared in his first film, "Late Extra." He followed this with "Troubled Waters," "Twice Branded" and "Prison Breakers.

About that time he met a pretty little actress named Pamela Kellino. It may not have been love at first sight. They aren't too sure about that. But, before they both realized it, it was love, all right. And not too long after that they began a collaboration—in their work and in life as well.

If you think Pamela is just another wife, you might as well revise your ideas. If you think that English wives are just calm, pretty spoken and retiring young girls, you've got even more reasons to change your mind. Pamela is small, slender, dark haired—though she admits she's changed the color of her hair several times—dark-eyed (she hasn't changed those), vibrant. She knows her own mind—and she knows James Mason's mind, too. Some say she's the power behind Mason. Others say it's just a very successful collaboration. One thing is certain—it isn't just another marriage. And if Pamela doesn't like a story, Mason doesn't appear in it. (Continued on page 102)

(Continued from page 100) Pamela is quite a girl on her own. Her father was important in the British film industry—though Pamela has never traded on that. She was a successful writer and actress when she met Mason. And, practically as soon as she did meet him, she began taking over. She's taken over successfully ever since. Let's not say she runs Mason. But she does run the house—runs it beautifully. There's more than a rumor around the British studios that Pamela is the one to please—if you want a successful James Mason picture. Whether or not that is true, Mason's real success began just about the time he and Pamela met and were married. She has her own theory about marriage, especially their kind.

"Theatrical and movie marriages are precarious at best," she said. "I'm going to make a success of our marriage by sticking around. Every minute. When James goes on tour, I go with him. When he's at the studio, I'm there, too. When we go on holiday, we go together. I can look after the house in my spare time. Luckily, my writing can be done when he's busy, too. But where he goes, I go. That's the only way I think our marriage can succeed."

She may have something there. For the past year, the Masons have been touring the Continent, appearing in plays for the Red Cross, with time off for a movie or two.

"The Upturned Glass," which promises to be as successful as "The Seventh Veil," was written by a handsome young American writer, John Monaghan from Pennsylvania, whom the Masons discovered while they were touring Europe. Captain Monaghan had ideas. The Masons liked them. Now, he's been released from the American Army, and is a house guest at the Masons' country place. He wrote "The Upturned Glass" as an original story and, in collaboration with Pamela, made it into a screenplay. Monaghan and Pamela are now working on Mason's biography.

Pamela has several other books to her credit—and James Mason is the illustrator. But his art isn't confined to illustrating his wife's books. His living room contains a number of his drawings, excellent in color and design and displaying the exotic temperament that his fans find so fascinating. He has designed a scarf, too, that the house of Ascher has put out and that is extremely popular in London. He is fond of music, with a bias in favor of the blues.

So there you are. All you have to do to be a famous English movie star is to be handsome and attractive and talented, and have a curious angle of whimsy and a love of the slightly weird and have a face that can mirror cruelty as easily as love, and a depth of feeling as well as surface emotions. And be intelligent and artistic and humorous at the same time. And all you have to do to be a successful English star's wife is to be beautiful, and be able to act, and write both novels and screen plays, and run a large house successfully—and be loved by and in love with the English star. Maybe that would work out all right in any nationality.

The Masons want to come to America. Mason wants to choose his own movies—as well as the people who will act and direct. And Pamela will have quite a bit to say about it, too. And they both have an idea that an American summer stock company might be fun, too. Don't expect them to "go Hollywood" as to night clubs and extravaganzas and sycophants. Mason—that is, Pamela—has got too much sense for that. Make a bet that Mason will stay reserved and intelligent and humorous and a bit odd. And that Pamela will—well, Pamela will stay—around.

Skybound—with Joan Leslie learning plane facts from pilot Robert Cummings

It's like this: Bob Cummings, who has been flying nineteen years, uses a model plane secured from Reginald Denny, who makes them, to show Joan Leslie what really happens when your plane takes off skyward.

Just in case—Bob doesn't plan on their jumping! Joan gets beautifully confused with the parachute; puts it on backwards.

The wind up! Joan whistles as Bob sets the propeller whirling. All the fliers Bob trained during the war came back home again safely.

They're off! The plane is a little two-seater Cessna model, the place Whiteman's Airpark. Bob, who stars with Joan in "The Chase," is such a good teacher that now Joan takes regular flying lessons.
'Round and 'Round They Go

Until that weekend, Tony was a man utterly infatuated. He was also on the air for a perfume manufacturer. Two weeks later his program went off the air without warning because of product shortages, and his girl had gone back to her husband, from whom she had estranged for almost a year.

Of course, there at the beginning of September, Tony knew that Rita had not yet filed her action for divorce against Orson Welles. But he and Rita had been dating constantly and exclusively for months, and he already had an engagement ring and a wedding band, as well, to give her. He knew that, at the earliest, he couldn't make Rita Mrs. Martin much before the beginning of 1948 but he worshiped her so that he couldn't resist buying these exquisite and most expensive symbols of what he believed was to be their idyllic future together.

Rita said very little about that future. She says very little on any subject. But briefly, this past spring, she had discussed in Photoplay her romance with Tony. She said they had fun together, that he was a kind, fine person. Shortly after that they quarreled.

Rita never did explain what she and Tony quarreled about or why they reconciled. In fact, after that, this hitherto most co-operative star told the press that, since she wasn't yet free, she had the rights of her small daughter, Rebeca Welles, to think about and that any romantic conversation might endanger those rights. So she wasn't talking.

But there was no quieting Tony on his rhapsody of Rita. Like all impassioned lovers, he simply had to discuss the girl he adored. He'd stop anyone anywhere and go on and on about his glamorous subject. "Do you realize I've adored Rita for seven years now?" he'd say. "Have you any conception of how perfect she is? There's her sweetness as well as her beauty, her simplicity as well as her glamour. Everything will be completely ideal, once she's mine. You see, we can't have any misunderstandings in the future because we've already talked over all the controversial subjects and we agree on everything. Am I ever a lucky guy?"

It did you no good to point out to Tony that he and Rita had obviously quarreled in the spring.

"But that works out to be an advantage," he'd say, and his voice would take on the tenderness it does when he is giving with "To Each His Own." "We discovered then how terribly we missed one another. We found out what fun we had together. Listen, if I sound as though I'm overboard, I am. I've never been in love like this before. I never knew I could be. My heart's completely Rita's and I know hers is mine, too, forever."

It did look as though that was true, all last summer. Night after night you'd see Rita and Tony dancing together, he whispering the romantic words of each tune into her pretty ear, telling her he'd be lost without her, telling her she was wonderful. They danced cheek to cheek, stars in their eyes, their feet moving lightly across the floor.

They looked divine together, even more lost in love than Tony had with Lana Turner, once upon a time long back, or Rita and Vic Mature, before Orson.

Surely, said Hollywood, up until the weekend of September sixth to ninth, this is the real thing.
But on that blue Monday morning of the ninth, Hollywood was shaking its head in disillusionment.

For this is what had happened over that weekend.

Lana Turner had split up with Bob Hutton.

Bob Hutton had gone back to Cleatus Caldwell, Ken Murray's ex, whom he had dropped to go around with Lana. He had gone back so thoroughly, in fact, that he announced that it was now true love leading to matrimony between himself and Cleatus.

Howard Hughes, who had separated Bob Hutton and Lana for a brief interval in the summer, had left the hospital and gone to New York. He was closely followed by Ava Gardner, whom he had dated before Lana, and who was recently divorced from Artie Shaw. You will probably recall that Lana Turner had also divorced Artie Shaw—before Ava, that is.

But the bombshell was that Rita Hayworth had gone back to Orson Welles. She didn't say so but she certainly inferred that this was a final reconciliation.

This left everybody taken care of except Lana and Tony. So they did the obvious. They went out together.

By mid-week, tough as it was, Cupid finally had all the new names bracketed and had grown rather philosophic about it all. He argued with himself that Tony and Lana had once had a real shine for one another, that Rita and Orson were still married and did have their child to think of and that Cleatus Caldwell and Bob Hutton would probably make a very nice couple. Cupid worked himself up into such a glow that after a bit he was even pleased that Yvonne de Carlo, who had been Howard Hughes's favorite date in between Ava and Lana, had got herself around to Burt Lancaster (having dropped Rod Cameron in the meantime). Everything was tidied up—or so it seemed.

So what happened on Thursday? Out on the floor of the exclusive, swank California Cabana Club moved two pulse-stopping figures with stars in their eyes.

Uh-huh. It was Rita and Tony.

This time Rita did talk. She said a whole sentence, which for her is a volume, and her glances were positive libraries of admiration.

"Oh, I'm so happy," said Rita. "So utterly, utterly happy."

Later that very same evening, came the news that Orson Welles was trying to get in touch with his former-Rita flane, Dolores del Rio.

The status in those cases remained magnificently quo for eight whole days, which was just fine—until the weekend.

What developed that one was that Rita Hayworth and Orson Welles went back together once again.

"This is the hardest blow I've ever taken," that rap in the Navy—losing my air show—they're nothing to this. I've loved Rita so long. I—i—" His voice shook. He wasn't acting. He was a completely heartbroken man.

Perhaps Tony had better look toward Hollywood's junior misses. They seem to be more stable of heart there—the pretty girls like the impish Shirley Temple, who prefers to be addressed as Mrs. John Agar, the spritely June Allyson, who is so proud of being Mrs. Richard Powell, the serene Jeanne Crain Brinkman.

Hollywood is very proud and fond of that group—that is, up to this moment.

Alas, but who can look ahead? It's enough to look at the stars in their eyes as the couples of the hour dance cheek to cheek. And when there's a sudden heart switch, why ponder too long, for after all, isn't it true that all's fair in love?

The End
Because She's Bergman

The tall, tawny-blonde girl was dancing a sedate fox trot with a sergeant when the nineteen-year-old Pfc. stepped up.

"I like to of busted the punkinhead on the snoot," said the Sergeant, reporting the incident later. "This yardbird character prances forward and I hear him say it, very distinctly. He says to her, 'Jitterbug?'"

"And she never blinks a peeper. She says, 'Sure, soldier, swing it!' And they swung it. My eyes bugged out four feet and six inches. Lissen, would you have asked Ingrid Bergman to jitterbug?"

The incident occurred in Alaska when Ingrid was visiting Army camps. Similar incidents occurred in France and Germany when she called on GI's there and many similar incidents have occurred in America. Certainly Ingrid Bergman jitterbugs. It is ripe time for us to get something through our admiring but sometimes befuddled heads: Miss B., who has taken out her first naturalization papers, is as American as the girl next door. She is not a foreign star. She is no longer a Swede.

A SURPRISING talent for the national dance mania does not, of course, prove that any young woman is thoroughly American. There is considerably more evidence. Just as we adopted Ingrid, so she adopted us. In the process, she learned more about Americans than Americans learned about her. The impression is still about that Ingrid is a bit remote. Here goes the great-lady legend, so devoutly fostered by many an awed publicist. Listen to it crash:

She is a movie fan, probably as ardent a fan as any reader of this magazine. She frequents neighborhood shows in Beverly Hills and is Catholic in her tastes.

Ingrid not only likes to see movies, she likes to take them. She has an aged sixteen-millimeter motion-picture camera with which she is expert. On days when she has few scenes she often smuggles this onto the set and takes pictures of other actors while they work. Since her camera is a noisy thing, alleged by one super-critical director to make more racket than a tractor in a bottle factory, Ingrid's moviemaking is sometimes disturbing. She has been known to run and hide after disturbing sensitive players.

Her accent, which used to reveal nationality as emphatically as a monocle, is now plainly American. Words like "in- dulgently" used to trip her. She takes them now like a steeple-chaser taking a one-foot jump. One of her favorite stories on herself concerns her early struggles with the American language. Her husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, was completing advanced studies in San Francisco and was home for weekends only. He had not studied English as long as Ingrid and was having enormous difficulties with medical words in a foreign tongue. So he preferred to relax into Swedish when he came home.

On Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays, Ingrid's studio English was pretty good, but on Mondays her accent was as noticeable as a peanut whistle in a symphony. Directors and sound technicians accepted Mondays as almost working days.

One weekend, Dr. Lindstrom was overworked and did not come home. On Monday morning, Ingrid's accent was perfect. The sound man tossed off his earphones and yelled his joy.

"I see you are not speaking to your husband," he called to Ingrid. "That's won-

FIRST AMONG FINE WATCH BANDS
And jewels of fabled Samarkand are drab beside her Moon-white Hand “Moon-white” hands that do a baby’s daily wash? Of course!

If you think that washing clothes must mean red, rough, flaky-dry hands...you’re just not in the know! Snowy, fragrant Pacquins Hand Cream helps make that “housework” look disappear from your hands...in its place there’s a softer, smoother look.

Doctors and Nurses were first users of Pacquins

Doctors and nurses scrub their hands 30 to 40 times a day. So, naturally, they need extra rich lubrication to help overcome the drying effects of soapy-water scrubbings. Pacquins was made just to answer that need. Super-rich...it quickly helps overcome the drying effects of hard work and rough weather.

deful. Stay mad with him until the picture’s over, will you?"

Dr. Lindstrom’s anxiety is under control, too, now. He holds an important medical post, that of resident neurological surgeon of the Los Angeles General Hospital, in which he considers his work more important than his own. He is, of course, frequently called to the hospital in the middle of the night. But Peter Lindstrom is a man of parts. Despite his gruelling work, he has learned to juggle. The Lindstroms frequently turn on the phonograph and cut a rug at home. Since he avoids publicity, the interesting possibilities of photographing a great dramatic actress and a distinguished surgeon juggling have never been explored.

His first name, incidentally, is pronounced precisely as it is spelled, “Petter.” But Ingrid now calls him “Peter.” Americans canton it. They speak only English these days, and their eight-year-old daughter, the remarkable Pia, does not know a word of Swedish. She attends a Beverly Hills public school, to which she is occasionally delivered by her mother, in the Ford. Her small friends frequently come to visit her. They know Ingrid simply as “Mrs. Lindstrom,” and although Pia knows that her mother is an actress, she has seen her only in “The Bells of St. Mary’s.” Pia is a replica of Ingrid, which is to say beautiful.

As a doctor’s wife, Ingrid takes an absorbed interest in her husband’s work. She fetches home batches of studio stills to study. She fetches home batches of X-rays and photographs of operations. They study their art with mutual interest. Possibly Ingrid’s mastery of English has been quickened because she has had to learn all the difficult technical terms associated with surgery. She can explain a brain operation, but she was at a loss to explain herself one day when, having got the surgeon’s pictures mixed up with her own, she handed a friend a photograph of a tumor operation.

She chews gum, a habit she never learned in Sweden. Lately, she has become mildly addicted to the word “lousy.” When in New York, her first call is invariably made to a restaurant named Hamburger Heaven. Her next is to a department store where she purchases quantities of kitchen utensils. She craves kitchen gadgets with the passion of a native-born housewife American. Currently, she is fascinated by her new electric garbage disposal outfit. She likes New York cheese, the sharp kind. Like most other young American women of her generation, she has an appetite, eats too much if not careful and frequently has to diet.

She is a voracious reader, averaging two books a week in addition to all the motion-picture magazines. Her almost total ignorance of politics marks her as typically American rather than European. She has another typically American trait which will be instantly recognized: As opposed to the usual European belief that all culture resides in an old country background, and is not subject to improvement, Ingrid is a firm and vigorous practitioner of the Yankee yen for self-improvement. She takes lessons. She takes lessons in music and voice, although she is not ambitious to become a singer. She has studied flying, riding and tennis. When she learned to cumbia, she went to Arthur Murray. Between pictures, she works at something... every day. When she is acting, she has French lessons three times a week. The only course she has abandoned is the course in the English language which Ruth Roberts supervised for several years. Ingrid got a cum laude in that when she found she was able to cope with Bing Crosby when that wag tries to fluster her with jive talk.

She likes gin rummy, at which she is a merciless foe, "Information Please," silver charms on a bracelet and sandwiches. She cannot balance a checkbook.

If some of the "great foreign star" legend is disappearing by now, why fine. The idea fits Ingrid Bergman as poorly as a diamond tiara fits a daisy-chain girl.

She is a woman, and you know it. It has been suggested by eminent critics that no actress on the screen is as capable as she when it comes to portraying mature feminine passion. She is also a lady—so much so that without conscious conversational editing, you speak as circumspectly in front of her as you would to Shirley Temple.

The happy effect that Miss Bergman's presence has upon male citizens is something your correspondent could describe at enormous length, but possibly the best report on that matter was capsumed by a gray-headed Hollywood writer who has seen loveliness come and go since Swanson was a bathing beauty. He should be impervious, but his quote is this: "The lady," he says, "makes me feel like a cocker spaniel puppy. I'd like to roll on my back, and mebbe get tickled by her toe."

But this does not describe warmth, or laughter that's as natural as spring water, or a happy invitation to surprise and discovery. She is continually surprising.

Certainly no actress intent upon enveloping herself in mysterious foreign glamour would have done what Ingrid did with Jack Benny. She went on the air in a memorable show, kidded the buttons off a picture called "Gaslight," and burlesqued her own Academy-award-winning performance. The satire was as broad as a slapstick comedian's paddle.

Bright tip for dull floors—a wax that’s “Plasticized”!

Just swipe it on! Helping husbands are amazed at O-Cedar—the Self Polishing Wax that’s “plasticized” for easier spreading and longer luster. Swipe it on... and please—no rubbing! Simply pull the applicator toward you with an easy stroke. You’ll get a more even luster if you don’t bear down! Dries in 17 minutes.

Spills won’t faze it! With this “plasticized” finish on your floors, you just wipe up splashes with a damp cloth! O-Cedar Self Polishing Wax has a far greater resistance to dirt and moisture. Gives you longer luster with less work!

Longer lasting! Weeks later, there’s still a gleam on your floor—and a beam on your face! It’s true—you’ll save on waxings with this “plasticized” O-Cedar Self Polishing Wax. Remember, it’s O-Cedar—the greatest help in housekeeping.

On the stage of the Hollywood Canteen, she wrestled with the aforementioned Mr. Benny and tossed him into the footlights. You don’t expect these things from Ingrid, but she does them.

She gave a Calvados party before the start of her current picture, “Arch of Triumph.” (Calvados is the apple brandy drink featured in the book), and went to endless pains to make it a funny party, as diligently and as mischievously as a girl from Sauk Center might plan to surprise Dr. Arrowsmith.

When her guests arrived, expecting to observe the formalities, they discovered a long table decorated with surgical instruments and receptacles—certain pots and pans that Ingrid had fished from a doctor she knows very well.

IT IS good form in Hollywood to ask actresses two stock questions. One: Do you go to night clubs? Answer: no, never. (Nobody goes to night clubs. The Hollywood night clubs are always empty.) Two: What is your favorite role? Answer: The most dramatic role the actress ever played. Well, Ingrid goes to night clubs, sometimes. She and Dr. Lindstrom would like to go more because they like to dance, but this always attracts too much attention, so the visits are rare. Her favorite role is that of a train whistle.

At any rate, that is what Ingrid will tell you. She played it on a war bond tour.

“They expected me to do dramatic, solemn things,” she will tell you. “But it seemed silly to me to do things like that when there were only those few minutes to try to entertain large audiences. Ben Hecht wrote a sketch for me. There were fifteen parts. I played all of them. The train, everything, including the whistle.

“‘The whistle goes like this: O-o-o-o-o-o-o-o-’”

So far, Ingrid has never repeated a role or a character. She laughs about this.

“Maybe I am running out of roles,” she says. “Maybe that is why I have to go to New York to act in a play, and be Joan of Arc and get burned alive.”

That interesting conflagration will be getting under way shortly. Upon completion of her current picture, Ingrid was off to New York with hotel reservations for a long stay, to begin rehearsal of Maxwell Anderson’s play about the Maid of Orleans.

Her record of not repeating a role is, as a matter of fact, astounding. In “Spellbound” she was a psychiatrist. In “Saratoga Trunk” she was a Creole vivan. In “Gaslight” she was a wife on the verge of insanity. In “Casablanca” she was the beautiful foil for Humphrey Bogart’s tough love-making. In “Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde” she was a bad girl. In “Rage in Heaven” she was a refugee. In “Adam Had Four Sons” she was a ghouhtm. In “Intermezzo” she was a pianist. In “Bells of St. Mary’s” she was a nun, and in “Nortorious” she was a spy. In “Arch of Triumph” she’s a lost woman in a chaotic world.

Americans are like that. It’s impossible to type the melting pot. It bubbles with no accent. The only accent you can accuse Ingrid of having these days is an accent on laughter.

O-CEDAR “THE GREATEST NAME IN HOUSEKEEPING” Untold Story

Mrs. Newman is a fair-haired woman who must have been very handsome when she was young. She is still a fine looking woman and her son bears a marked resemblance to her.

I DON'T feel I am betraying Van's confidence in reporting these facts, for I feel the public is entitled to know why he didn't see his mother after she came to Hollywood. Almost all of Van's followers already know that his father and mother were separated when he was three years old. Van and his father remained in Newport. His mother left.

"I feel," Van said to me, "that I can never do enough for my father." This, I think, was his way of trying to explain that he had not seen Mrs. Newman for fear of hurting his father who had tried so hard to be both parents to him. By no word, however, did he criticize his mother, saying only, "I've often wished my childhood had been a little different; that I had had a mother's guidance like other boys."

Van is thirty years old and has never come close to marrying, regardless of what has been written about his "romances."

"I'll never marry until I know it's for keeps," he said, "I want to know there is no chance of a mistake. Divorce, to me, is tragedy."

Broken marriages are a heartsache to him because they bring to mind too vividly the memories of his own childhood when other boys were taken to the circus, the movies and to school parties with both proud parents beaming on them. For, hard as his father tried in his behalf, it is not possible for a man to manage this alone.

"The impressions of your childhood you carry all through life," he said. "People who think children do not really suffer are crazy. I love kids. Love to be around them."

This is quite true you will find if you look back over his list of friends. What's more, in those households that have children he's just about their most popular visitor.

"I like the warmth and cheer of having kids around me," he said slowly. Then looking directly at me he added, "I get damned lonely, you know."

"You! Lonely?" I gasped. "Why, you are the most sought-after dinner guest in town and you know it."

"But you can get awfully lonely, Louella," he went on, "even with a lot of people around you. Why, when I went home to visit my father in Rhode Island, I thought it was going to be wonderful to see all the old friends and to be back home again. Frankly, I was disappointed. Either you have changed or they have, and try as you will to find a common ground for conversation, your lives and interests have diverged—and there's just nothing to say. If you talk about your life in Hollywood, you're afraid they will think you are bragging. If you don't talk about Hollywood, they think you're stuck up and aloof. If you reminisce—you feel as if you're being patronizing. So the whole thing winds up in a great big embarrassment for everyone concerned."

"It's not that I am not grateful and happy over everything even though it's sometimes tiresome to live like a goldfish in a bowl. I wouldn't give up my kind of life for anything in the world."

"Even the autograph kids who seem to bother so many actors—I love 'em, every doggone one of them. Sometimes I wish they could find a better place to ask for

can make you a "faded photo" of your former self!

When the bloom fades from youthful faces — when a girl's vitality seems to be running down — a Borderline Anemia often may be the reason. Yes, it may be a Borderline Anemia resulting from a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency. Results of medical studies show that up to 68% of the women examined — many men and children — have this blood condition.

Their red blood cells aren't big or red enough to supply full energy to every tissue. And your red blood cells are your body's sole supply line of vigor, you know!

So if you look like a "faded photograph" of the person you might be, you may need Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are formulated to help combat this Borderline Anemia. By restoring red blood cells to normal size and redness, they help restore your natural color and energy. Of course, continuing tiredness, listlessness and pallor may be caused by other conditions, so consult your physician regularly. But when you have this tiring Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast to help build up your blood — your vitality and appeal.

How thousands who are pale and tired because of this blood deficiency may find renewed energy with Ironized Yeast Tablets.

my autograph than from under my hotel window and better hours than midnight — but I stop and remember that I wouldn't be living in my particular hotel if it weren't for them.

That's one of the really grand things about this Johnson boy. They'll tell you at M-G-M that he has never been temperamental. Other actors may find fault with the Golden Lion that roars for them, but not this boy.

"Do you know," he laughed, "I've enjoyed every minute of this two weeks in the hospital? Sounds crazy, doesn't it? But it has given me my first real rest in years. Vacations aren't always a rest. They can be more hectic than your working days. But here I have had a chance to read — and I've read three dozen books — and listen to the radio and they wouldn't let me answer a phone! The best part of all is the opportunity to think, to take stock of yourself — where you've come from and what you're headed toward. In my case, I just want things to keep on coming the way they are. I'm lucky and I know it!"

I thanked Van for the pink and white Easter bunny, perched on a bed of lilies, he sent me. Van caught my eye as I glanced at it. "I sent you Peter Rabbit," he said just like a big kid, "just so you wouldn't get lonesome. Even in the middle of the night when a hospital gets so quiet and lonely you can't feel sorry for yourself with a Peter Rabbit in the room!"

All through the rest of my three months' stay in the Good Samaritan I thought back often over this talk I had had with Van. I believed, and still believe, we cemented a friendship there that will never be broken. It was almost as though I had discovered a part of this almost too popular boy that I might never have known if we hadn't been ill at the same time and I determined that the friendship would not lapse when I got out of the hospital.

We are busy people in Hollywood but real friendship is too rare to ever let it out of your life. But it was a long, long time and I went through and great deal before I was able to get around to taking Van up for the date we made in the hospital to have a Martini when we were both back on our feet. Just a few days ago, I called him up and said, "Will no Minis for me — but are you game for ice cream?"

"Was he? He was over in nothing flat. When he came into my playroom, I thought how wonderfully well he looked, vital and hearty, and that warm, sunny, and serious note I had noticed so strongly in the hospital was overshadowed by his usual high good humor and gift for kidding.

"You look like a glamorous girl," he greeted me. "Darned if you don't."

"You don't look un-streamlined yourself," I tossed back.

"I guess we both had to get sick to get on 'figgers' backs,'" I kidded, "and I'm going to stay on a diet. It's awful tough to get off that candy and those sweets — but I was getting too fat."

He had on a loud plaid shirt that only Bing Crosby would have worn and I asked him if it was preference — or a picture.

"I've never made the list for the ten best-dressed men yet," he reminded me.

I asked him what he was doing — if he was happy. "Sure," he agreed, "right now I'm tennis nuts. Wake up the Gary Coopers every Sunday morning playing on their courts. I'm all full of health again, Lemba — everything's hot off late."

In spite of "keeping his figger" he went over and helped himself to a piece of candy just like the big kid he is.

I didn't say anything because the mood for heart-to-heart talking was behind us and closed chapters were closed chapters.
DOROTHY LAMOUR was an early bird with her Christmas shopping. Faced with three films on her schedule, months ago she bought, wrapped and stored away until Yuletide, lovely gifts. She'll have no last-minute scurrying around to do. So you won't, either, start now to shop!

Gift Hints from the Stars

ANN BLYTH likes to give and receive attractively-packaged, flower-scented soaps, colognes, toilet waters and sachets, either singly, or in sets... Because Maria Montez travels a lot, she appreciates practical, easily tucked-away gifts, such as a manicure kit, bath powder mit, purse-size perfume flacon and small bottled sets of perfume (to offer a fragrance choice). Maria also likes to give these things and the newest make-up and nail polish sets. Especially nice, she thinks, are real or simulated leather cosmetic kits which may double for overnight bags, pocketbooks or jewelry cases. Combination bath sets, in bouquet, spruce, pine or spicy fragrances, also make beautiful gifts. They come in all prices, with various combinations of dusting powder, talcum, cologne, toilet water, soap, bath oil, bubble bath, bath powder mit, body sachet, bath salts, body lotion and bath sachets. These items may be purchased separately, too... June Vincent makes every effort to personalize gifts to men and women friends by having their initials put on cosmetic bottles and kits... Dan Duryea, Charles Korvin and Donald O'Connor have the man's idea about giving generous-size bottles of sophisticated perfumes, cosmetics in beautiful leather cases, and stunning compacts, which is a very nice way to say Merry Christmas to any woman!

For Men Only!

Give that special man, and every other man on your list, cosmetic gifts that are sure to please. Soaps, shaving and after-shaving sets, and eau de cologne are fashioned to good-grooming needs, scented just right for the most discriminating male, and packaged for strictly masculine appeal... And now—a very Merry Christmas to you!
Somehow, somewhere, we'd lost our lovely, thrilling oneness. I didn't realize that I was at fault. Sure, I knew about feminine hygiene... or so I thought. But finally I learned, from my doctor, that the careless, now-and-then care I'd trusted to, was a frequent cause of marriage failure. He said a wife can't afford such neglect... advised my using "Lysol" brand disinfectant for douching—always.

"Divided hearts at our house..."

"Two hearts that beat as one"—that's us again! I wouldn't have believed careful feminine hygiene was so important in married happiness. But my doctor was right! I always use "Lysol" for douching, now, and can recommend its thorough yet gentle cleansing. "Lysol" is thorough—far more so than salt, soda or other homemade solutions. It's a proved germ-killer—it works—and it's so easy and economical to use.

"Now it's one heart again"

The Inner Power

(Continued from page 57) of life, spending hours in solitude to capture the consciousness of the spiritual which Larry Darrell acquired.

"Once," Tyrone said, "my wife remarked that I was becoming more and more like Larry Darrell off the screen."

"Your wife is very intuitive," I said.

Tyrone's life falls into two sections, divided by the war, and it is "The Razor's Edge" which begins the new and more important chapter. The feeling for humanity revealed in his hand began long ago, forming quietly and slowly, coloring his thinking more and more. The war abruptly thrust him from his well-ordered existence into conditions which demanded the very best of him, mentally and physically. It called for strength above that which he possessed. Somewhere along the line, perhaps in the new kinship he found with his fellow men in moments of grave danger, his consciousness of the broader life expanded, his sense of brotherhood with those who make up the world, the good and the bad, opened like a flower in the sun.

The Tyrone Power who came back from three years of war service was not the same Tyrone Power who entered the Marine Corps as a private.

Still there have been other men whose mental and spiritual faculties have been intensified by war and who have returned to civilian life only to gradually lose their idealism in their readjustment to society. It might have happened in Tyrone's case but for the fact that Darryl Zanuck saved the role of Larry Darrell for him—saved it for almost three years. That is another strange piece which fits into the mosaic. It is as though Tyrone had been born to play the hero of "The Razor's Edge."

In breathing life into Larry Darrell, he has progressed beyond measure in his own spiritual development.

It is important in this hand portrait of Tyrone Power to examine the forces which have made him one of the most unusual men in the film colony today.

In the hands of man are the reflection of all that he is and all that he will be. The hands are a seismograph on which are recorded the shocks of childhood, the parental influences, the inborn strengths and weaknesses.

Tyrone's graceful fate line runs to the Mount of Jupiter, which is found beneath the index finger. It signifies leadership in the skills and the arts, and it speaks of ability to be a useful member of society. His creative wealth, extending far beyond the acting art, is attested to by the balancing elements of masculinity and femininity in the shape of his hands and his fingers. The truly great creative being has within himself the combination of the masculine and the feminine. No man ever wrote a great work of art without a strong mixture of the feminine within him, nor has any woman made an impress upon the world of art lacking masculine power.

The Mount of Luna, to be found midway on the outer curve of the hand, and the head line reaching into it, stamp him as an idealistic, imaginative type. His skin texture points to his sensitiveness. He is a broad-minded man, tolerant and forgiving of the weaknesses of others, as the wide space between his heart line and his head line show.

Before I came to his heart line, I knew that emotion must have played a vital part in Tyrone's development as a thinking and deep-feeling man. The heart line told me that and more. Emotion has shaped him and will continue to exert considerable influence over him. In matters of love, his warm, passionate nature is released without restraint. He loves with all his being and gives himself completely. Love has never been casual or light with him. His smooth fingers, another sign of emotion in the human hand, confirm the heart line.

We now come to his parental birthright, which is revealed in his right hand.

I was amazed to find that although there is a great similarity in both hands, the parent hand, dominated by his famous actor father whose name he bears, is a wild, chaotic hand. There are lines of sheer genius in it, but the total effect is an uneven one and lacks proportion.

In Tyrone's own personal hand, the left hand, the lines are balanced. The whirs of a strong subconscious appear in both hands, but only in that of the son is it harnessed and linked firmly with the head line which dips into it. The measure of control in the parent hand comes from Tyrone's mother, a gentle, artistic woman, who taught him to love beauty and value order. Her relationship with her son was extremely beautiful; it was to mother that he turned for consolation through most of his youth. But Tyrone's mother was also restless and torn by the need to constantly move. The parental hand reflects this quality which she had in common with Tyrone's father, though not to the same extent.

But it is the father's unruly, poetic nature which overrides all else. His stormy subconscious compelled him, great actor though he be, to seek escape. He was constantly driven and harassed by feverish impulses throughout his career. His need of solitude to fight the disordered emotions which poured through him was acute. Like his son, the sign of dominance in his profession—the bending of the fate line to Jupiter—was in his hand. Tyrone has the innate sense of rhythm which must have belonged to both of his parents, for the lower knuckles of his two thumbs project in a marked manner. It has enabled him to almost automatically sense the pattern of dreams and has given him remarkable timing. His love of music stems from it.

Tyrone's early life is mirrored in his fate line, which starts deep on the outer part of the hand and brings to mind the picture of a boy given to dreaming. Even today he is prone to retire at times to this "Peter Ibbetson" type of dream world. The broken marriage of his parents is clearly etched in the early formation of the fate line and the shock of this to his happy nature is recorded. Until the age of ten, at least three influences figured in his life—his father, mother and sister. At ten, a strong but painful influence appears and with it a great disappointment. It is my conclusion that it was at this point that he began to understand the erratic nature of his father, accepting his many weaknesses, putting behind himself his childhood illusions and even loving him in a curious, sly way.

His sister gave him comfort and companionship during the years when the adult world of his father and mother seemed harsh and terrifying. Tyrone was a physically weak child and since there was only a slight age difference, he turned to his delicate, affectionate sister to assuage his loneliness. She has been a strong influence in his life and even today the line of influence continues.

New traces of influence, many of them, appear in that portion of the fate line which begins after his father's death. These were lean days for him, days in which every dram of his inherent persistence was drawn to survive the disappointments of Hollywood and Broadway. Because of his warm-hearted nature, he reached out to absorb the love and devotion of others and to return it in full measure. The line of influence which belongs to Annabell begins shortly before their marriage, which is marked in Tyrone's hair at the age of twenty-five. It is an influence line which one would expect to find in the marriage of a sensitive, serious young man and a vivacious young woman—even at times, cutting at others. If not altogether an harmonious line, it does denote different cultures blending together, stimulation, great attraction—In short, an exciting influence.

A TRIANGLE is formed on Tyrone's head line at the age of twenty-eight. This type of triangle signifies a significant new experience, vigorous in force. For Tyrone it was World War II.

I told him that war service for him, whether he cared to admit it or not, had been a baptism of fire, shocking in its impact. But from the beginning, he had hardened his will to it and had learned to endure it stoically. I told him, too, that while strong men have broken down to cry on the battlefield, his own agony in seeing his comrades killed was unutterable and almost too much to bear.

"All that you say is true," he admitted, smiling gently and wisely, loving truth in all its forms.

We talked for a time of the lessons in human comradeship which he had learned during the war and of the spirit of sacrifice which had come to fruition within him. Like Larry Darrell, his spiritual awakening had grown out of the war and, like Larry, he had returned to his old life with a feeling that he was a small link in the chain of humanity and that from now on he must shed the outworn in place of the absolute.

"Since I have known this new philosophy," he told me, "people seem drawn toward me in a much stronger and in a more decisive way than ever before."

The future is a golden one for Tyrone Power.

There will be many new influences in his life in the years to come.

The deepening of his faith line and its turning to Jupiter lead me to believe that he will make a distinctive contribution in production and direction to the motion-picture industry. It will be fresh, new and adventurously.

He will give of himself to the world of tomorrow which the veterans of the war and the new generations will make. With millions of others, his is the understanding that as different colors compose the beauty of the rainbow, so do different cultures combine to create the human race in its nobility.

He stands for the new post-war American way which is determined to fight fiercely for the belief that all the peoples of the world can live peacefully together, as our great country has so eloquently demstrated in its history.

I myself marveling at his generosity of spirit and his ethical riches.

I had looked at the hand of a great man in the making.

THE END
Pictures Go Places

"This is Tombstone, Arizona," Tombstone! he yelped. "Then I'm three hundred miles off my course."
He glanced again at his map. "Tain't here," he said.
"Well, it's a replica."
"No replica on my map..."
"It's a movie company on location," said the workman hurrying away.

One hundred and eight-seven miles off the beaten track the traveler had come upon a complete town of forty-seven buildings where 200 Hollywood people were making a picture. Three months earlier there had been nothing there but a small Indian trading post, a handful of Navajos and the magnificent scenery.

The company that bewildered the man from Wyoming had a definitely "rugged" cast to it. Forty miles from the nearest phone, the cast and crew of "My Darling Clementine" really roughed it. They were plunged right into the elements that produced the desperadoes of the old West.

Linda Darnell claimed, "In one day we had four inches of snow with breakfast, a sand storm over a baked desert for lunch and a cloudburst for dinner."

"I'm working up to rival John Fred- eries," grinned Jane Darwell. "I design the fanciest anodes—for the face. And still Linda and Cathy Downs and I inhaled half of the sands of Arizona."

The company lived in tents or at the small Indian trading post. There were no newspapers, no radio. What did they do, these Hollywood people, in the midst of a desert wilderness for two months?

They worked! Hard! They herded cattle, they staged a clan fight, they rode for hours on wiry little Indian ponies, all for the silver screen.

For recreation, director John Ford and Henry. Fonda played a running game of "pitch" in their off hours. Linda painted in oils. Vic Mature pitched horseshoes with John Ireland—or went to the occasional "sawdance" with Tim Holt.

At the latter, Mature was a shining success. A silver dollar is given to a sawdancer if you have finished dancing with to console her for the loss of a partner. An old Indian custom! Mature ran out of silver dollars, fickle fellow, and put new life into the dance by giving canned goods instead.

There was the rattlesnake question.

These snakes are sacred to the Navajos and cannot be killed. So Linda, fresh from Ciro's, would step side a giant rattler and production would halt until "Old Fats," native keeper of the snake pit, came and removed him with his forked stick. The boys side stepped a bit too when Ford's two pet gunmen fired live bullets at them. To achieve realism and facial tension, Fonda, Mature, Tim Holt and Ward Bond had their faces carefully and closely missed by a pair of sharp shooters. Rugged? Fonda thought so. "All the time I was in the Pacific," he commented, "I never had a shot fired at me. Look what happens when I come home."

Tim Holt grinned. "With me, it doesn't seem to matter if it's Tokyo or Hollywood. Someone's always throwing lead in my direction."

Sometimes it isn't the Hollywood company that sets the stage or the tone of a location. If they are simply filming a reality the tone is already there. Such was the case with the tremendous harvesting scenes for "The Big Haircut." The great lumbering combines, those harvest machines that cut the wheat, separate it and bag it in one operation, were actually cutting wheat. And cutting wheat at that time was a deadly serious business.

Alan Ladd, star of the picture, stood in the grain elevator letting the stuff trickle through his fingers like sand. "Brother, do you know what this stuff is?" There was awe in his tone.

The most important harvest in our memory, sweeping up through the great grain lands of the West, was being caught by the cameras for the screen. 21,000 acres of it on one farm, twenty-six combines, "The Big Haircut" company who had rented the stand of wheat had to agree to cut it—and was honor bound not to hold up the harvest nor the men and machines which must move north on schedule to follow the steadily ripening grain.

The slogan around the hotel where the company was quartered was W. W. W. —"Wheat Won't Wait." Actors and crew worked from sun-up to sunset and all day Sunday getting the shots the script called for, but they were also aware that they were taking part in the real "haircut" which was to feed America and the starving peoples of Europe.

Back in the hotel the company was tired and quiet. They drifted from room to room visiting, usually winding up in the suite belonging to Alan Ladd and his charming wife Sue Carol, where they were always welcome. But playtime was limited for this crew. The actual business on hand was to get the wheat cut and it wasn't entirely simple.

because PHILIP MORRIS tobaccos are PASTEURIZED!

Here's double assurance of PHILIP MORRIS quality:

1. PHILIP MORRIS tobaccos are pasteurized for your protection...purified and mellowed by radiant heat for a CLEAN, FRESH, PURE smoke!

2. PHILIP MORRIS tobaccos are Thermo-vized...yes, the flavor's ALL yours because it's sealed right into the blend! Thermo-vize forces the juices of choice, ripe tobaccos to intermingle...retains the natural flavor of tobacco, just as pressure-cooking retains the natural flavor of food.

Remember this...next time you buy cigarettes.

Pasteurized for Your Protection...Thermo-vized for Better Taste
Out in the fields fire was a thing to dread and smoking was prohibited. Sue Ladd kept her fingers crossed each morning while she scanned the sky—for rain meant fatal delay and endangered the stand. Directing the big combines necessitated a studio man to every few machines and an intricate system of signal flags. All day long the harvesters worked back and forth across the fields like an army of weird tanks with the general sitting high on a platform in his director’s chair beside his cameras. This was a movie location, but it was also an epic in harvesting wheat and there was no make-believe about it.

Sometimes a company will be sent to a place that is lovely enough yet close enough to provide a sort of vacation spot for the family. When “Ramrod” was filmed in Utah it started out as a family affair with star Veronica Lake taking direction from husband Andre de Toth. The company was based at a lodge with charming cabins and Veronica sent her for her small daughter who flew up to join her. Joel McCrea’s youngest son came up with his mother. Don DeFore’s pretty dark wife brought their Penny and the Lloyd Bridges had their little girl with them. It all added up to a pretty homey affair. If the Bridges wanted to go up to the lodge for dinner, Mrs. DeFore “listened” for their offspring—and vice versa.

Veronica loves to play games and each night found a crowd sitting under the trees in front of her cabin playing “ghosts” or “Guggenheim.” Sometimes Preston Foster unlimbered his guitar and they all made music.

Out on the sets, which included an authentic ghost town, the principals turned candid camera fiends. They shot the scenery, the native wranglers, the animals and each other. The prize went to a series in which Veronica got a picture of Joel who was busy snapping Don who got a shot of Veronica. And they were each so intent they didn’t know they were being photographed.

There was a touch of the “rugged” about this outfit too. “All you need to be in this picture is a large dash of mountain goat,” commented Don DeFore after spending a full morning climbing around a narrow ledge in leather-soled boots with nothing below him but a sheer drop into a most picturesque but very distant canyon.

The big fire scene in “Ramrod” turned out to be almost too authentic and Veronica’s enthusiasm for photography might have been fatal. A farmhouse and barn which had been erected for the sole purpose of being burnt to the ground were drenched in kerosene to ensure a right good flame. With a fire scene it must be right the first time—even Hollywood can’t burn the same thing twice. Hours were spent preparing for this one and rehearsing it.

The big moment came, the fire was touched off and it burned. How it burned! It just exploded in the dry hot sun. The Indian woman who was to escape for the script escaped just in the nick of time and flew right on past the camera and into the river. So did some of the spectators. One of the cameras caught fire and was rescued with its precious film content by a quick-thinking cameraman who dunked it in the river first and carried it out of danger wrapped in a dripping blanket.

It was Joel McCrea, mounted to ride into the action, who spotted Veronica hanging over a fence, so busy with her camera she didn’t realize the danger she was in. He picked her off the fence, swung her onto his saddle and rode away with her just like a genuine melodrama.

Humor that equals Durante films at their best existed when the man with the nose and twinkling Lauch Melchior were put on a beautiful sleep island in the Great Lakes where there has never been a motor car.

From the time their company arrived to make “This Time for Keeps!” to find that the horses—which have acted as beasts of burden on Mackinac Island for a century or more—drew the line at hauling movie equipment, till the day Durante and Melchior cruised round the Island on a tandem bicycle—usual method of transportation among the natives—carefully reinforced in the rear to bear the Metropolitan star’s ample frame, pedaled shortened in front to meet the comedian’s short legs, it was all strictly for fun.

It was fun for the hot guests as well. A million dollars’ worth of talent gave for them, beginning with an aquacade by the luscious Esther Williams and ending with an impromptu floor show at night when Melchior and Durante, not to mention the smooth violinist Jimmy De sprout, couldn’t resist the temptation to keep in trim.

Of course they had their problems. When it came to filming a swimming scene with Esther and little Sharon McManus it developed that Sharon turned an odd shade of blue in cool water—and that the Technicolor film faithfully reproduced it. Solved—by bringing in two generators and heating the pool to 83 degrees.

But even when a company moves into an elegant location there are still drawbacks. The company that went to swank Jasper Park Lodge in Canada to make “Emperor Waltz” received a written communication from their studio to the effect that women would not wear slacks around the Lodge and that men would wear coats and ties.

the gang took to dancing in the recreation hall where music was piped up from the dance floor below. It promptly became known to one and all as the "Wreck Hall."

The trained dogs who traveled two thousand miles from Hollywood were satisfactorily rioty, however. They brought their own stand-ins and were fed the very best beef when the rest of the outfit dined on the more readily procurable delicacy, buffalo steak.

Joan Fontaine provided most of the excitement.

While Bing Crosby quietly pitched horseshoes or played baseball, Joan successively went swimming the first night at ten o'clock only to discover that it was against the rules, went canoeing in a boat which she did not know was condemned as unsafe (and her amiable companion Roland Culver was forced to bail hurriedly with an old tin can) and caught the first fish in the company in a lake where fishing was banned.

The gift that Hollywood, not to be outdone in elegance, left to Canada was a tribute to the green man. "Green men" are not—as you might expect—Superman's second cousins, but rather nature's first assistants. If the script calls for an orchard, a garden or a large batch of cacti in a certain spot, it is up to the green man to see that it grows promptly where it is required to grow.

At Jasper, in Leach Lake, which is part of Jasper National Park, the green men had built an island complete with bushes, trees and growing grass. On the farewell day of the location this little gem was presented to Major Wood, Superintendent of Jasper National Park, in a full fledged ceremony by Miss Fontaine. An orchestra on the island played the national anthems, the Stars and Stripes were lowered and the Canadian flag was furled above Emperor Island.

So, traveler, beware. The island you think is nature's masterpiece may be Hollywood's synthetic best and that cowhand you see dancing with the pretty girl on an Arizona ranch might be Joel McCrea.

“We're the Ray-gans”

(Continued from page 55) more universal. Jane admires him tremendously for his unshakable endeavors. She's sympathetic and respects his viewpoints. But she's learned from experience that wry, tongue-in-cheek encouragement, he's wound up for the evening. So now she has a system.

There are three changes I'd like to make around the house,” she starts out.

Ronnie, on the board of the Hollywood Chapter of the American Veterans Committee, as well as the Screen Actors Guild, sits there thinking.

“This is great, he answers abstractedly. "I couldn't have done it better myself.

"But I haven't told you yet!"

"You know, Janie," he blithely continues, "I had nearly four years' time to fully realize what freedom is. I missed my work. Not just being a movie star, but I missed the actual thing of acting. I love it. I love the challenge, the interesting and enjoyable things you find when you get a good script."

He also did a lot of thinking about freedom—and the lives lost.

"There's one thing I now ask myself. If I could talk to a man who just died, what are the things he would say? What advice would he give? He'd talk about the things he wanted, not once and a movie deal, but always wanted to do. Not seeing the places he always wanted to see. I don't want to be that man when I am no longer here. Things go by us and they can't be ignored."

"I've got news for you," answers Jane pointedly. "I'm not interested."

BUT she is, very, very interested. Wisely, she realizes that if Ronnie is to do anything about these things close to his heart, he must survive too. Tactfully, she assumes a more senior viewpoint. It's a big joke out of things and thereby lessens the tension. Like the day they got the extension telephone by the swimming pool.

"I think there was an underground plot to get me out of that pool," she muses. "Just as sure as I'd get wet, I'd have to run into the house to talk to someone. Finally, they released equipment and got the extension. That first Sunday the servants were off. Michael, Maureen and I settled ourselves in our bathing suits.

"Hours went by. Not one single call. Finally, at four o'clock the phone rang. I'm sure Ronnie rang for quick fast talking. Yes, someone wanted to know! I wouldn't be knowing, I answered. I haven't seen him for days!

"Even when they go to parties the crusade is still on. The ladies find themselves talking to each other and trying not to look bored. The gentlemen are huddled together in a far corner. Jane smiles sweetly, waves to herself and automatically does her stuff.

"Okay, Reagan," she says kiddingly. "Break it up. Come on over and talk to the girls. They love you and he's especially grateful to those who have been faithful. "King-Roy" at long last was recently released in Europe. The enthusiastic response gratifying. Very gratifying too, Jane's presence."

So there's no reason why the portrait of Ma Baxter shouldn't keep its place over the fireplace while the gold-lettered "No Uniform" is erased forever from a window. And the happy Ray-gans splash in their pool—or Jane (tongue in cheek) says to her philosophical husband, "Go away, you bother me. Go get the world straightened out and then maybe I'll talk to you!"

Rest assured, if it were up to Ronnie, he's the one man who could do it!

Portrait of a Royal Canadian

His father, Caleb Pidgeon, owned wholesale and retail general merchandise stores throughout Canada. He doesn’t believe in fortunetellers and goes to sleep the moment he hits the pillow. He has blue eyes and dark hair.

He never drinks beer.

He wears a size thirteen shoe.

He married a girl in 1931 and has a daughter, Edna, by a previous marriage. He is not a fatalist and gets so excited in a political or social argument that he tries to shout out his opponents. He is very fond of politics.

He drinks twelve to fourteen glasses of water a day.

He attended grade school and high school in St. John, and the University of New Brunswick at Fredericton. His first screen appearance was in “The Mannequin,” starring Dolores Costello.

He once worked in Boston as a bank runner. He likes candy of all kinds and has never studied music, acquiring his knowledge from his father.

He wishes the nights were warmer in Hollywood.

He was “born on skates” but has never been able to master the ski.

He has never owned a boat, dislikes night clubs and nurtures a secret yearning to do something someday to fit his role in “The Life of Sam Houston.” He excelled in soccer and hockey at college.

He is “fond of chocolate sundae splattered with walnuts” and has never been known to display “nerves.”

He doesn’t play poker and was marked for the theater by Elsie Janis who met him in the War Department.

World War I, and several years later became her leading man in the London revue, “At Home.”

He hates golf.

He has never had a singing role on the stage, speaks no other languages and never gets seasick. He has visited every state in the Union.

He is six feet, three inches tall.

Walter Pidgeon is a firm believer in hunches and likes birds in cages “that can do something—like parrots and singing canaries.”

He is a big football fan and has visited Grant’s Tomb and the New York Aquarium. He rejected the Boyer role in “Gaslight” but declares that he had known Lgird Bergman was going to be in it he would have taken the part.

He is fond of playing bridge, gin rummy and casino; and has lived for twelve years in a lovely Spanish Monterey home in Beverly Hills. He has had meals at the Ritz and smoked the best cigars and never feels “lame.”

He is a Canadian and has visited Canada in World War I because of his extreme youth, although he had overstated his age, but he was accepted a year later and just when he was about to ship for France he was caught in a serious accident between two rolling gun carriages and had to spend seventeen months in the hospital.

He is not too good on a ballroom floor and prefers a shower to a tub.

He would go without dinner rather than eat alone.

He is forever unconsciously humming or singing “The Londonderry Air” and never passes a piano without stopping to play it.

He is too tolerant by nature to have any phobias, enjoys “Mignon” above all other operas and is always getting mad at things which he has misplaced and cannot find.

He cannot use a typewriter.

He once smoked two packs of cigarettes a day, now only one.

He is an addict of the “Snuffy Smith” and “X-9” comic strips. He has learned by heart penmanship, phonetics, music, and political and current affairs, and his favorite singers are Helen Traubel, John Charles Thomas, Ezio Pinza, Jimmy Melton, Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra.

He never undertakes anything he cannot finish, is very fond of salmon and trout fishing, and has read “Jane Eyre” five times, it having been his dream for years to someday enact the role finally played by Orson Welles.

He is partial to grays and blues in his suits and likes garlic in salads and roast lamb.

He subscribes to no book clubs.

WALTER PIDGEON is both realist and romanticist and says he likes coloratura sopranos “if they look like Lily Pons.” He has never read Plato, likes driving with his radio on and hopes someday to do a stage play again.

His most troublesome companion is an ever-present poodle.

He is an omnivorous reader of travel books and biographies. He is very punctual and habitually goes out between the acts for a smoke.

His childhood idol was an old sea captain and this influence still remains with him. He is an authority on the notorious pirates of history and a walking encyclopedia on buccaneers. He loves the smell of leather so much that he frequently polishes his own boots even though they don’t need it.

He abhors female choruses.

He had such a loathing for mathematics that he couldn’t get out of school quick enough. He enjoys cocktails of any kind.

He never eats lunch when not working and only lightly then, “because there isn’t anything else to do during the lunch hour.” He always does his own shopping.

He likes giving small intimate parties, usually has a light breakfast of a glass of orange juice or milk, and declares his home has more music than beauty in it than any building in the world. He experiences stage-fright every time he appears on the legitimate stage.

He dislikes dining where there is dancing and music. He is lucky in gambling.

He cannot bring himself to throw anything away, as a consequence of which his wife periodically sorts out “the junk” and gives it away.

He drinks little coffee, has never gone in for astrology and sentimentally hangs on to an old make-up box, frequently repaired, given to him twenty years ago by Elsie Janis.

He is not a claustrophobe, has never tried writing fiction and is a fanatic gardener. He has a fund of knowledge about soil, time, plants, etc.

His feet are always propped up when reading.

He likes oysters or clams “anywhere, any time,” and his first professional appearance was as a singer with Elsie Janis at Aeolian Hall, New York. He chews gum.

His only jewelry is a sapphire ring given to him by his wife. He has traveled in South America, the West Indies and every country in Europe except Spain and the Scandinavian peninsula.

His answer to the question: “What picture do you wish you had made?” elicited, “So many!”

He had two French puddles, both of them now in the Army. He likes roller-coasters, merry-go-rounds, personal appearances and window shopping in New York.

He doesn't believe he has any hidden talents for writing, painting or composing music. He doesn't care for horse-racing and incessantly plays backgammon on the set between scenes; he is very unhappy if he can't find someone to play with him.
He thinks he might someday take up script writing... "only because scripts are so bad." He plays a fair game of tennis.
He is a lazy correspondent but answers business letters promptly.
He doesn't like cats and would rather live in California than anywhere else in the world. He believes his best screen work to date was in "Mrs. Parkington" and "How Green Was My Valley."

He has never been able to indulge in just plain loafing, he has to be active every moment. He last rode in a streetcar—a cable car—in San Francisco three years ago.
He has explored New York's Metropolitan Museum more times than he can remember. His favorite subjects at school were literature, drama, geography and history.
He prefers vocal concerts to any other and recently had his garage moved to widen the garden, assisting the process by taking a sledge hammer and breaking up the cement driveway.
He has developed the habit of fasting one day a week.
He is an excellent raconteur and delights his friends with tall tales of bizarre adventure in out-of-the-way places. He goes to see a movie every chance he gets.
He plans someday to buy a small boat and with a few tested companions sail out into the Pacific until land is sighted.
He replied with one word when asked if there was something he would like to do which he was now unable to do; that word was: "Retire."

Jane Powell is getting all slicked up to meet you in a story by Maxine Arnold in January Photoplay
What Should I Do?

I have been married since I was seventeen and have been tied down with the children ever since. I love my husband dearly, but he has settled into the lethargy of married life and prefers to sit at home rather than take me to an occasional movie or dance. Other young couples with children go out once in a while, but he refuses to do so.

Recently, several men I have known for a long time have asked me to go dancing, and I have accepted.

Now I don't want you to think that all I care about is a good time, but after I have taken care of the children all day I need to relax in the evening. My husband objects to these so-called dates and often argues about them, saying that it is tantamount to being untrue and that I don't love him any more. That is absurd.

I am afraid that if you don't find a solution, my marriage may end in divorce.

Georgina A.

It would be superfluous for me to tell you that you are making the mistake of your life. By reading between the lines I know that you recognize the fact full well. It is quite true that you need recreation. But no woman needs recreation so desperately that she must jeopardize the welfare of her children, the happiness of her husband and her own good name in the process.

You married too young, that much I will concede. Nature gave you your children somewhat more rapidly than doctors advise. But the fact remains that since these things are so, you must face them as a woman and not as a selfish, irresponsible and rebellious child.

You must stop having dates, of course. Discuss your needs with your husband, not petulantly, but pleasantly and in as constructive an attitude as possible.

I am convinced that he must be an indulgent man, so if properly approached, he will surely arrange for the two of you to plan some recreation once or two evenings a week.

You will be much happier then, instead of feeling sorry for yourself, you will thank heaven for your four healthy children and your devoted husband.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

What would you do if, accidentally, you found out that your father had been in love with another woman for three years, and had written to her all that time? Also, that they were planning to meet in New York for two weeks' vacation? I hope you won't think that I am just imagining things because with my own eyes I have seen letters substantiating these facts.

My mother and father have been married twenty-seven years, but they are so different from each other that I wonder why they ever married. They are unable to agree on any single subject.

I have a brother and a twin sister who know nothing about this, of course, because I have not discussed it with them. Since I made this discovery, I can scarcely bear to be in the same room with my father.

Can you please give me some advice?

Arden F.

I am constantly amazed by the number of letters we receive in this department from daughters, sisters, and other relatives who have discovered what they believe to be an irregularity in the marital life of someone dear to them. Ordinarily the letters indicate that the person who discovered the irregularity has been eavesdropping or reading mail not addressed to himself and certainly not meant for his eyes.

Knowing nothing of your family's life, nor of any of the people involved in the situation you have described, I cannot, of course, express any sort of opinion, except this: You, yourself, are at fault. The world is full of things, the existence of which we cannot change and knowledge of which will only make us wretched.

I think you should forget the revelation contained in your letter to me; most assuredly you should never refer to it in conversation with another person.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
I married when I was not quite eighteen, and two months afterward my husband asked for a divorce. I was terribly shocked and couldn't imagine what was wrong. He was in the service at the time, so we didn't see much of one another. His only contribution to our marriage was letters telling of his association with other women.

I started divorce proceedings, but by the time the papers were drawn he was overseas. He asked to be given another chance, so I agreed. However, after having spent a year in the Pacific, he told me when he was discharged that he had thought it over and he still wanted a divorce.

I would be perfectly willing to give him his freedom if it weren't for my mother. I have planned to go back to school for six months to get my high-school diploma, so I am not afraid of the future. However, my mother absolutely refuses to allow me to see an attorney. She says there would only be other men in my life, all probably worse than this boy.

So at present my life consists of my husband nagging me for a divorce, and my mother refusing to let me give it to him.

How can I deal with these two people?

Susanne W.

When a person is caught between two strong opposing forces, the intelligent thing to do is to withdraw and let them fight it out between themselves.

The next time your husband brings up this legal question, why don't you suggest that he stop giving you so much trouble and discuss the whole affair with your mother?

I see no reason why you should be in the middle of this sad tug of war.

Claudette Colbert

Have you a problem which seems to have no solution? Would you like the thoughtful advice of

Claudette Colbert?

If you would, write to her in care of Photoplay, 8949 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood 46, California, and if Miss Colbert feels that your problem is of general interest, she'll consider answering it here. Names and addresses will be held confidential for your protection.
That Romantic Look

(Continued from page 48) Sparkling, because she tries them well, gets enough rest, doesn't forever hide behind very dark glasses or indulge in orgies of sweets. And because instead of plucking her eyebrows until they're artificially thin or arched lines she leaves them the way they are, one slightly more arched than the other.

Cosmetics applied with a bold hand are death to the romantic look, especially around the eyes. Mascara the tips of your lashes lightly. Keep your eyelds clear and clean except for the least touch of petroleum jelly to add to your eyes' sparkle. And pluck your eyebrows only until they're a clean line which can be kept smooth by daily brushing.

Tired eyes, of course, aren't to be tolerated. Any good eyewash or boric acid and water (two teaspoons of boric acid dissolved in a tumbler of hot water and allowed to cool) used with an eye cup work magic. So do exercises. After a day under studio lights many stars rest their eyes by changing the focus. To do this hold a pencil ten inches from your face. Look at it for a moment. Then look off at the farthest corner of the room. Look back at the pencil. Look off at the corner again. And so on.

Another thing! If you wear eyeglasses, be obvious about it. Choose frames of a flattering color which are shaped to emphasize your type of face. Joan Bennett, wearing the first jewel-encrusted frames I ever saw, was the belle of a Hollywood party that was packed with glamour.

Jeanne Crain also treats her skin well. She loves the beach and outdoors. She doesn't, however, go in for an Arabian tan. This can be exotic and exciting, I know, but it often is not as romantic or as appealing as a skin so clear a blush shows occasionally.

Above all, if you would have a romantic look, select your lipstick carefully and apply it sparingly. Lipstick that is too vivid or too heavy is the reverse of attractive. And be sure to set your lipstick so it doesn't smear or rub off on glasses or silverware. Powder over it lightly. And remove excess powder by pressing your mouth gently against a cleansing tissue.

Nail enamel must be chosen with thought also. It should complement and dramatize the shape and texture of your hands, not overshadow them.

Greatly to be desired is a slender figure. Proper diet and exercise will achieve this. But the loveliest of all figures will avail you nothing if you do not have a good carriage. As you walk and as you dance hold yourself proudly, your head high. Move easily without unnecessary motion. Watch yourself especially on the stairs. Be sure you do not ascend with your head pitched forward and your hips sticking into midair or descend with a horsey clatter that's horrible both to hear and to see.

Music is important to romance, of course. So I say listen to your voice. Let it be low and soft and know when it should rest. To speak well and listen well are important. The romantic lady talks well. And she neither gossips nor exaggerates. Here, in truth as beauty does. Men are afraid of catty women who are forever sniping at another's charms. Therefore, watch your words and the modulation of your voice so you do not talk away your charm.

Listen to your laughter too. Let it come easily, especially when you're with boys who had little to laugh at for too long. Laugh at the silly things you used to do together. Laugh for the sweet sake of laughter. And if you hear your laugh sound hysterical, giddy or loud, tone it down, oh, do tone it down.

Easy enough to say, "Speak gently. Laugh softly," I know. The tone of our voice and laughter generates within us. When we're worried or rushed, it's in our voice and our laughter that hysteria will manifest itself. Jeanne Crain, young as she is, knows this. Unlike many of the young players, she doesn't rush, rush, rush, fearful to stop lest she miss something. She insists upon enough leisure to keep her wits about her. She would rather miss a hundred things than sacrifice her time for thinking and reading and visiting with the family she loves, and so doing, retains her composure.

Serenity is the very wellspring of a romantic look. In it you have the beginning of the smooth brow, the easy carriage, the lovely voice, the gentle smile. This Christmas with our men home, surely we should know serenity. So let us look happy and contented and starry eyed.

Wholesomeness and naturalness, health and serenity...these things work together to provide a romantic look. And drama is not amiss. Candlelight. The flattery of a fan. Soft white shoulders. A locket at the neck. A black velvet ribbon or a string of cultured pearls to highlight the delicacy of a good skin. A rose pinned in your hair. Drama, by all means! But just a little, not too much. For the romantic look is ever artful, born of taste and discrimination. Soon now we enter the magic season of carols and mistletoe. Let's make it the most wonderful yuletide yet. Let's, like Jeanne Crain, have a romantic look this Christmas.

Can't Keep Grandma In Her Chair

She's as Lively as a Youngster—Now her Backache is better

Many suffer from headache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass waste in a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, nervousness, frequent or scanty passages with alarming and burning sometimes shows there's something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, name brand, and save up to 40c per 40grams. Doan's give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

"Casanova," she proclaimed, working a synthesis. That is a name with a record for no failures with women, either misses or matrons. Cassanova, true to record, never fails to satisfy, according to misses and matrons.

The more feminine the female, the more feline, ranging from back-fence prima donna to lioness, queen of the jungle. La belle star Tierney would be spotted in any jungle, she's a natural in this jungle which we whimsically call civilization. Tierney tamed all agree with Mr. Cassini that man must dominate his pets every second if he hopes to preserve his status quo and solvency. They carry pistols, whips and chains as show of authority, rather than with brutal intent, on entering the lair. Pistols and whips are unthinkable in approaching Miss Tierney, and she offers the chair with a cordiality not shown by her jungle prototype, except when hungry.

WHAT you mistake for langour is really composure. She is relaxed as a panther. This was not always so. Back in 1949 at making her first picture, "The Return of Frank James," her eyes became puffed and inflamed, and she had the jumpy. Oleg swam into her vision just then, a startling apparition for any eye. He had arrived from New York to design costumes for Paramount. Instantly, and without a doctor's license, he assumed the care of the afflicted Miss Tierney. Diagnosis: Nerves. Prescription: Marriage. They eloped to Las Vegas. Result: Cured.

But Gene has never been satisfied that she had no wedding dress—and pictures in b-to-see it first. It was not until Oleg designed the exquisite wedding dress for "The Razor's Edge" that her dream came true. She had the pictures made in it.

Mrs. Cassini is crowned with intimate perception for her attractions, too obvious for clocking in a family publication.

"All dress credits are due my husband, thank you," she says gallantly.

"Yes," gallantly agrees Oleg. "She only dresses out of love to me. She is a New England girl; clothes mean little." Why should they? Think of seeing-eye diplomat, swigging eyeliner.

Her wonderful complexion is testimonial to soap and water and a well-rationed diet of everything.

Around the studio she is known as the gal who knows what she wants and gets it. Her investigatory campaign for drooping make-up in pictures has been crowned at last with "The Razor's Edge." In this she wears only lipstick and, out of loyalty to Oleg, clothes.

"I can promise myself a dozen mouths," she says, swabbing on one for the Gare St. Lazare scene. "It took me two years to find that nature is better at these things. How I paint over the original..."

"Masterpiece," caps a rapt onlooker.

"Thank you," says she, without missing a stroke.

She never misses a "thank you" either; the graciousness of a sensitive woman who has poise within and without. Her swell manners are svelt testimonial for progressive grade school, Bridgeport, Connecticut, for St. Margaret's in Waterbury, for Miss Farmer's in Farmington and for Brillmont in Switzerland at Lautsanne.

When she was ten our little super-duper shipped all by herself to Europe to take on a load of Old World culture. She returned from Lautsanne and Paris brimming with feeling for Bach and Brahms and geysering French with the sparkling loquacity of a Versailles fountain. Hardly had she set foot on the homeland than she was afforded by our crude, crass materialism as exemplified in her mother's greeting: "What are we going to do with you, you're so fat!"

Our dreamboat had been taking on a load of French pastry along with culture and had a displacement of 140 pounds.

At about the same age, young Oleg Cassini was bustling around Paris. It is his wife's pleasure to tell how he foxtrotted old dress designer Patou by sketching a hundred of his dress models adding improvements and taking them to Florence where his mother had a dress shop. Soon everyone in Italy was saying, "Why go to Paris and pay those prices when Countess Cassini has the better models?"

With his gift for embezzling ideas, young master Oleg was plainly marked by fate for Hollywood. Eight years of Greek and Latin classics at the University of Florence equipped him further for the Athens of America and his polished bride-to-be. He sailed for New York with his mother and brother Igor, whose education at the University of Athens marked him for the classic column and Socratic toga of Cholly Knickerbocker.

OLEG CASSINI is a gentleman of singularly level head and variegated cultures, but his character by the book has the Russian sweetness delighting the American heart.

A Russian with Italian name, he was born in Paris, partly by choice and partly as convenience to his parents who were the first Russians connected with the Russian embassy. His grandfather Arthur had been the Czar's ambassador to the court of Teddy Roosevelt when "Princess" Alice was married. Oleg was five when his mother returned to seeing his native land, Mother Russia. The name "Oleg" is a Russification of "Olaf." Swedes ruled Russia several centuries and left a lot of Olafs around. Oleg's family name was Cassini-Lowiowski. Cassini-Lowiowski was adopted by maternal ancestors who four generations back came from Italy.

The Löweński lived on a politically shifty border land. They would be Polish one week, Russian the next. Oleg Löweński was King of Poland for a day. The opposition party shot him at midnight. Next day the royal Löweńskis were New Deal Ukrainians. Oleg, lad of destiny, had the illustrious dropouts of Russia less time than is required by an American tourist to compose a book about it. The Czar had been liquidated. Kerensky tittered off. Oleg made what generals term a strategic skedaddle before Bolshies could boot his small buttress out.

With title of Count and little else Oleg Cassini was a man without a country. The League of Nations gave him a Nantzen passport which made him the ward of all nations. He was citizen of none until Uncle Sam dotingly adopted him, gave him citizenship papers and two days later a GI dog tag with his youthful draft number.

Today Oleg Cassini, still young, appears slightly sardonic. His humor is deadpan. It is good enough to pass with Tierney, who is a firm believer in laughter.

"We amuse ourselves by assuming certain characters without becoming them," says Oleg cryptically. "Gene is very funny." "Is the Superwoman vulnerable in any

Your Gold Medal Award Vote

Many of you have been querying us about casting your votes in George Gallup's Audience Research Poll for PHOTOPLAY's Gold Medal Awards to the most popular actor, actress and picture of the year.

Believe it or not, you have already cast your vote. You may not have done it in person, but it was actually recorded and will show up in the results. Here is how the Poll works.

There are nearly ninety million movie-goers in this country. It would take Gallup and his staff many years to interview each individual. But Gallup discovered years ago that by interviewing a certain number of people, he could tell from the answers what the country as a whole was thinking on that subject.

If you yourself don't happen to run across a Gallup interviewer, you may be sure that in the town or street next to yours, someone like yourself has given the very same answer you would. Gallup knows that when he finds out what enough of each age and occupation group thinks, he will know what all of them think.

In other words, he samples the population just as you sample a box of candy. You don't have to eat all to know it's all good.

So, why not take your vote for the winners of PHOTOPLAY'S Gold Medal Awards. If there are enough movie-goers in the country who think the way you do, you may be sure the results we announce in the February issue will be your choice.

JOLSON STORY—THE—Columbia: A life story, with plenty of life in it, this Technicolor film will leave American audiences aglow. Al Jolson's heydays are brought back magnificently by Larry Parks and a splendid supporting cast, including Evelyn Keyes and William Demarest. A gold-papered package of good songs and good music. (Nov.)

KILLERS, THE—Universal: Here's a fast action thriller with a Hemingway plot that will make strong men quiver. Two killers enter a town at night and one man is murdered. There's good old-fashioned gangster play-acting with Edmond O'Brien as an insurance investigator who digs up some startling facts. Ava Gardner as a modern Moll and Burt Lancaster as the murdered man. (Nov.)

LADY LUCK—RKO: You'll get some un inhibited laughs at Frank Morgan's antics as the insurance man who's reduced to a three-dollar-a-week allowance from his granddaughter Barbara Hale. Robert Young's another gambler whom Barbara marries thinking he's reformed until she catches him at roulette. Barbara's retaliation is in a funny twist. (Oct.)

LITTLE MR. JIM—MGM: Jackie Jenkins' freckles and histrionic ability make this movie worthwhile. As the small boy of Army Captain James Craig and Frances Gifford, he gets black eyes, tresses little girls and is generally endearing. (Sept.)

LOVER COME BACK—Universal: Light and trombey Romantic stuff with Lucille Ball as the stylish wife who longs for her soldier husband's return after two years. George Brent plays the husband who returns to have his reunion with his wife marred by his meeting up with some of his blonde overseas friends. Vera Zorina's the other woman. (Sept.)

MONSIEUR BEAUCOEUR—Paramount: A Bob Hope comedy special, in which he plays a harbinger from the court of Louis XV of France who's forced to impersonate the gay court playboy, Patrice Knowles. If you like Hope, you'll love it. Joan Caulfield is a pretty French waitress and Marjorie Reynolds the Spanish Infanta. (Oct.)

MR. ACE—UA: A second-rate movie in which politician Sylvia Sidney, running for governor, seems to worry more about her hats and her love affairs than about her campaign. As the political boss, George Raft has a chance to employ all his usual gangsterish tricks, which after all these years seem a little tiresome. (Oct.)

MY PAL TRIGGER—Republic: This is a very good picture. Rogers Western, with Roy and his henchmen, Trigger, fighting their way back after Roy's unjustly accused of killing a famous horse. With George 'Gabby' Hayes and Bob Nolan. (Sept.)

NIGHT IN PARADISE—Wanger Universal: This ridiculous story has Turkhan Bey unhesitatingly playing a Jew in the play, the tale, who falls in love with Flamenco. The princess is about to marry Crescens when Turkhan reveals that he's really a handsome young man. (Oct.)

NIGHT TRAIN TO MEMPHIS—Republic: Get aboard this if you're a root of Roy Acuff and his Smoky Mountain Boys, otherwise ignore it. Roy plays the good honest soul with the heart of gold, and Allan Lane is his bad brother. (Oct.)

NO LEAVE, NO LOVE—M-G-M: This film runs for ninety minutes, all of 'em bad. Van Johnson plays a marine who defend his girl who has wed another. His pal Keenan Wynn, star of Pat Kirkwood and trooper Edward Arnold are wasted in a script which stops at nothing. (Nov.)

Don't let time darken your hair!

Why envy the girls in your crowd who have been able to keep their youthful golden color when it's so easy now to lighten and brighten time-darkened hair with the new Marchand's Golden Hair Wash. Then those admiring glances, attracted by gloriously golden hair, can be yours too.

Whether you are a blonde, brunette, or redhead, Marchand's Golden Hair Wash enables you to obtain the exact degree of lightness you desire. Perfected by experts in hair care, the proved Golden Hair Wash is not a dye and is complete in itself for use at home. Remember, no matter what shade your hair is now—even if it is dull or streaked—you can make it as gloriously blonde as you like.

P.S. The new Marchand's Golden Hair Wash is ideal, too, for lightening unsightly arm and leg hair.
